THE PREFACE.

WHAT prompted me, after so many Years Silence, to expose this Piece to the World, was not so much the Old Topick, Importunity of some, as the Impertinencies of others; there being more than Four hundred Queries now by me, to which I was pressed for Answers, and wherein I found a necessity, if I declined this Work, to appear from other Hands in Print. This then was the first and chief Cause; resting all that while content, that many Foreigners had their Memoirs translated, whereby I thought my self excused this Task; most of whom, I had either seen or heard of beyond Sea, but never had read any of their Works, nor knew of their Intentions to declare themselves to the World: Finding therefore on my Return, that they had been before-hand with me, I did believe it almost impossible, so many writing on the same Subject, should not in many, and the most material Points especially, if they followed Truth, relate the same things; which made me still desist, supposing it a lost Labour.

But at last, considering those Travellers before me had few of them been in those Parts where I had been, or at least not dwelt so long there, I venture to offer some Novelties, either passed over by them, or else not so thoroughly observed.

And indeed, this being the first of this kind I know of, wrote by our own Countrymen, since the Ingenious Sir Thomas Herbert, I hope it may find the more favourable Acceptance; since it bears no other Design than the Good of my Country, setting before them the True State of their Trade in East-India and Persia.

The

The PREFACE.

The reclaiming of Atheists, by leading them first to behold the Beauty, Order, and admirable Disposition of the Universe, and then to see if they can so far abuse their Reason, to deny the Author; which if they should, the Indians, how barbarous soever esteemed by them, are to be preferred before them for Men of Sense; who out of the very Principles of Nature, keep to that Law written on their Minds, That there is a God to be ador'd; and rather than be without, will frame to themselves one of their own creating; which Depravity of theirs while Atheists deride, they admonish them of as great an Error in owning none.

And lastly, To inform those busy Translators, That the Industry of our own Nation is not fallen beneath that of France, whose Language and Manners we so servilely affect, as to think nothing Excellent or Alamode, which has not a French Dress; but that it still is in the Power of the English to retrieve their former Renown both by Pen and Sword: Tam Marti quam Mercurio. Nor will any Englishman accuse me of Self-Confidence or Arrogance, when it is a Justice only intended my Country against its Decriers; nor in the least to undervalue the Authors or the Books translated, but to whet our Endeavours to equalize, if not outdo them.

As to the Method I have taken, it is unconfin'd (it being the Privilege of a Traveller) not bounded with the narrow Terms of an Historian, nor loosely extravagant, like Poetical Fictions, but suited both to Time and Place, and agreeable to the Nature of the Relation: And herein I have followed Busbequius; which though it may make some Unevenness in the Stile, as where the Ruggedness of the Ways interpose, or the Subject-matter is varied, it must happen, yet the Warp quite through is most of the same Thread; which being the Clue to so many and intricate Meanders, trodden by a few, I am the more pardonable when I slip: Though I do declare my desire is, To shew my Diligence in collecting, and Sincerity in compiling what may make the Road more easy to the next Adventurers, and satisfy the present Enquirers.

NEW ACCOUNT

OF

India and Persia:

In Eight LETTERS.

LETTER I.

Containing a Twelve Month's Voyage through Divers Climates.

CHAP. I.

Treats of Embarking and Passage 'till past St. Iago.

SIR,

FOR your singular Favour, in seeing me Aboard ship (which might reasonably be supposed the last kind Office to a departing Friend, considering the various Chances of so long a Voyage, as well as the Uncertainty of my Return) I must keep to that Promise, whereby you obliged me to give you an account not only of my Being, but of what Occurrences were worth my Animadversion. The Proem.

You may remember, It was the 9th of December, in the Year of our Lord 1672. when by virtue of an Order from the Honourable East-India Company, I being received on Board the Unity, we took of each other a long Farewel; the Ship then breaking Ground from Graves-End, to fall down to the Buoy in the Nore. Taking Ship at Gravesend, and falling down to the Buoy in the Nore.

The London, our Admiral, lay expecting our whole East-India Fleet there, which were Ten in Number; to whom his Majesty, Charles II. was pleased to grant Letters of Mart: Which impowered them to wear the King's Jack, Ancient and Pennant, and to act as Men of War (the English and French at this time being at open Defiance against the Dutch.) Number of Ships, with Letters of Mart. War with the Hollanders.

Letter I.

The reaſon of going over the Flats.

When they were altogether, their Commands were to go over the Flats; which, notwithſtanding the Hazard to Ships of their Burthen, was thought ſecurer now than to venture about the King's Channel, where they might be expoſed to the Attempts of the Hollanders: By which means, together with the unſteadineſs of the Weather, it was the day after Chriſtmas before we arrived at the Downs; where rode a rich and numerous Fleet of Merchants, with their reſpective Convoys, deſigned for their ſeveral Places of Traffick, when the Wind ſhould preſent.

Stay at the Downs.

Here, as we ended the Old Year, ſo we began the New with a deſire of proſecuting our intended Voyage: But a South-Weſt Wind prevented our Courſe, and held us there Three Weeks; when an Eaſt Wind made a general delivery and a clear Downs.

Being at Sea, we made eaſy Sail, that our Ships might have the liberty that Night to ſingle themſelves from the Crowd of the other Ships; notwithſtanding which Proviſo, we had a ſhrewd Suſpicion; for Night haſtening on (and in ſuch a ſwarm of Veſſels of greater bulk, not ſo readily manageable as ſmaller) we beheld three Lights out of the Poop of a goodly Ship, the ſame unfortunate ſigns our Directions bound us to take notice of; which made us conclude the Damage on our ſide, as indeed it proved by the next Morning-ſong; for having caſt our Eyes abroad to look what Ships we had in company, running over a great many (that had ſhrowded themſelves under our Protection and of Six Men of War more, Captain Munday Commander in chief (whereof Two were Fireſhips) ſent for to meet the Eaſt India Fleet at Sancta Helena, for their better Defence homeward-bound, and to prevent their falling into the Enemies Hands, who had lately poſſeſſed themſelves of that Iſland) we at length miſſed the Maſſenberg, on whom (it ſeems) a ſmall Pink falling foul, had carried away her Head and Boltſprit, and 'tis to be feared has diſabled her this Voyage; we ſaw her afterwards make for Portſmouth.

The Maſſenberg diſabled.

Leaving the Lizzard, we met with Ships from Cales.

Off the Land's End we met with Four Engliſh Merchant Ships, Two French Men of War their Convoys, laden from Cales, bound for London.

In Four Days, from the Downs, we were loſing England on our Backs, reckoning the Lizzard the moſt extreme part South to bear North and By Eaſt 14 Leagues; from whence hereafter we were to fetch our Meridian Diſtance: It lies in the Latitude of 50 deg. 10 min. North.

We croſs the Bay of Biſcay to the Main Atlantick.

Thus relinquiſhing the Britiſh Seas, we make our ſelves Poſſeſſors of the Weſtern Ocean for a while: 'Till following our Compaſs more South, we contend with the troublous Wind and tempeſtuous Waves for ſome part of the Bay of Biſcay, whoſe Mountain Seas we are to cut through to the Main Atlantick.

Why this Sea is always troubled.

What makes theſe Seas in ſuch a conſtant Turmoil is imputed to the falling in of the whole Force of the Weſtern Ocean into this Sinus without any Impediment, 'till it recoil againſt its Shores; ſo that in the calmeſt Seaſon here are always high ſwelling Billows.

The St. Helens Fleet ſtand for the Madera.

About the Latitude of 41 the Men of War, that came out with us, determining to make the Madera Iſland, went away more Eaſterly, and the next day were out of ſight.

Two

Chap. I.

Two days after we eſpied one Sail to the Leeward under a main Courſe, ſteering very doubtfully; after ſhe had had her full view of us, ſhe made from us too nimble for us to follow; we ſuppoſed her to be either an Algerine Pirate, or a Dutch Privateer. We ſtill directed our Courſe South, and in Twenty four Hours ran One hundred and ſeventeen Miles by our Log-board for ſome days together, the Weather not allowing us to obſerve with the Quadrant; but as ſoon as we could take the Sun's Altitude, we found our ſelves to be in the Latitude of 36 deg. 2 min. North, Longitude 7 deg. 26 min. Weſt, an hundred Miles in four Days more than we judged our ſelves to be; which ſufficiently proves the little credit to be given to the former way of reckoning.

Little credit to be given to the Log board in reſpect of the Ships way.

The following day maintaining the ſame Courſe, we paſt by the Mouth of the Streights of Gibraltar, one of Hercules's Pillars, the fartheſt Point South of all Europe.

Hercules's Pillar.

Here we began to drop the reſt of our Company, ſome ſtriking Eaſt for the Streights, others Weſt for the Canaries, Virginia, &c.

We loſt our Companions by degrees.

At Noon our Admiral fired a Gun, and hoiſted his Ancient, whereby we underſtood he ſaw Land, which we thought to be Porto Porto, bearing off us Eaſt. An hour more being hardly run, we in like manner made the Madera Iſland, the largeſt of the whole Atlantick, being South Eaſt ſome twelve Leagues, too great a diſtance to take a perfect Landſchap, it being only diſcernible to be Land, and confirmed to be ſo by this days Obſervation, which was 33 deg. 17 min. to the Northward of the Equator, in Latitude and Longitude from the Lizzard as before, we having neither raiſed nor depreſſed it. Where the Trade-winds begin to offer themſelves, the Mariner relaxes his anxious care of Sailing, and is at more leiſure to Repoſe; he not being ſo often called upon to ſhift his Courſe, or hand his Sails; which has yet this inconvenience, giving him leave now to fall into thoſe Diſtempers Idleneſs contracts, viz. the Scurvy, and other ill Habits; unleſs rouzed by an Active Commander, either to Sports, or more uſeful Employments: Although the perfect knowledge of theſe Trade-winds (which are more conſtant within the Tropicks) are of ſuch importance as to make our Modern Navigators perform that in ſix Months, which took up the Pains and Travels of as many Years from the firſt Diſcoverers, they keeping all along the Shore, whereupon they became not only liable to unaccountable Changes, as they met with Land briezes, Head-lands, or Contrary Winds; but were many times diſappointed either to go on, or return, by the ſeveral Accidents they encountered thereupon; which theſe more experienced and bold Adventurers by ſtanding off to Sea, and ſtudy of their Compaſs by a more accurate Computation of their Way by the Quadrant and Azimuth, and a ſtrict enquiry of the commencing and terminating of theſe Winds, avoid.

The Iſland of Madera, the largeſt in the Atlantick Ocean.

The advantage of underſtanding the Trade-winds and the Azimuth.

In this ſhort ſpace we have almoſt out-ran the Northern Winter's Blaſts, and begin to be ſenſible of a more vigorous Clime, whoſe temperate Warmth adds Spirits to our frozen Limbs: Yet in this forward Spring (for ſuch it ſeemed to us) we cannot eſcape ſome Laſhes of that cold Nemeſis; for Night being come, ſhe ſends a Storm of Rain and Hail with an high and bleak Wind, in which appeared the Sailors Deities, Caſtor and Pollux, or the ſame it may be gave light to thoſe Fables, they boding fair Weather to Seamen, though never ſeen but in Storms, looking like a Candle in a dark Lanthorn, of which there were divers here and there above the Sails and Shrowds, being the ignes fatui of the Watery Element; by the Portugals chriſtned Querpo Santos, the Bodies of Saints, which by them are eſteemed Ominous. But I think I am not too poſitive in relating them to be a Meteor-like ſubſtance exhaled in the Day, and at Night (for except then, they ſhew not themſelves) kindled by the violent Motion of the Air, fixing themſelves to thoſe parts of the Ship that are moſt attractive: For I can witneſs they uſually ſpent themſelves at the Spindles of the Top-maſt-heads, or about the Iron-hoops of the Yard-arms, and if any went towards them, they ſhifted always to ſome Part of the like Nature.

Letter I.

The Meteor Caſtor and Pollux.

The St. Helen's Fleet overtake us.

The ſucceeding Morning had not long withdrawn this black Vail, and brought us tidings of a more ſerene Day, when we beheld our Frigots that had left us, busking after us with all the winged ſpeed they could, and about Noon they gained us, keeping on the ſame Courſe as we, but miſſed of their deſign of touching at the Madera's.

We croſs the Tropick of Cancer.

Being bleſſed with a proſperous Gale, in fifteen Days from England we were to the Southward of the Tropical Circle of Cancer, which lies in 23 deg. and ½ North, and paſſeth through Barbary, India, China, and Nova Hiſpania; we making at Twelve at Noon, Latitude 22 deg. 16 min. North, Longitude 8 deg. Weſt, when we muſt be 1 deg. 14 min. South of the Tropick.

A Guinea Ship took leave of us laſt.

A Guinea Merchant-man bound for the River Gamboa kept us Company hither, but his Voyage requiring a more Eaſterly Courſe, was the laſt Merchant Ship took leave of us.

We draw near the Sun.

We holding on ſtill South, the frequent Noiſe of Thunder, the ſultry Rains, quiet Seas in reſpect of what we had before, were aſſured tokens of our drawing nigher to that Fountain of Heat, the Sun.

Flying Fiſhes and their Purſuers.

By reaſon whereof it was familiar to behold, the ſportful Fiſhes greedy of their Prey raiſe whole Flocks of that Scaly Nation. For thoſe whom Nature has placed in the vaſt Deep, defenceleſs of themſelves, and innocent to others of a more powerful Greatneſs, ſo as many times they become their Prey, ſhe has not altogether left them unprovided; either out of her abhorrency of Idleneſs, reſolving every thing ſhould labour for its Belly, or elſe out of a peculiar reſpect towards every individual Species for their Preſervation as well as Production; furniſhing theſe with Fins of larger ſize and double uſe for ſwifter conveying them under Water, as alſo for ſoaring into the Air when they are too cloſely purſued. Of theſe ſort we ſaw good ſtore flying from Bonetos and Albecores, who were hunting them. Some of theſe flying Fiſh (for no other Name they have as I can learn) were ſo put to it, that after often dipping their fiſhy Wings in the briny Water (without which genuine Artifice they could not uſe them) choſe rather to make our Ship their Sanctuary, than to yield themſelves to the Jaws of their devouring Adverſaries: By which means you have their more exact Deſcription, they being as large as a River Perch bedeckt with Silver-ſpangled Scales, and long Fins as before.

Not

Chap. I.

Not many days after, two of the lesser Off-spring of the great Leviathan, (the Weather being calm, these sort of them else not visible, being of no swift motion) came sailing after us; our Men as eager of them as they of their Prey, hastned their Engines for to take them; which no sooner in the Water, but each of them guided by some half a dozen delicately coloured little Fishes, which for their own safeguard perform the Office of Pilots, (they never offering to satisfy their Hunger on them) who lead them to the Baits; when they turning their Bellies up, seize upon them on their Backs, hook themselves in the Toils, beating the Sea into a Breach, and not without a great many Hands are drawn over the sides of the Ship; which seen by the poor silly little Fishes (as conscious of their Error) they swim to and again, and hardly forsake the Ship; but being within Board, the Ship's Company armed with Hatchets presently divide the Spoil. They are not scaly, and therefore imagined to be a kind of Whale, being finned like them, with a great Fin on their Backs near their Tails, (which dried is used instead of a Slate) of a darkish grey Colour on their Backs, lighter on their Sides, and white under their Bellies; their Snout on the same Plain with their Mouths, but their Mouth within that a great way; the cause why they turn their Bellies when they take their Prey. The Mouth of one of them extended, is two Spans wide, armed within with three Tire of sharp pointed Teeth on both Jaws, so piercing that Needles exceed them not, and of such strength that a Leg or an Arm, Bone and all, is but an easy Morsel; wherefore called Sharks by the Seamen, on whom they are bold enough to fasten, and dismember if not shunned when they wash themselves: They are of a rank smell, and not good to eat but by stout Stomachs; of Length they are ten, sometimes fourteen Feet.

Sharks and Pilot-Fishes.

By this time we had got into 17 deg. 19 min. North Latitude, Longitude 9 deg. 10 min. West, when our Men of War thinking to birth themselves before us at St. Iago, (where our Ships were permitted to refresh, being otherwise tied up by Charter-party not to put in any where unless for absolute necessity) made all the Sail on head they could.

The Men of War out-sail us.

Our Commanders were well enough content with their proffer, knowing the danger of a many Ships going in there together: The day ensuing plying to the West, we discovered Beunoviſta bearing full West ten Leagues, but at Noon were within two Leagues of it.

The Island Beunaviſta.

It is one of the Islands of the Gorgades or Cape Verde, because situate over against that Promontory on the Land of Negros.

One of the Cape Verde Islands.

They are said to be Nine in Number. Beunoviſta, quasi good sight, it deserving that Appellation from four Hills, which raising themselves to an Eminency above their Fellows, yield a fair Prospect at a distance; but approaching nigher it is not unlike the crawling of a Snake, it's various Hills and Vallies fluctuating as it were, seem to borrow that riggling Shape, the two remotest Mountains figuring her Crown and Head.

They are Nine in all.

The Iſle of Maijo.

The ſucceeding day, South-Eaſt of us, we ſaw the Iſle of Maijo, another of the Gorgades, plentiful in nothing more than Salt, whither our Traders in that Commodity often ſend Ships to fetch it, which is brought down to them in Barrows blowed by the Wind, they having Sails fitted for that purpoſe.

Arriving at St. Iago, we miſt the Men of War.

In two and twenty days from the Lizzard, early in the Morning we were cloſe under St. Iago, another Iſland of the ſame Knot; whoſe interwoven barren Mountains are as impoſſibly expreſt as Stonehing numbred. Towards the South-Weſt they are very high and burnt; but ſteering to loof about the Bay, we found it empty, and the Men of War miſſing; for all that we came to an Anchor about ten a Clock in the Forenoon in the Bay of St. Iago.

Found three great Anchors ſlipped in the Bay.

The Ground was covered with Corral of all ſorts, under which it was Sandy of a duskiſh Colour. Having diſcovered three Buoys, our Commander ſent his Boat to ſeize on one, which proved to be the Mark to a ſpecial good Anchor of 2400 weight, with a Cable ſeven Inches Diameter; the reſt of the Fleet ſhared the other two. The Bay the Ships rode in was ſmooth Water, the Wind coming from the Shore; in Figure a Semicircle, in which it might contain four Miles, the weathermoſt Point bearing South-Weſt, and half a Point Weſt, the other Point to which was an Iſlet, Eaſt and by South, and South.

Chap. I.

Of the Iſland of St. Iago, one of the Cape Verde Iſlands.

IN the Afternoon I went aſhore, which was near two Miles from the Ship, where was a convenient watering place, which emptied its freſh Current into the Salt Sea; the Beach was ſandy, and eaſy going aſhore. Here met us whole Troops of the Natives with their ſeveral Wares, ſome offering us Cocoes, others Oranges and Limes; ſome brought Jackanaps's, ſuch green Ones as are commonly ſeen in England to be ſold; and all at the price of a cleanly Rag, or a Bunch of Ribbons.

The Natives accoſt us with their Wares.

Before us in a Valley was a moſt ſtately Grove of Cocoes and Oranges (through which ran the Stream our Men filled their Casks with Water) ſurrounded with a Wall.

A ſtately Grove.

The firſt of which Trees, ſo much celebrated for its uſefulneſs, deſerves as much for the pleaſure it affords the Sight. It grows with an upright, tall, and ſlender Body, the Bark of an Aſh colour, loricated; not ſending any Branches forth till it come to its chiefeſt Summit, where it ſpreads its ſhady Branches with ſome reſemblance to our Oſmond Royal Fern, but more like the Palm; and under theſe protects its weighty Fruit; which hang very thick round about the Tree, to which it yields but one Stalk, but that fit to ſupport its ponderouſneſs; every Moon produces a freſh Harveſt both of Fruit and Boughs; the firſt being gathered, the others being thruſt off when ſapleſs by the young ones: If the Juicy ones be wounded, there diſtills an heady Liquor, which they preſerve in Earthen Pots fitted to receive it, but that ſpoils their bearing Nuts. Next to the Stalk it beſtows a Calix, not differing (only in bigneſs, and that it is ſmoother) from that of our Acorn; from which proceeds the Rind of a lighter Green, under which a fibrous ſubſtance preſents its ſelf, which might ſupply them with Utenſils, for Roaps and Sails; beneath which appears a ſpacious brown Shell, proper for many Neceſſaries, big enough for a Drinking Cup, a Ladle, and many more; ſerving them for the chief part of their Houſholdſtuff: Encloſed in this is a delicious Meat, white in Colour, cloathed with a pithy matter, as our Haſle-nuts, and not inferiour to them in Taſte; this they chuſe for their ordinary Nouriſhment. Nor does it afford them a leſs grateful emulſion, contained in the Nut to the quantity of a Pint, or Pint and half; in colour like Whey, and of that conſiſtency, but in reliſh far excelling.

Of the Cocoe Tree, its beauty and uſefulneſs.

When the Meat of the Nut grows rancid, they expreſs an Oyl ſerviceable for their Lamps.

Thus abundantly has Providence furniſhed them from this one Root. The figure of the Fruit, take it intire, is oval, and as big as the largeſt Melons.

On the other Fruits it's needleſs to inſiſt, as Oranges, and the like, being planted nearer home, and therefore not ſuch ſtrangers.

Other Fruits leſs common.

Having obſerved enough here, we entred a Door which gave us admittance to a Court in the ſame Valley, whoſe party Wall made of Mud and Stone, ſeparated it from the Grove.

Here

Letter I.

Their Militia well appointed.

Here lay at the Foot of the aſcending Mountain, in a careleſs poſture, one Company of their Militia, raiſed on this occaſion, having reſted their Arms, as Muskets, and Pikes, with their Colours of White Silk, with a Green Croſs athwart, and the Arms of Portugal in the midſt of it, againſt the Wall, but Breaſt high; which could not have held up the Pikes, had not ſome adjoining Trees contributed to their aid.

They ſaluted us with the civility of the Hat, and Congeed to the ground; thoſe of them that walked about, had Javelins in their hands, and long Swords tied to their Backs.

Their Aſſes as ſure footed as Goats.

Labouring to reach the top of the Mountain, which was very ſteep, ſome we met on foot, others mounted on Aſſes, with Jackanaps's behind them, paſſed us with no ſmall Grandure and Ceremony of the Cap; and which was wonderful, to ſee them ride theſe Creatures over Precipices, only Goats and they could clamber on.

At laſt gaining the higheſt part, another Wall accoſted us, over which a Gate, and upon that a Croſs. On the left hand, as ſoon as we were in, was either a Priſon, or a Guard-houſe. Not many Paces from it, on the ſame ſide, a Row of Houſes, one Story high, thatcht with the Branches of the Cocoe, and Windows with wooden Shutters, but no Caſements, built with Mud and Stone, as all their Buildings were which I ſaw; the inſides viſible enough, for the biggeſt of them had not four yards Front, and half that, for the greater ſtate, was taken up by the Door: Their Furniture is anſwerable to the ſplendour of their Habitations; but becauſe we will not refuſe the Courteſy of their Entertainment, ſee in what a manner they preſent us with their Viands.

Their manner of living and Entertainment.

They invite us with an Hubble-bubble (ſo called from the noiſe it makes) a long Reed as brown as a Nut with uſe, inſerted the Body of a Cocoe-ſhell filled with Water, and a naſty Bole juſt preſſing the Water, they ram Tobacco into it uncut, out of which we may ſuck as long as we pleaſe, but for any thing elſe they tell us as the Poet did,

Vina mihi non ſunt Gazetica, Chia, Falerna,
Quæque Sereptano palmite miſſa bibas.

Their common Drink being only Water; and their Food as plain, being only the Fruits of the Earth.

A Rural Chappel near the Corps de Guard.

But to keep on our way, which here we found eaſy and plain; on the Right ſtood another Croſs, propped with a four-ſquare Pillar raiſed on ſteps, and half a Stone's caſt from it, a Chappel, not proud enough to brag of any great elegancy for its Architecture (being but the Rural Seat of one of their Black Padres.) Not much beyond it the Corps de Guard, from whence they ſupplied their Sentinels, which were placed in a Military Order here and there: Nearer the Water-ſide, on the brow of the Precipice which overloo'k the Haven, in a well-appointed place, were planted half a dozen ſmall Pieces of Ordnance, which ſpake Thanks for our reſpect paid when we came to an Anchor; not far from hence another Guard and Houſe regarding the Main, which gave notice to the reſt of what Veſſels they ſaw at Sea.

And

Chap. I.

And now we began to think of returning, when we met with some had happen'd to see the glory of the Day; who told us, our Admiral had sent to the Deputy-Governour, residing here, to be certified about the Anchors; who first claimed those Anchors of our Emissaries with the Majesty essential to that Nation he represented (being a White Portugal) for his Master, being slipped in Port; and then informed them, that they were left there the Afternoon before we came in, by Three great Holland Men of War, who were separated by foulness of Weather, from the Squadron of Admiral Eversdon, who was sent to vex the English Plantations at Virginia: Who at the sight of our Men of War, had put to Sea in great confusion, leaving some of their Crews behind them, who went off in their Shallops, but could not reach their Ships; keeping therefore the Shore on board, they put in at St. Iago Town, where they now remain: From whence this Morn by fresh Advice he was assured only six Ships were seen to ply to windward; which must be our Fleet striving to regain the Island, which is difficult by reason of the Trade-winds, it being beside their Commission to pursue them. Thus being alarm'd to our Ships, that Night we weighed.

News of the St. Helen Fleet surprizing the Dutch in this Bay.

The Cause of our sudden departure.

In the dusk of the Evening came into this Bay a Sattee of Portugal, laden from Madera with Wine, some of which we purchased, but restored not the Anchors.

The Country without is rocky and mountainous, the Island but small; what Towns it has of note, our small stay would not permit the Enquiry: It is said to be pleasant within the Country; well watered, and furnished with all things necessary for the life of Man; discovered for the King of Portugal, Anno 1440. Well peopled by the Portugals, and a Colony of their Plantation from Ginea. In respect of the Heavenly Bodies, it lies in North Latitude, 15 deg. 25 min. Longitude from the Lizzard 12 deg. 10 min. West, the length of Days altering very little.

The Nature of the Island.

The People are of a comely Black, their Hair frizled, Tall of stature, cunning and Thievish; they staring one in the Face, and in the mean time cut a Knot from the Shoulder, or steal an Handkerchief out of the Pocket.

Their Speech is broken Portugal, as also is their Habit, imitating therein the Portugals; though few of them so well clad as to hide their Nakedness so, but that either Leggs, Shoulders and Back may be seen, and in some all. If they get an old Hat with a Bunch of Ribbons, two White Sleeves, a Waistband, or a Coat slasht to hang back to shew their Sleeves, or an old Pair of Long Breeches to their Buttocks; an unsizeable Sword to their Backs, a Javelin in their Hands, without either Hose or Shooes (as if cut out for Sir John Falstaff's Humour) they shall have them strut, and look as big as the greatest Don in Portugal.

And Inhabitants.

The Women are not so handsome as the Men, Blubber-lipp'd, more corpulent, and shorter; notorious also for their Levity. Their Head-geer a Clout rowled up like our Water-bearers; their Backs, and Breasts (which were large, and hanging down) bare, as also to their Wasts, from whence a thin Cloath, in fashion of a Petticoat, down to their Feet, which are bare likewise. Some of the best of them adorn'd with Bracelets about their Arms and Necks, false

Letter I.

Jewels in their Ears, with a kind of Vail from their Head to their Knees, with a Close-bodied Coat with Hanging-sleeves.

By Religion they are Christians of the Romish Church.

Their Governour is from Portugal.

De'l Fogo.

Nothing more observable in this little time, but that at Night on Shipboard, we had the sight of De'l Fogo's Flames; it being an Island of Fire, the Smoak of which is also apparent at Noon-day; which is of the same Batch with the rest, we seeing only these Four Islands of the Nine belonging to the Gorgades.

CHAP. II.

Contains our Passage from St. Iago to Johanna, and Relation of that Island.

THUS forsaking these African Islands, and being forsaken of all but our own Fleet, with a brisk Gale we gave our Ships head to the Eastward of the South; whereby we came nearer to the Coast of Africa; the Northern Monsoons (if I may so say, being the Name imposed by the first Observers, i. e. Motiones) lasting hither; they (springing from the pressure of the Winter's Snow, Clouds or Vapours lodged on the Artic Mountains, and now beginning to be dissolved) leave us to struggle with those moving with the Sun, between the Tropicks East and West, as those without do North and South, mostly or collaterally to those Cardinal Points. And therefore we are forced to steer more Easterly, either to fetch a Wind to cross the Æquator, or gain a Side-wind from the constant ones to carry us to Brasil. For which cause those Ships bound for St. Helen's from Europe, must come into the Latitude of 28 deg. South, and sometimes to the Cape of good Hope, before they can bend their Course thither, though in a direct Line it would cut off three quarters of the way.

A proof of the necessity of knowing the Trade-winds.

When we were in four degrees of the Line, and Longitude from St. Iago 7 deg. 22 min. East, (renewing thence our Meridian) we became subject to the most parching Heat of the Torrid Zone; whose Effects were so much the more outragious, by as much as the Winds shrank upon us from off the Coast of Ginea (which we drew nigh to) and had left us at a stand, the usual Treatment hereabouts, imputed to the scarcity of Mountains on that vast Tract of ground: Insomuch, that we lay wholly at the mercy of the two unruly Elements, Fire and Water; the one assailing us with flashy Lightnings, and horrid Noises, breaking forth the Airy Region; the other pouring on us whole Streams of unwholsome and dangerous Flouds, when they fall in Spouts, (which are frequent here:) Nay the kindest and the softest downfal on our Bodies is productive of Vermin, such as Flies, and Maggots, if our Cloaths be not quickly dried and shifted; (these Seasons the Seamen term the Tornados.)

Near the Coast of Ginea met the Tornados.

But above all, when these had played their parts, the scorching Sun making towards us with his fiery Face made us almost breathless:

Chap. II.

leſs: In this remedileſs Condition we lay, till Heaven pitying our languiſhing under this burning Fever, diſpatched to our Relief an Eaſt South Eaſt Wind, which leading us Weſt and by South, brought us to the South of the Equinoctial Line, depreſſing our Longitude to 5 deg. 55 min. Eaſt. And now we were to the Northward of the Sun four degrees, with whom circling a little Eaſt, in nine days time we were in a Perpendicular, whereby our Quadrants became of ſmall uſe; we not being able to make an Obſervation for their want of Shade, but by an Aſtrolabe at Night: The Sun paſſing over our Heads, and we being to the Southward of the Line, the firſt fair Wind made us out-ſail the Northern Polar Star, it not being to be ſeen in this Horizon.

Croſſed the Line.

Out-ſailed the North Star.

Steering now by the Croſiers, a South Conſtellation, taking its Name from the Similitude of that Paſtoral Staff; as alſo ſupplied by the Magellanian Clouds, in number Two, (averred to be ſuch by thoſe that uſe this way continually) fixed as the North Star; but to me they ſeem no other than a Galaxia, cauſed by the Reflection of the Stars.

Raiſed the Croſiers and Magellanian Clouds.

Being to the Southward of the Sun's Declination, it is obvious to note, a North Sun makes the ſame time of Day a South Sun does on the contrary ſide.

A North Sun makes Noon as a South Sun did before.

An Epidemical Diſtemper, by the Sea-Chyrurgions termed a Calenture (a malignant Fever with a Frenzy, ſo that if not watched, they leap into the Sea) raging in the Fleet, many were thrown over-board.

The Calenture rages in the Fleet.

Where the Atlantick (waſhing the Shores all along from the Streights of Gibraltar) mixes with the Æthiopick Ocean, there the Meridian Compaſs varies very much, ſo that the Wind being at South-Eaſt and by Eaſt, lays out a South and by Weſt way, but corrected by the Magnetick Azimuth (which gives the Sun's Amplitude) it differs two Points and an half, which with Leeway allow'd, makes a South-Weſt Courſe, which we held on till we were on the Coaſts of Braſil, when we were at diſtance enough to take the Altitude of the Sun, which made 14 deg. 40 m. South Latitude, Longitude 2 deg. 24 min. Eaſt.

Extent of the Atlantick and Uſe of the Azimuth to correct the Common Chart.

Being between Braſil and ſeveral Iſlands, as Trinidado, Iſl. de Picos, Sancta Maria, &c. we met with Winds carried us to the South of the Tropick of Capricorn, which croſſeth Æthiopia Inferior, and the midſt of Peruviana.

The Tropick of Capricorn.

Before we leave this Ecliptick Circle, we muſt obſerve at the Equator, the Sun becomes twice Perpendicular; at each Tropick but once; beyond them never; becauſe hence may naturally be collected all the Seaſons of the whole Year; unleſs ſome accidental Cauſe, as the Interpoſition of Mountains, Headlands, Lakes, or ſuch like intervene.

But in his Solar Progreſs Through the twelve Signs, the Sun always carries Rain along with him, its Heat otherwiſe could not be endured; for which reaſon, the firſt Contriver and Former of all things, has ordained the wet Seaſon a Winter to thoſe inhabit here, and to them as dreadful as our cold Seaſons to us (which we ſhall evidence more experimentally when we come to live among them): On this account is it, that under the Line two Winters and two Summers alternately

The Courſe of the Sun through the Zodiack, the cauſe of the Seaſons of the Year.

Letter I. alternately ſucceed, but not above three quarters of that length as the one at each Tropick, they continuing four Months together; to wit, four Months Winter, as many Summer, and the other four Months moderate or cold Weather; though nearer the Line, the Rule holds not good as to the cool Weather, for that cauſe more frequently viſited with Wet than the Sunſhine.

Certain Sea-fiſhes for Food.

Our Men at length tired with ſalt Proviſions, began to be ſtudious for freſh; Neceſſity having taught them an Invention, by counterfeiting thoſe formerly mentioned Flying-fiſh, with a white Rag ſtuffed to hide the Hook, and Feathers pricked in inſtead of Fins, to catch their Enemies at their own game, and ſo they did; providing for themſelves and us too, Bonetos and Albicores; the latter bigger than the former, in length two Feet, in thickneſs one, of a brave ſhining Colour, with ſpiked Fins; but the other preferred by the Palate, bearing the make of our Jacks; both of them a good Repaſt at Sea, where it is denied to be curious in our choice.

The Dolphin.

The Dolphin is extolled beyond theſe, which they ſtrike with a Fiſgig: They are ſwift and ſtrait when they ſwim, and for Compoſure ſurpaſs all others in neatneſs, as well as for variety of Colours, for which it ſeems to vie with the Rain-bow, or Juno's darling Bird, the Peacock.

The Stone-Baſs

There is another Fiſh they call a Stone-Baſs, which eats better than it looks, it being of a Colour ſandy, but has a Reliſh equal to our Soles.

Gales from the Weſt to reach the Cape.

Hitherto having kept moſtly a South-Weſt Courſe, furthered in it by Gales from the Coaſt of Ginea, we are now to expect Weſterly Winds to carry us to Cabo da boa eſperança; near the Latitude of 30 deg. South we had a promiſing Freſco, but ſomewhat dulled by too frequent Calms, yet here not ſo vexatious as before, we going retrograde with the Sun.

The Current of the Sea againſt the Wind.

It is obſervable here, that the Sea had a contrary Courſe with the Wind, preſumed to proceed from its blowing ſo long in one Quarter; and now not altered ſo long as to be powerful enough to turn the Current of the Waters.

Cape-Birds.

Gaining upon the Eaſt with a ſlow pace, we met with thoſe feathered Harbingers of the Cape, as Pintado Birds, Mangofaleudos, Albetroſſes; the firſt remarkable for their painted Spots of black and white; the laſt in that they have great Bodies, yet not proportionable to their Wings, which mete out twice their length.

Three Months being near conſumed, we were at laſt accompanied with long lookt for Weſtern Blaſts, and now we fly afore the Wind: But by the way take notice a South-Weſt Wind becomes as bleak here, as a North-Eaſt in England. So that all the Seaſons of the Year being undergone in this time, we may begin to calculate our Ephemeris afreſh; and as a fit Platform, Eaſter Holy-days bring with them ſuch Weather as is eſſential to Chriſtide.

But bidding Adieu to theſe Fancies, the Wind that till now ſeemed to dally, proves in good earneſt, and begins a frowning April, driving the trembling Sea on heaps, and on them piling more, till the ſwelling Surges menace the lowering Skies, leaving a Hollow where they borrowed their Gigantine vaſtneſs, as if they were intended intended to exenterate the Treaſures of the Deep. At top of which 'twas dreadful to behold the angry Surface of the foaming Billows, deſcending down beneath no leſs uncomfortable, when the Vans of the next Ships (though groveling with a neighbouring Wave) could not be diſcerned.

Winter Storms and Tempeſts attend us to the Cape.

This toſſing Condition laſted long, and was taken kindly too, as long as we ſpooned before the Sea, and kept from running foul of one the other; but when a Fret of Wind rowled the Waves athwart our Quarters, it made our Ship ſhake, proving the ſoundneſs of her Sides, where had ſhe given way never ſo little, we muſt have ſunk without Bail or Mainprize. Still the Tempeſt encreaſes, and brings with it Guſts of Rain and diſmal darkſome Weather, whereby we were ſeparated from the reſt of our Fleet: For all, we put our Lights abroad as did they, yet in the badneſs of the Night we loſt them, and were left alone to ſhift with the boiſterous Winds.

We and the Cæſar ſeparated from the Fleet for two Days.

At laſt the Morn appears, but with the Symptoms of a blowing Day. She had not wafted many Hours, but on the advantage of a riſing Wave, we ſpied a Sail to Leeward with her Fore-top-maſt by the Board, which at Noon we knew to be the Cæſar crowding under all its Sails.

In this Encounter we ſhipped many a perilous Sea, (not without being well-drenched our ſelves): Such was the force of this Nights Storm, that our Boat, and ſome of our Men, were not without difficulty reſtrained from being carried over-board. In this pickle we reeled out this Day, and out-ſtretching the Cæſar, we made what Sail we durſt, and by the next Light had ſight of our Fleet, who ſhortning Sail, we came up with them, to whom we declared the misfortune of the Cæſar, and that it bore South-Weſt; wherefore they lay by, (the Wind ſlackning) and in half an hour we ſaw the Hull, and preſently after it made up our Company compleat again.

Had Soundings off the Cape of Good Hope.

Near the middle of this Month we could have made that known Cape, the Cape of Good Hope, being in the Latitude of 36 deg. 14 min. South, and Longitude from St. Iago 37 deg. 19 min. Eaſt. But the Dutch having ſome Forts there, it was thought no good Policy; wherefore veering to the South, the Cape bore Eaſt-North-Eaſt, ſome thirty Leagues off us; for heaving our Dipſy-lead we were in ſoundings eighty Fathom depth, which the Pilots note to be in that diſtance.

Spoke with ſome Engliſh Ships homeward bound.

Here we made two Sail to Leeward, and one to Windward, who directed her Courſe with us; but the Wind from the Shore coming Eaſt, they Tacked, and ſhe paſſed without ſpeaking to her: But the Leeward-moſt came up boldly to us and the Ann (we being the neareſt and ready to receive them); but making them Engliſh built by their Galleries, we only ſhewed them our Colours (which they anſwered by St. George's Croſs) and fired a Gun; when they brought to, and we bearing up, our Commander went Aboard one of them, the Johanna, a Ship of 700 Tuns laden from Bantam, who told us, That five more were in Company with them from the Coaſts, but diſperſed by Tempeſts; the other Ship was the Bernardiſton; that which eſcaped us, the Rebecca.

They

Letter I.

They alſo inform'd us, The French had worſted the Flemmings in India, taken and demoliſhed a Fort on the Iſland Ceilon; and that they had beat the Moors out of St. Thomas: That on our ſide never a Ship was loſt, as they heard. So likewiſe giving them an Account of what we knew, with ſome Inſtructions communicated on both ſides, we left them to take their Courſe, which ſerved them for St. Hellens, the Antartick Monſoons favouring them directly thither, and the Squadron under Captain Munday, if they have raiſed the South Latitude of 28. may be there a little before to expect them.

Doubled Cape de Angullis to gain St. Lawrence.

We kept on South-Eaſt, till we had doubled the moſt Southern Promontory of the Cape, Cape de Angullis, (which Courſe would lead us to Bantam) when bending to the North, we held on till we came betwixt St. Lawrence or Madigaſcar, and the Main, reckoned one of the four biggeſt Iſlands in the World, viz. Sumatra, Java, St. Lawrence and Britannia. The moſt traded Empories here, are St. Auguſtine on the Iſland, and Moſambique on the Main; frequented by the Portugals for Elephants Teeth, Gold, Camphire, and Ambergreece. Why we creep in between this Iſland and the Main, Is to borrow from the Land-briezes aſſiſtance againſt the general ſtated Winds ſettled for theſe Months between the Cape and this Iſland.

The Eaſtern Sea.

The Sea here takes the Name of Oceanus Orientalis, beginning from the Cape till it joyn with the Indian, Red, and Arabian Seas.

A Whale.

Here it was we had a notable Fiſh ſtretched its ſelf along our ſides for the ſpace of an hour: Some called it a Grampos; but thoſe that pretended skill, would have it a young Whale: It might be in length forty Feet and upward, bolting out of the Water with a great Surf; the Mouth large, but not reſponſible to ſo large a Body, the Form whereof was a Pyramid inverted, the Baſis of which from Gill to Gill near five Feet in breadth, the Conus terminating with a narrow Snout; where his Mouth opening, he ſuckt in a huge quantity of Water, and with that ſame eddy his Prey, which he retains within his Jaws, but ſpouts the Water out with the ſame ſpurting noiſe our Engines make, and as immenſe an heighth from an hole in his Neck, opening after the faſhion of a Mouth or Slit; at the performance of which Action it contracts its ſelf into an Orbicular Figure, and again dilates its ſelf in its Diaſtole: The Back is of a dark Gray without Scales, ſixteen Feet over, leaping as other Fiſhes, but in a more Majeſtick manner, moving but ſlowly, whereby we had the ſight of his Head and Neck firſt, (all one Rock, and as impenetrable, it being proof againſt the Prongs of the ſharpeſt Harping-Iron); his whisking Tail laſt, near which a ridge of Fins, the true mark of Diſtinction for a Whale: The extreme part of his Tail extended is very broad and finny, which is the Rudder to this great Leviathan, wherewith, and two Fins more proceeding one from each ſide, he guides himſelf through his watery Territories.

We follow the Sun.

May had now began, when making after that glorious Charioteer, the Sun, we were once more ſpirited with milder Weather; the Mariners caſting off their wet Cloaths, cared not for any more than would ſlightly cover them.

We

Chap. II.

We being in ſight of five Small Iſlands off St. Lawrence, for fear of the Tides driving them on ſhore, ſome of our Ships anchored; by which lingring we loſt two of our Companions for two days; but we ſteering ſomething Weſt, and lying by a-nights to prevent falling on St. Chriſtophers and Juan de Novo, both Low Lands, they had time to reach us: Being becalmed, it was the middle of the Month before we loſt ſight of St. Lawrence.

The Hiſtory of Johanna.

THE Morning following we came under the Weſtward part of Johanna, where oppoſed us a lofty Ridge of Mountains, one of which advanceth its aſpiring Head up to the towring Clouds: Over againſt which lies the Iſland called Mohelia, at the ſame diſtance Calice is from Dover; the better Iſland of the Two, though not ſo big, nor quite ſo Mountainous; it being more plentifully, as Arrival at Johanna.

Letter I.

as 'tis ſaid, ſtored with Proviſions; but not furniſhed with ſo ſafe an Harbour for Ships as Johanna: The only difficulty here being the Weathering the Point, in which, notwithſtanding ſeveral Ships have been driven off to Sea, not being able to recover the Iſland again, the Winds deſcending in deſperate Guſts drive them into the Trade-winds, which here commence again. But our Ships were bleſt with better ſucceſs, and came all ſafe to Anchor under a Lee-ſhore, which ſufficiently protected them from the Winds by the highth of the Mountains. A Bleſſing not to be paſſed by without a grateful Commemoration, when half the Fleet were diſabled by Diſtempers acquired by Salt Meats, and a long Voyage without Refreſhments; and muſt have ſuffered too for want of Water, had not they met with a ſeaſonable Recruit.

Care of the Sick.

The firſt care then was to ſend the Sick Men aſhore, which it is incredible to relate how ſtrangely they revived in ſo ſhort a time, by feeding on Oranges and Freſh Limes, and the very ſmell of the Earth; for thoſe that were carried from the Ships in Cradles, and looked upon as deſperate, in a days time could take up their Beds and walk; only minding to fetch them anights, that the Miſty Vapours might not hinder the kind Operation begun on their tainted Maſs of Blood, by theſe Specifick Medicines of Nature's own preparing.

Situation of the Iſland.

We had Leiſure now joined to Security of the Dutch, for that no Ships from India can readily return this way into Europe at this time of the Year; and the Hollanders, after having touched at the Cape, uſually go firſt to Batavia, before they coaſt India; which gave us free leave to dedicate our ſelves to all the Pleaſure this Place could afford; which for its Excellencies may deſerve to be called Happy, as well as any the Ancients beſtowed the Name of Fortunate, Macaria or Fœlix on. It lies in 12 deg. South Latitude, Longitude 62 deg. 4 min. It is one of the Iſlands of Africa, though lying in the Eaſtern Sea; yet becauſe the Coaſts of Africa extend themſelves to the Line on this North ſide of the Cape, we muſt take theſe Adjacent Iſles in the ſame Account: On the South-Eaſt lies Meoty, North-Weſt Mohelia, and North-Eaſt Comero, all Four Colonies of the Moors or Arabians, or at leaſt in ſubjection to them.

The Inland inacceſſible.

But to return to Johanna; the innermoſt part we ſuppoſe to be fruitful, by what the Verge of it declares; for to be ſatisfied in that Point would be hardly worth the while, the Mountains requiring more pains to conquer than would quit coſt, they being altogether inacceſſible, or their Paſſages unknown to us.

The Circuit.

The Relation therefore to be expected, muſt be of that lies loweſt and neareſt the Sea. The Circuit I imagine to be almoſt an 100 Miles, all along which, it is variouſly caſt into Hills, and furrowed into Vales; as if Nature had plowed them on purpoſe for encreaſe. The outwart Coat of which is embroidered with Thamarind Palmetto (from the Tree diſtills a Wine intoxicating, and an Oil medicinable, externally applied to Bruiſes, Strains, &c.) It yields alſo ſome ſtore of Pine Apples, Ananas, growing on Shrubs like Artichokes. But above all, there is a Tree famed for being 14 Fathom compaſs, it reſembles moſt a ſmall Ivy Leaf; the Body ſeems to be many ſmaller incorporated into one huge one, of no other uſe than to be admired, Hederâ formoſior allâ, unleſs in oppoſition to the

Among other Trees, there is one 14 Fathom round.

Heathen

Heathen, who adore it, they throw the Dead Bodies of their Slaves under it, when Juſtice is executed on them, to expoſe them for Terrour to others, many Bones of Humane Bodies lying there at this time. There is alſo a Gourd eſteemed of them more for the large Shell than Meat; it will hold a Pailful, in Figure like a Man's Head, and therefore called a Calabaſh. Chap. II.

Rivers they have not many, but Rivulets good ſtore; and of ſuch Water, that next our Thames, it is the beſt, which is juſtly preferred, (I mean our Thames Water) becauſe it bears a Body beyond others, and therefore kept till the laſt to be ſpent, always reſerving a ſtock thereof to ſerve them home; for though it ſtink like Puddle-water when opened firſt, and have a Scum on it like Oil (which the Coopers affirm they are as cautious to ſtrike with their Adds on the Cask for fear of taking fire, as of Brandy it ſelf) yet let it ſtand unbunged on the Deck twenty four hours, it recovers its goodneſs, and is the only Water they rely on in an Eaſt India Voyage, and therefore they are careful to ſave it till the laſt. Their Rivulets the beſt Water next the Thames Water.

Towns ſome few they are Maſters of, but for Sumptuous Fabricks none will be found here.

Their Chiefeſt Town bears the Name of the Iſland, which is ſeated along the Strand, under an high Hill; on one ſide refreſhed with a gentle gliding Stream; on the other ſide recreated with a fine Plain, prodigal of its Fertility. The Town it ſelf is to look on, an heap of Ruins, nothing remaining but the Marks of former Induſtry (probably the Portugals) here being left Walls of an huge thickneſs, compoſed of Stone, and cemented with Lime: To every Houſe a Portal, but miſerably defaced with Age; the Planks of their Doors ſewed together, their Buildings not exceeding one Story; againſt theſe, Lazineſs has ſuggeſted them to lean their Flaggy Manſions: Flags eſpecially in their Villages (by them called Cajans, being Co-Coe-tree Branches) upheld with ſome few Sticks, ſupplying both Sides and Covering to their Cottages. They commonly order their Model ſo, as to make a Quadrangle with only one Entrance, all the reſt being cloſed outwards without any Windows; in which every Houſe of Note on the Right-hand has a ſhady Contrivance, like the Walks to our Tennis-Courts, but not ſo long; on the upper end of which ſits the Maſter of the Family on a Bed of Rattans, a kind of Cane: Here he, with the Steward of his Houſe, are obſerved by his Slaves (who ſtand aloof) to ſpend the heat of the day. Their Town and Buildings.

Among theſe, but at ſome remoteneſs from any of their Dwellings, are two Moſques, or places for Devotion, built after the manner of our Churches (but for Magnificence much like their other Structures) with Iſles and Naves walled up to the very top; within them only a place left for entrance at the Weſt end. They are decently Matted on the Floor, though not hung ſo much as with a Cobweb on the Walls; which they keep (and in that to be commended) very clean. In the Piatzos (for ſuch their Porches had) ſtands on the Right-hand a ſquare Stone Ciſtern, full of Water; and the whole without any Doors always open. The Nobler of the Two has at the Weſt-end a round Tower, not very high; to this likewiſe belongs a more ſpacious Yard, filled with Tombs reared Man's heighth, covering them with a falling Ledge atop, leaving open a Two Moſques.

Letter I. Port-hole at the North-end, where the Head lies, for a Lamp: To inrich them, they are beſtuck with China Ware of good value.

The King's Court. Having given you the Deſcription thus far, I muſt crave leave for my Error, in not giving it the Style of Regal before now: For it proves to be the Seat of one of their Kings, which I had almoſt forgot, had not my greedy Eye eſpied a Houſe more eminently ſeated, and more decently covered than the reſt, but the Materials not much different; only they have allotted him a little more Air to breath forth his ſwelling Title, King of Johannah Town. Wherefore after a ſmall Enquiry, it was manifeſt it was the Palace Royal; nor did I much doubt it, after we had gained admiſſion; where did ſit the King in ſtate, at the upper end of ſuch a Place as before was taken notice of, on a Cott, or Bed, ſtrewed with a Quilt. On a Bench at each Elbow were placed two of his Nobles by him: We being introduced, inſtead of Kiſſing his Majeſty's Hand, he took us one after another moſt graciouſly by the Fiſt, and by the Mouth of his Interpreter pronounced us heartily welcome, and bad us take our Seats according to our Qualities; which, after we had put our Hats on, we did; and the Interpreter with great Reſpect took his on the Floor crouching in the midſt of us. In this manner, without ſhew of dread or fear of being miſconſtrued, we talked freely of matters relating to both our States; as he firſt examining if we had any Gunpowder or Compaſs-Glaſſes to ſpare him? We ſeconded his Demands with what regarded Proviſions for our Voyage; for which Licenſe our Captains are obliged to make him Preſents of Scarlet-cloth, and other Europe Rarities, that they may unmoleſted buy the Bullocks, Cows, Goats and Hens of his Subjects. Both being at length out of Diſcourſe, or not very well underſtanding one another, he ſpeaking Arabick, we as good Engliſh as we could; we had liberty in this interval to ſurvey the Gorgeouſneſs of his Attire. On his Head he wore a large White Turbat, and had as good a White Shirt on his Back; from his Girdle half way his Legs, a Blue Silk Veſt fringed with Purple, without Shooes or Stockins to his Feet, which he often pulling up into his Cott or Couch, would ſmilingly croſs them, and with his Nails claw off the Dirt. By him lay a Purple Silk Robe, attended with a Black-guard of ſome a Dozen Slaves; compared with whom he looked great, and was a comely well Limb'd Perſon, though a Woolly-pated Coffery.

Their Nobles. His Nobles (becauſe we are not to meet with many of them) pray take them in their beſt Liveries. On their Crowns they wear Caps of Arabian Needle-work intermixed with divers Colours; which notwithſtanding no bigger than Skull-caps, they move not to the beſt Man in the Company; it being their Cuſtom only to Salam, giving a bow with their Hands acroſs their Breaſts: Their Bodies clad in White alſo; about their Loins Cloth of Arabia, Checquered as our Barbers Aprons, but not ſo good (pace tantorum virorum) over all a thin Robe; both King and Princes encourage their Beards to their full growth.

Their Prieſts. Their Prieſts, one of which attended, are habited in faſhion not much different, had not the Colour inclined to Black; and on their Heads a Leather Coif lined with Fur.

When

Chap. II.

When we took our leaves, we Preſented him and his Peers with a few Braſs Rings with Falſe Stones, with which they ſeemed to be well pleaſed.

We Preſent them.

What Towns they have of Note we could not learn; but Towns they have, if not Cities, within the Country. And certain it is, their Chief Governour is an Arabian Lord.

They are Vaſſals to the Arabs.

This Johanna Town is about Three quarters of a Mile in length, and may contain Two hundred Houſes; their Streets being no broader than our Allies.

Villages are very thick, and Cottages diſperſt in every place.

Villages.

Every Valley makes a delightful Grove, one of which exceeding all the reſt, was cooled with two dainty Currents, decked with a continual Spring, charming the Senſes with the real Sweets of any the moſt exquiſitely feigned Paradiſes; to ſee Limes grow on Shrubs, Leafed and Thorned like our Crabs, Oranges, (of which there is a pleaſing ſort, though ſmall, not giving place to our China ones) tempting the Sight from a more exalted, and leſs ſuſpicious Tree. Over which the lofty Cocoes with unparallel'd ſtraitneſs ſtretch forth their Boughs, diſpoſed in Ranks, as if ordered by the Skilfulleſt Planter.

A pleaſant Grove.

Lower than theſe, but with a Leaf far broader, ſtands the Curious Plantan, loading its tender Body with a Fruit, whoſe Cluſters emulate the Grapes of Canaan, which burthened two Mens Shoulders; below which, an odoriferous Plant ſeizes the Smell; and winding through its ſubtile Meanders, revives the Faculties of the Brain: Here the flouriſhing Papaw (in Taſte like our Melons, and as big, but growing on a Tree leafed like our Fig-tree), Citrons, Limons, and many more, contend to indulge the Taſte; the warbling Birds the Ear; and all things, as if that general Curſe were exempted, ſtrive to gratify the Life of Man.

Neither has Nature ſo played the Wanton here, as to be unmindful of the Aſcending Hills, which in other places by chance are productive, but here they abound, and liberally beſtow on the humble Valleys: Notwithſtanding the Clime it is ſituate under, bears the reproach of that uninhabitable Zone; yet that Aſperſion is blown off by thoſe admirably tempered Breizes of the Mountains.

The Hills are fruitful as well as the Vallies.

The Inhabitants are black, though not ſo black as at St. Iago, as well Limb'd, and as well Featur'd; neither ſo tall, nor ſo proud as they, but more honeſt: Whether out of fear of Puniſhment, or natural Integrity, may be left to conjecture: For our Fleet lying as now at an Anchor, ſome years paſſed, they filched ſome ſlight things from the Engliſh; as likewiſe ſome Sailers from them; the Grievances on both ſides known, and the Parties detected. Our Commanders had their Men ſlaſhed publickly on Shore, when they cut the Throats of theirs.

Temper of the Inhabitants.

To proceed; They are like the Country they live in, innocent; for as the one produces nothing hurtful, ſo they have always had the Character of being harmleſs. They are courteous to Strangers, but above all to the Engliſh; punctual in their Words, and as ready to tax for breach of Promiſe: Lazy above meaſure, deſpiſing all Mechanical Arts; and in them Neceſſity compels them to employing their Prieſts; as in building Boats, making Mats. Yet in one thing to be wondred at, for making Old Iron, which they covet mightily, into Knives, or Tools, as ſharp as Raiſors; in other things but rudely imitating, but not deſerving the name of Artiſts.

Letter I.

The while we were there, they had a great Veſſel on the Stocks; Stocks like the Cheeks to our Long Boats; the Keel of it was a whole Tree, no otherwiſe fitted than it grew, only the Branches lopped off. To it, for Stem and Stern, were faſtened two others, ſhorter; on both ſides Planks ſewed to the main Timbers, with the Thread of the Cocoe-nut, each Hole ſtopped with Pitch. Thus had they raiſed it to the capacity of Thirty Tuns: When it will be finiſhed, at the rate they work, will be hard to gueſs.

Their Veſſels for Sea.

They are Owners of ſeveral ſmall Provoes, of the ſame make, and Canooſes, cut out of one intire piece of Wood; poiſed with Booms to keep them from over-ſetting; in theſe they paddle with broad Sticks, not row as we with Oars.

Active at Climbing.

They are very active at Climbing, Running like Jackanapes up their Cocoe-nut Trees, which they do by twiſting a Band to keep cloſe their Feet, as they raiſe their Bodies by their Arms graſped about the Trees.

They are not ſolicitous for much to cover them, only a Clout to hide their ſhame, truſt with a String round about their Waiſts, in which they ſtick their Knives, in a readineſs to cut down their Food from the Trees.

Slaves how known.

Their Slaves have a dejected Countenance, diſtinguiſhed by boreing their Ears: They ſit on Stones, or low Seats, their Arms folded like Monkies.

Skilled in Letters and Aſtrology.

However, they are not ſo abject, but that they have the uſe of Letters, and ſome ſcience in Aſtrology, by what I can teſtify: For walking the Country, and almoſt tired, I ſtept into an Houſe, where I ſaw a Man writing with a Pen made of a Cane, in the bottom of a Bowl beſmeared over with black; conſidering a-while, at length I obſerved he made Arabian Characters, and aimed to draw a Scheme, which when he had done, he poured Water upon, and ſtirring it round with his Finger, wiped it out again, and as he did this, muttered ſeriouſly to himſelf, doing ſo thrice. I watched what he intended, and found that a Woman lay ſick there, and this Charm was her Phyſick.

Ape-Printing.

Beſides this, I have it on report from ſome that ſaw their Schools for Education of their Youth, where they teach them to write, and by Bundles of Characters tied together to Ape Printing. What they make their Impreſſion on, I cannot inform you; but Paper is no deſpicable Commodity among them.

Their Speech.

That Arabick is their Speech, is without contradiction; with what purity I am no competent Judge.

Religion.

The Religion among them is Mahometiſm; their Prieſts not ſo much exerciſed in Learning, as the Labour of their Hands.

Women.

Their Women are fat and ſhort, not ſo big Breaſted as thoſe at St. Iago, better clad than the Men, wearing a courſe Sheet about them from their Breaſts below their Knees; about their Heads they wear an Hairlace, or ſomewhat inſtead of it, not to tie their Hair up, which is ſhort enough; but it may be, as our Dames in England, to keep the Wrinkles out of their Foreheads: In their Ears Mock-

Jewels;

Jewels; about their Necks and Wriſts trifling Bracelets of Beads, Glaſs, or Wire of Braſs; about the ſmall of their Legs Braſs Chains, and on their Fingers Rings of the ſame Metal. Seemingly fearful of a White Man, as are their Children, who are much troubled with the Navel-Rupture (Hernia umbilicalis), either from the Windineſs of their Food, or Ignorance of their Midwives in cutting the Navel-ſtring, when they deſign to make the Boys good meaſure; which ſucceeds in theſe, for their Penis is of the larger ſhape. The Wives are very obſequious to their Husbands, ſeldom ſtirring abroad, doing the Drudgeries of the Houſe. Chap. II.

Their Children troubled with the Navel-Rupture.

They dreſs Fowls very well, but kill them very barbarouſly, pulling firſt their Feathers off to the Wings, then by degrees raiſe the Skin, after which Torture they as ſlowly cut their Throats, till they have finiſhed a ſhort Litany, which is the Prieſt's Office, if at hand; otherwiſe the Good Man of the Houſe ſays Grace; they butchering their Goats in as Jewiſh a manner.

Their way of killing Fowls, &c.

Their uſual Diet is the Fruits of the Earth, not caring much for Fleſh, though they have great ſtore of Pullen, Goats, and Kine; which laſt but ſmall, and not very good Meat, their Fat cleaving to the roof of the mouth; not ſo big as our Welſh Beaſts, yet have this peculiar, a Bunch of Fat betwixt their Shoulders, which eaten taſtes like Marrow.

Their Diet.

Their Paſture, for want of Agriculture, rather Reeds than Graſs; they have Rice in the Low-lands, and a Peaſe called Garavance: On the Sand near the Sea grows ſemper vivum maximum, from whoſe Juice comes Aloes, the beſt from Succotra: Here grows Cow-Itch in abundance, and all ſorts of Saunders, which the Seamen cut for firing to bring aboard. Deſtitute of Aſſes, Mules, and Horſes, but that want compenſated by a richer Commodity, Ambergreece, for which the Arabian is the greateſt Merchant and Sharer.

Their Corn.

Want of Aſſes, Mules, and Horſes.

Fowls for Game they have ſeveral, the beſt of which is the Guinney Hen, Turtle Doves; Crows with white Breaſts, Buzzards, and Bats bodied like and near as big as a Weaſel, with large Wings wove upon ſtrong Griſtles.

Fowls for Game.

They have a ſort of a Jackanape they call a Budgee, the handſomeſt I ever ſaw.

A Budgee.

Honey and Mullaſſes they have good ſtore.

Having thus taken a Survey of them, one would think Ambition baniſhed hence, and that Diſcord ſhould have little countenance from Subjects ſo alike contemptible. Such is the growth of that Seed, that no Ground comes amiſs to it: Here, where neither Care nor Toil is burthenſome, are they vexed with continual War by their oppoſite Neighbour the Mohelian, whom formerly they uſed to engage on Planks at Sea, caſting Stones and Darts; ſince, by a better Inſtinct, they have provided themſelves of ſecurer Veſſels, and as at this time deviſing greater, they adventure with better force, and in ſhrewder Battels, beginning to enquire after Swords and Guns, with the firſt of which the Engliſh do ſupply them: For which, and a former Courteſy of a Veſſel ſent them to land ſome Men on the Enemies Coaſts, proceeds their more than ordinary love for the Engliſh.

Their inveterate Hate to the Mohelians.

How

Letter I.

How theſe behave themſelves in War, or with what Diſcipline, is not in me to tell: Some Marks of their Valour many of them bear about them, as the Badges of their greateſt Honour, who have their Limbs diſtorted, or Fleſh beaten in. What the ground of theſe Feuds are, we cannot learn; unleſs the bad Influence of ſome malignant Planet, or elſe that Make-bate of the world, whoſe greateſt buſineſs is Contention, ſhould inſinuate it into them. The Arabian Lords of each do ſtrive to reconcile them; which if they do for a time, it breaks out again in open War: And probable it is, that theſe Animoſities have rendred them liable to the Subjection they are now in; whoſe very Iſlands elſe, with an united Force of Stones and Arms to bear them, were able to defend them.

We are called aboard to ſet ſail.

Four days being ſpent in this ſweet Wilderneſs, our Admiral by firing a Gun, and looſing his Fore-top-ſail, ſummoned us aboard.

CHAP. III.

Declares our Courſe from Johanna, to our landing at Mechlapatan.

We repaſs the Equinoctial Line.

A Freſh Gale and a fair Wind ſoon ſet us once more to the Norward of the Equinoctial, accompanied with ſoaking Showers, Thunder, and Cloudy Weather, which with the continuance of the Winds did us a kindneſs; for following the heels of the Sun, we were got within Twelve Degrees of him, when we ſailed into the Indian Sea, Eaſt North-Eaſt, the Maldive Iſlands being South-Eaſt, the Red Sea Weſt North-Weſt, and the Arabian North by Weſt, without labouring under that irreſiſtible Heat we did before; by reaſon of which adjunct Heat, the Rains however became intemperate; not but that they mitigated the Heat in actu, tho as to its effects, it proved more virulent, impregnating the Air with a diſeaſed Conſtitution, whereupon we had many hung down their Heads.

The North-Star is raiſed again.

About the third Degree of North-Latitude we loſt ſight of the Magellanian Clouds and the Crociers, and raiſed our Northern Polar Director.

The Maldivæ Iſlands.

Having 8 deg. 53 min. North Latitude, we left the Sun to run his Race to the North; and ſteering Eaſt to raiſe our Longitude, we fell into a Channel between the Maldivæ (a Concatenation of Iſlands from the Equator hither, and here only parted by this Channel, the reſt of them lying ſcatteredly to the 10th deg. of North Latitude) which makes us lye by a-nights, (ſignified by One Light out of the Main-Top of our Admiral (which he always carries at Night), and another out of the middle Lanthorn on the Poop, anſwered by all the reſt with one at the ſame place), for fear of falling foul of them, the Weather continuing wet, dark, and tempeſtuous.

Near Ceilon.

After which we ſhaped our Courſe Eaſt South-Eaſt, when the Admiral fired a Gun, ſpreading St. George's Flag in the Mizen-ſhrowds for a Conſultation, knowing we began to draw near Ceilon, an Iſland in the East-India, divided from Cape Cory by Ptolomy, Comory by our Modern Authors, by a narrow, swift, and unnavigable Current, where the Flemings have nested themselves in the Portugals Castles at Columbo, Point de Gaul, and elsewhere; so that if at all, we are to meet with them hereabouts, they commonly having a Fleet of Ships in these Seas: We out of necessity are forced to make this Land, and were it peaceable Times should sail all along in sight of it, till we came upon the Coast of Cormandel. Chap. III.

in

Wherefore our Commander returning on board, after assigning every one his Post, to be ready on any surprize, he found a Chearfulness in all to obey him.

Here two Whales, bigger than the former, shewed themselves. A Couple of Whales.

In the dead of the night a lamentable Outcry was caused by some of our Men on the Forecastle, who looking out thought they had seen a Rock, with which these Seas abound, whereupon they cried out, A Breach, a Breach; which made the Mates leap out of their Cabins with the same grisly Look as if going to give up their last Accounts: Here was Doomsday in its right Colours, Distraction, Horror, and Amazement had seized on all, one commanding this, another acting quite contrary; the Breach surrounding us, every one expected the fatal stroke, when the Ship should be dashed in pieces. In this Panick Fear, had any had so much heart as to have ventured a Composition for his empty Noddle by looking over-board, he might have discovered the Jig: For at length it was evident that only a Chorus of Porpoises had taken the Sea in their Dance; which Morris once over, the Seas were quiet, and our Men left to repose themselves with a shorter Nap than they thought themselves like to have. A Fright occasioned by a mistake in the Night.

Five days after our Summer Solstice we had soundings 14 Fathom, and at break of day had sight of Ceilon, when we altered our Course to East North-East; it bore from us North by West 12 Leagues, the out-Land low, but rarely enriched with Woods of Cinamon, from whence only it is brought.

The View of Ceilon.

The View of Ceilon.

This is the first Shore presented its self in India: The Inland hath a Prospect over the Sea: It lies in North Latitude 6 deg. 3 min. and Longitude from Johanna 37 deg. 10 min. East.

This is the Island where (if true) the Elephants are bred, who, transported, exact Homage from all Elephants of other places, and they withal, by prostrating (as it were) their Necks between their Feet, submissively acknowledge it. Ceilon has the best Breed of Elephants.

At Nights we stood off to Sea to escape the insidious Rocks, a-days we made for the Land, to gain the Land-Breizes, which are not felt far off at Sea, by reason of the Constancy of the Trade-Winds: They begin about Midnight, and hold till Noon, and are by the Portugals named Terrhenoes; more North they are more strong, and hardly give way to the Sea-Breizes, which sometimes succeed the others twelve hours, but not always on this Coast. The Terrhenoes.

Two

Letter I.

Three Country Junks.

Two Days paſſed after we made Land, we diſcovered three Country Junks a-head, and coming up with them we commanded their Skippers on board; examining their Cockets, they produced Engliſh Paſſes, the Maſters of two of them being Portugals, the other a Moor, from whom was taken a Packet of Dutch Letters: Their Crew were all Moors (by which Word hereafter muſt be meant thoſe of the Mahometan Faith), apparell'd all in white, on their Heads white Scull-caps, their Complexions tawny: Their Junks had three Maſts, wearing an Eaſt-India ſtrip'd Ancient, and might contain an 100 Tuns apiece.

They managed their Sails but aukwardly, and are unskilful in Maritime Affairs; wherefore in any long Voyage they employ Europeans to navigate their Veſſels.

Cattamarans are Logs tied together, to waft off their Goods.

Coaſting along, ſome Cattamarans (Logs laſhed to that advantage that they waft off all their Goods, only having a Sail in the midſt, and Paddles to guide them) made after us, but our Ships having freſh way, we were unwilling to tarry for them; beſides, at that inſtant we eſpied under the Shore a mighty Veſſel, with her Yards and Top-maſts lower'd; but they continuing to follow us, the Anne lay by for one of them, who affirmed that a Fleet of 24 Sail of Batavians were paſſed to retake St. Thomas from the French. The Eaſt-India Merchant and Antelope by this were up with the Veſſel under ſhore, who proved to be a great Junk of the Moors: Overagainſt where ſhe rode, a fair Pagod or Temple of the Gentus, beleaguer'd with a Grove of Trees (excepting that it was open towards the Sea) caſt a Luſtre bright and ſplendid, the Sun reverberating againſt its refulgent Spire, which was crowned with a Globe white as Alabaſter, of the ſame tincture with the whole.

Sandraſlapatan on the Main.

Nearer the Point we deſcried a Town, in which a Caſtle overawing it, and upon the higheſt Pinacle Dutch Colours, which high Noon gave us to be Sandraſlapatan, a Factory of theirs, our Staff having as much as together with the Sun's declination made 11 deg. 50 min. North Latitude, but 10 Leagues to the South of Fort St. George, where our Commanders were to touch firſt, according to their Charter-Party.

Reſolved to fight the Flemings.

Whereupon we put abroad our Jacks, Ancients, and Penants, and running out all our Guns, it was unanimouſly conſented to fight our way through the Flemiſh Eaſt-Indians, had we not ſeen a Muſſoola hailing our Admiral, which came off with Advice from the Agent: This Afternoon therefore we lay by, the Admiral calling a Council aboard him; and at night our Mercury was waited on towards the Shore by the Bombaim: All this while we lay in ſight of Sandraſlapatan, whoſe Soil is Fat and Opulent, like their Netherlands.

The View of Sandraſlapatan.

The View of Sandraſlapatan.

Put to Sea again, on Advice from the Agent.

The Water here ran ſmooth and diſcoloured: Till once again committing our ſelves to the Sea, we ploughed deeper Water, North-Eaſt, of a Cærulean dye.

The

Chap III.

The next day we saw a French Man of War, and he us, but would not trust us. We knew him to be French by our Intelligencer, who laid us out his Station, where he had encountred five Batavians, and discomfited them.

Saw a French Man of War.

This Day's observation made 30 m. to the North of Fort St. George. We were beating now against the Wind (which blows fiercely from the Shore) and a strong Current, which had set us 14 deg. 20 min. North in three days time, when the Junks we compelled with us hither, had the liberty to make the best of their way for the Bay of Bengala; for which the Winds served them well enough, though full in our Teeth, who laboured for the Land.

Dismissed the Junks.

However, in four days time we met with the Freshes off the Shore caused by the Upland Rains: The Sea despising to defile its purer Azure with their Muddy Green. The same Antipathy was held betwixt the lively Fishes and their slimy Brood, they intermixing with such unfriendly Concord; for playing in whole Shoals about the Edges, they would not exceed the Limits the jarring Torrents had won upon each other. So the fierce Tigris in his swift Career neglects the scorned Arethusa, and she with the like disdain retaliates his unkindness, neither Stream mixing either Fish or Water.

Met the Freshes caused by the Rains.

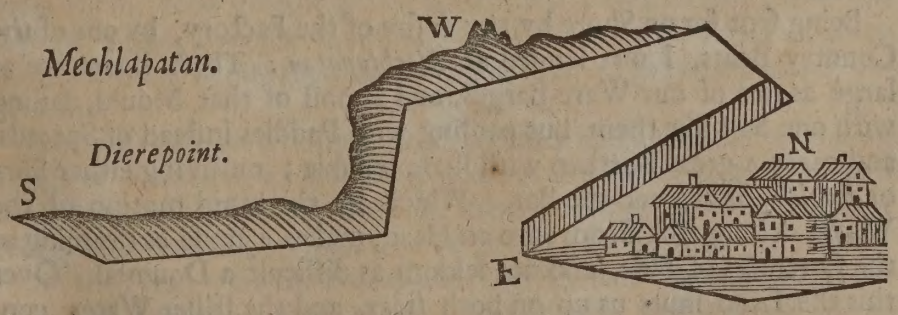
Thus quartering this Sublunary Globe, out of Europe into Africa, from thence cruising on the Coast of Brasil upon the American Seas, till joining with the Ethiopick, we double the Cape of good Hope into Africa again, at last we came in sight of the Asian Shores; and the latter end of June we cast Anchor in Mechlapatan Road; which was composed of Shoals and Deeps, where we found three Portugal Ships riding.

Having quartered the World, we Anchor at Mechlapatan.

Our Fleet expressed their joy by the roaring of the wide-mouth'd Cannon, and the sounding of the shriller Trumpets; which the English Factory, welcomed by displaying their Flag (being allowed no Ordnance, but what they privily plant for their own security) as being under the Tutelage of the Natives, as also are the Portugals and Flemmings (who each have here their Staples) so in like manner all they have any Commerce with: No Act of Hostility, either on Shore, or in the Road, being tollerated without leave first obtained; those on Shore being the Pledges forfeited on the breach of Peace.



Bar Town.

The firm Land was plain and nothing elevated beyond the Trees, unless Edifices of the European erection.

Letter I.

CHAP. IV.

Takes up our ſtay at Mechlapatan, to our Landing at Fort St. George.

The Treaſure ſet on Shore.

THE next Morning the Second of the Factory (the Chief) being at Fort St. George, viſited the Admiral, and ordered the Treaſure to be ſet on Shore.

That if the empty Hollander ſhould be ſo hardy as to face us, their ſmall hopes of Plunder might abate their Courage; which otherwiſe might tempt them to attack us with the greater vigour.

The Boatmen deſcribed.

The Boat-men that came for it were of a Sun-burnt Black, with long black Hair, tied up in a Clout of Calicut Lawn, girt about the Middle with a Saſh, in their Ears Rings of Gold; thoſe that were bare-headed, were ſhorn all to one Lock, which careleſly twiſted up (ſome have fooliſhly conceited) to be left for Perimel (one of their Prophets) to hold faſt by when he ſhould haul them to Heaven; but more truly to preſerve them from the Plica Polonica, which attends long Hair not cleanly kept, and to which theſe People are incident.

Peons, or Servants to wait on us.

Among theſe, ſome more modiſh than the reſt, as going in a Garb more Civil, Coiling Calicut about their Heads, Turbat faſhion, on their Bodies light Veſts, underneath long looſe Breeches, and ſwadled about the Waiſt with a Saſh; offered their Service for a ſmall Penſion, to execute our Affairs on Shore, or wait on us Aboard.

Theſe ſpake Engliſh, and acquainted us, how the French had ſet fire to four Veſſels of the Moors, and made Prize of four more, as they were in this Road not two Months ago; that they had conſtrained ſome Dutch Factories to run on ſcore to ſupply their wants with Victuals, and other Neceſſaries; whoſe Credit, by theſe Emergencies, and their Caſh failing, begins to ſink: Money being here not only the Nerves and Sinews, but the Life it ſelf of Trade.

Landing at Mechlapatan.

Being ſent for on Shore by the deſire of the Factory, by one of the Country Boats, I was landed at Mechlapatan: Theſe Boats are as large as one of our Ware-Barges, and almoſt of that Mould, ſailing with one Sail like them, but padling with Paddles inſtead of Spreads, and carry a great Burthen with little trouble; outliving either Ship or Engliſh Skiff over the Bar. Which by the rapid motion of the Waves driving the Sands into an Head, makes a noiſe as deafning as the Cataracts of Nile, and not ſeldom as difficult a Downfal. Over this the Land ſhuts us up on both ſides, and the ſtiller Waters contentedly do part their Streams to embrace the Town.

The Fort and Town.

Near which a Fort or Blockade (if it merit to be called ſo) made of Dirt, hides half a ſcore great Guns; under the command of which ſeveral Moors Junks ride at Anchor. A Bow-ſhot from whence the Town it ſelf, environed with a Mud Wall, entrenched with a ſtinking Moras, and at ſome time Moated with the Sea, creates a ſpacious Proſpect; it is of Form oblong.

Their Cuſtom-Houſe Keys.

Their Bank Solls, or Cuſtom-Houſe Keys, where they land, are Two; but mean, and ſhut only with ordinary Gates at Night.

Their Private Dwellings.

The High-ſtreets are broad, ſet forth with high and lofty Buildings, the Materials Wood and Plaiſter, beautified without with folding Windows, made of Wood, and lattiſed with Rattans, entring into Balconies ſhaded by large Sheds covered with Tiles: Within a Square Court, to which a ſtately Gatehouſe makes a Paſſage, in the middle whereof a Tank vaulted, with a flat Roof above, and on it Terras Walks are framed, the one to waſh in, in the heat of the day; the other to take the Air in the cool of the day; the whole Fabrick intire within its ſelf, covered atop Taber-like.

The poorer, of which multitudes are interſperſed, both in their High-ſtreets and Allies, are thatched, caſt round as Bee Hives, and walled with Mud; which in the Summers drought often take fire, and lay the taller equal with the ground.

Publick Structures.

For publick Structures their principal Streets preſent ſundry Moſques, one Cuſtom-houſe, one Court of Judicature, and that but mean.

For Places of reſort there are three Buzzars, or Market-places, crowded both with People and Commodities.

The Bridges.

On the North-Eaſt a Wooden Bridge, half a Mile long, leading to the Bar Town; on the North-Weſt one, a Mile Long, tending to the Engliſh Garden, and up the Country. Each of which have a Gate-houſe, and a ſtrong Watch at the beginning, next the Town: Both theſe are laid over a Sandy Marſh, where Droves of People are always thronging.

The preſent Incumbents are the Moors, Perſians, Gentiles; Sojourners Armenians, (who maintain their Correſpondence over Land) Portugals, Dutch and Engliſh; and ſome few French.

The Story of this Place, and the Kingdom of Gulconda.

For the Story of it, and with it of the Kingdom; the Gentues, the Portugal Idiom for Gentiles, are the Aborigines, who enjoyed their freedom, till the Moors or Scythian Tartars (whether mediately from Perſia, or immediately from that overflow of Tamerlane into theſe Parts, is not material, ſince they both pretend to the ſame Extract, and that will be fitter declared in another place) undermining them, took advantage of their Civil Commotions. For one Caff or Tribe (by the Chief of which they were ruled) claſhing with another, overturned all; which that we may the better underſtand,

At firſt governed by their Tribes.

Theſe Tribes were diſtinguiſhed by their Occupations, eſpouſing therefore Vocations as well as Kindred; and thereby, as one was a more honourable Calling than the other, ſo they ſtood upon their Nobility in that Imployment, never marrying out of it.

As the Head were the Brachmines, the Ancient Gymnoſophiſts; out of whom branched their Prieſts, Phyſicians, and their Learned Men.

Next in eſteem were the Raſhwaws, Raſhpoots, or Souldiers.

How altered.

But the moſt inſolent were the Artificers; as the Engravers, Refiners, Goldſmiths, Carpenters, and the like; who behaved themſelves not only diſreſpectfully to their Superiours, but tyrannically to those of a viler Rank; as the Husbandmen and Labourers. Whereupon they jointly conspired their Ruin, and with that their own Slavery; taking the Moors to their assistance, who not only reduced the Usurpers to Composition, which was, That they should be accounted the Offscum of the People, and as base as the Holeucores (whom they account so, because they Defile themselves by eating any thing, and do all servile Offices) and not be permitted to ride in a Palenkeen at their Festivals or Nuptials, but on Horseback, which they count an high Disgrace; but they also took the Power into their own hand; which though Despotical, the Gentus endure, rather than endeavour the recovery of their former Liberty, and to subvert it from a Monarchy into an Aristocracy.

Letter I.

Their King a Chias Moor.

For it being in the breast of the Regent to appoint his Successor, his Predecessor, on defect of his own Children, raised him; by the practice of Siegmanjaffa, his Chief Eunuch (who are made in this Kingdom the prime Ministers of State) partly to strengthen his own Interest by ingratiating with the Heir Apparent, and partly out of gratitude to the Young man's Father, a Great Man, and of the Bloud-Royal, who, when alive, was the promoter of Siegmanjaffa: This same Prince of the Chias, or Sophian Extract, was raked out of the Embers of Oblivion.

All Noblemens Estates fall to the King at their Deaths.

Where you must note, That though his Father expired a Blazing Comet in the Court, yet at the death of any Nobleman, his Wealth falls all into the King's hands; whereby this poor Gentleman for a long time lived an obscure and miserable Life, no one taking his word for the Victuals he put into his Belly: But upon the old King's importunity for one to sway the Scepter after him of his own Line, Siegmanjaffa urged him; and placed him poor and lean as he was, where the King might see him, but not he the King.

At first the King rejected him, as having no promising look; still Siegmanjaffa interceded, and desired his Lord to allow him like a Gentleman, and see to what use he would expend his Money: Which condescended to, a Brachmin (who are become the Farmers of the King's Rents) was dispatched to offer him the Loan of Money, which he willingly accepted of, and therewith put himself into an handsome Equipage, both for Apparel and Attendants (which specious Shews recommend here more than profoundness of parts) and withal Fed and Whored (which is a great point of Manhood) as well as the best of them. Wherefore after a short time he was again brought into the King's Presence, who now began to have some hopes of him; and therefore to try him farther, he gave him a constant supply of Money; and bad Siegmanjaffa put him on some laudable Enterprize in his Army, of which Siegmanjaffa was General; which he undertook with much Alacrity, and behaved himself with that Gallantry, that at length the Old King sent him a Tipstaff with a Royal Robe, requiring him to come to Court in one of the King's own Palenkeens: At which he was dismay'd, Saying he should never return to his House again.

However, by Siegmanjaffa's encouragement he apparelled himself, and rode on the King's Palenkeen: His Jealousy was grounded on on a barbarous Cuſtom of the Eaſtern Monarchs, who when any Subject becomes ſuſpected, ſend them alike honourable Preſents with thoſe in Favour, which in their receit only ſhall teſtify to the World the King's Diſpleaſure, though they whom they are deſigned for, live not to know the cauſe, being poyſoned by them before they can plead for themſelves. But he was aſſured no ill Intentions were towards him when ſpeaking with the King face to face, he declared him his Succeſſor to the Crown, which not long after he was eſtabliſhed in by the Death of his Maſter. Chap. IV.

The barbarous Cuſtom of Poyſoning among the Eaſtern Monarchs.

His Reſidence is at Gulconda, the Metropolis, and bearing the Name of the Kingdom, fifteen days journey Weſt from hence.

Gulconda is the Metropolis, and gives Name to the Kingdom.

Under him Siegmanjaffa orders the whole Realm, amaſſing great Treaſures (though he himſelf pays Homage to the Great Mogul) exacting every Man's Eſtate when he pleaſes, mulcting them at his own Will, ſqueezing the common People to perfect Penury: Beſides the Reverſions of Great Mens Eſtates, he has large Revenues from his Diamond Mines, which he lets out yearly to thoſe bid moſt.

The Prime Miniſter an Eunuch.

The Wealth how raiſed.

His Expences are inconſiderable, his Subjects in their diſtinct Provinces maintaining his Soldiers, of whom he has a ſtanding Army of an Hundred thouſand Horſe and Foot, when all together; beſides Two hundred Elephants in continual readineſs, which are provided for by the Farmers of his Revenues.

The Army how paid.

All that he conſumes is on his Voluptuouſneſs, with which he is ſwallowed up.

The Kingdom of Gulconda extends from 10 deg. North Latitude, to 19 deg. ½ along the Coaſts of Coromandel, and up into the Country Three hundred Courſe (which is a Mile and a quarter) though in ſome places thinly inhabited.

The bigneſs of the Kingdom.

The next in Dignity to Siegmanjaffa, is the Governor of Mechlapatan, an Eunuch alſo, and a Slave to Siegmanjaffa, who came through the Town while we were here, waited on by a Noble Train, beſides Soldiers and Followers; having an Elephant led before his Palenkeen, which none preſume to do, unleſs the King honour them therewith; nor to ride on any but Females, unleſs of the Royal Family, who may only mount a Male to ride in State through their Cities. His Subſtitute here is a Chias Moor, who takes charge of the Stores every Night.

The Governor of Mechlapatan.

Over the Gentues they keep a ſtrict hand, entruſting them with no Place of Concern, uſing them as Mechanicks and Servitors, to few of them attributing the Title of Merchants; though in this Town of Moors and Perſians there are many Owners of good Trading Veſſels.

The Perſians have planted themſelves here through the Intercourſe of Traffick as well as Arms, being all of them at their firſt coming, low in Condition; but inſpired by the Court-Favour, and making one of their own Nation always their Executors, they arrive to Preferment. Nor are any of theſe ſo exempted when they grow too rich, to be deplumated by the ſame hand.

The Perſians Favourites at Court.

Their way of living is truly Noble, having a Retinue which beſpeaks their Greatneſs as they riſe in Fortune or the King's Grace.

Their Port and Grandeur.

Magnaque

Letter I. Magnaque eſt Comitum æmulatio quibus primus ad Principem locus, & Principum cui acerrimi & plurimi Comites. Hæc dignitas, hæ vires, magno ſemper electorum juvenum globo circumdari; in pace decus, in bello præſidium. Each contending to have the moſt numerous and handſomeſt Fellows for Attendance; their Pride at home, and abroad their Safeguard.

The Eaſt-India Company Factors.

However, for the Engliſh Honour be it ſpoke, none of them ſurpaſs the Grandeur of our Eaſt-India Company, who not only command, but oblige their utmoſt Reſpect; none of their Servants ſhewing themſelves in Publick without a Company anſwerable to theirs, and exceeding them in Civility of Garb and Manners. When the Chief made his Entry at his Return from the Fort, it was very Pompous, all the Merchants of Eſteem going to meet him with loud Indian Muſick and Led-Horſes: Before his Palenkeen an Horſe of State, and two St. George's Banners, with Engliſh Trumpeters; after him the Factors on Horſeback, and luſty Fellows running by their ſides with Arundells, (which are broad Umbrelloes held over their heads,) Soldiers and Spear-men Two hundred at leaſt, and after theſe a Row of Palenkeens belonging to Engliſh and other Merchants.

Their manner of living.

At Meals their Domeſticks wait on them with Obeiſance ſuitable to great Potentates, encloſing their Tables, which are ſtrewed liberally with Dainties ſerved up in Plate of China; Nam nulla aconita bibuntur fictilibus, ſays Juvenal, which crack when poyſoned; which whether true or falſe (ſince it is ſo much practiſed in this Country by way of Revenge) is but a neceſſary Caution by all means to avoid.

They fan the Air with Peacocks Tails ſet in huge Silver Handles, and chiefly now, becauſe the buſy Flies would cover the Table, were they not beaten off. Abroad ſhading their heads with broad Targets held over their heads; waſhing and rubbing them in their Tanks; wanting in no Office may render them acceptable to their Maſters.

The Pompouſneſs of the Gentues.

But not to detract from the Inhabitants, their Solemnities are very Courtly, commonly performed by Night with the noiſe of Drum, Shawm, and Fife; eſpecially at their Weddings, when the meaneſt (excepting thoſe proteſted againſt) of the Gentues muſt not be denied his Week's Jollity in a Palenkeen, and a Guard of Targets, Swords, and Javelins, and others bearing the Enſigns denoting the Honour of their Tribe. If any of the ſubjected Tribes (as they count them) aſſume the Honour (though the Governor connive) they fall together by the ears, and drag him ſhamefully by the Hair of the Head to the place he firſt ſet forth.

Their Attire.

They are array'd in White Veſts, girt with Saſhes, ſmall Turbats on their Heads, long Breeches to their Heels; the Gentues barefoot moſtly; The Moors and Perſians ſhod with Sandals, and over their Shoulders a Silk Mantle of what colour they fancy.

The Engliſh keep their faſhion, though cloathed in white: The Armenians like the Inhabitants.

The Gravity and Pride of the Moors.

The Moors are very grave and haughty in their demeanor, not vouchſafing to return an Anſwer by a Slave, but by a Deubaſh, who is the Interpreter. Their chiefeſt Delight and Pride is to be ſeen ſmoking

Chap. IV.

ſmoking Tobacco croſs-legg'd in a great Chair at their doors, out of a long Braſs Pipe adapted to a large Cryſtal Hubble-bubble, fixed in a Braſs Frame, their Menial Servants ſurrounding them.

All of this Robe's way of Salute is by lifting their Hand to their Head, except the Armenians, who move their Turbats as we our Hats.

Their Jealouſy.

The Moors are by Nature plagued with Jealouſy, cloiſtring their Wives up, and ſequeſtring them the ſight of any beſides the Tapon that watches them. When they go abroad, they are carried in cloſe Palenkeens, which if a Man offer to unvail it is preſent death; the meaneſt of them not permitting their Women to ſtir out uncovered; of whom they are allowed as many as they can keep.

Strictneſs towards their Women.

Their Matches are contrived by their Parents when young; at Seven Years the Son being taken from the Mother, the Siſter from the Brother, and not a Father, though Fourſcore and ten, ſuffered the Interview of his Daughter; every Dwelling having Apartments allotted for this Confinement.

Contrary Freedom among the Gentues.

The Gentues obſerve not that ſtrictneſs, both Sexes enjoying the open Air. Their Women are manacled with Chains of Silver (or Fetters rather) and hung with Ear-rings of Gold and Jewels, their Noſes ſtretch'd with weighty Jewels, on their Toes Rings of Gold, about their Waſte a painted Clout, over their Shoulders they caſt a Mantle; their Hair tied behind their Head (which both in Men and Women is naturally very long); a-top a Coronet of Gold beſet with Stones; compleatly bodied, and ſo flexible, that they are excellent Dancers, and good at Feats of Activity: I having ſeen them hold Nine Gilded Balls in play with their Hands and Feet, and the Muſcles of their Arms and Legs, a long time together without letting them fall: They are clearer complexion'd than the Men.

Their Craftineſs and Skill in ſtaining Calicuts.

As for their dealing in the World, they are well skill'd, and will arithmetize the niceſt Fractions without the help of Pen or Ink; much given to Traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandize, if not fraudulent; having an accompliſhment in the Art of Staining Calicuts here beyond any other place in the Eaſt-Indies (for that they are upon waſhing rather clearer and livelier than at firſt, and this is it that makes this Port ſo much frequented) which is painted with the Pencil by little Children as well as elder grown, they ſtretching the Pieces on the ground, and ſitting upon them, run them over with a dexterity and exactneſs peculiar to themſelves.

Their fearful diſpoſition.

They are all of them of Diſpoſition timerous, ſo that Twenty four Engliſh-Men armed kept the Bank-Solls againſt them on a late Demur; and thereupon at the coming in of our Ships they were all packing up to be gone, notwithſtanding 200000 Souls receive here their daily Suſtenance: And as Tyrannous when they get the uppermoſt; an inſtance whereof the Occaſion of this Demur preſents: For our Factory protecting one of the Engliſh Nation from their Fury, who too incautiouſly had to deal with ſome of their Women, they ſet a De-Roy on the Factory (which is a Prohibition in the King's Name for any one to have any thing to do with them till that be taken off) whereby they were debarred Wood and Water, and all other Neceſſaries, till they had their Revenge on the Aggreſſor, which terminated not till Death had expiated the Fact: For having ving intrapped him by deluding Speeches into their mercileſs Power, they cut him in pieces before the Factory Gate: Whereupon the Engliſh drew out ſome Field-Pieces, and ſcowred the Streets, when they fled and left the Bank-Solls to their poſſeſſion, which were not reſigned till the De-Roy was taken off, which was not done till within a little of our Arrival; when the thing being freſh, and thinking us not only able by ſuch a Fleet to demand Satisfaction, but reſolved ſo to do, they were all ſhifting for themſelves: According to the true nature of Cowards, who when Peril is far from them, ſtrike all with Lightning; but when it appears on equal terms, preſently diſcover the wonted Paleneſs of an unſound Virtue.

Letter I.

Their Complexion.

Of Complexion the Gentues are blacker than the Moors, the Moors than the Perſians.

Execution in Caſes Capital.

Their executing of Juſtice in Capital Caſes is ſudden, either cutting them in pieces (which for Murder is always begun by the next Relation, who muſt be both Proſecutor and Executioner, and then ſeconded by the Rabble) or Impaling them on Stakes.

The puniſhing of their Great Ones, becauſe not in force in our Weſtern Empires, may deſerve to be mentioned.

The Poſt, and Nature thereof.

Upon an Offence they are ſent by the King's Order, and committed to a place called the Poſt (from the Puniſhment inflicted), where the Maſter of the Poſt is acquainted with the heinouſneſs of the Crime; which being underſtood, he heightens by a Drink, which at firſt they refuſe, made of Bung (the Juice of the intoxicating ſort of Hemp), and being mingled with Dutry (the deadlieſt ſort of Solarium, or Nightſhade) named Poſt, after a Week's taking, they crave more than ever they nauſeated. Ad illorum vicem qui deguſtato Sardonum graminum ſucco feruntur in morte ridere; making them fooliſhly mad. Then are they brought into the Inner Lodgings of the Houſe, in which Folding Doors open upon delicious Gardens, where Apes and Cats, Dogs and Monkeys are their Attendants, with whom they maintain their Dialogues, exerciſing over them their Humour of an Aſſaſſin, Uſurper, Miſer, or what their Genius led them to, whilſt themſelves. After this manner are they impriſon'd during the King's Pleaſure, or he order their Cure, to reſtore them to their Senſes again; which otherwiſe, after their Spirits are tired by a reſtleſs Appetite of doing, and in the mean time have not a ſuitable recruit, they linger by a laſting Leanneſs into the Shades, which alive they repreſented.

No Law-Diſputes long depending. Their Religions.

As for their Law-Diſputes, they are ſoon ended; the Governor hearing, and the Cadi or Judge determining every Morning.

Religions of all Inventions are licens'd. The Moors are Mahometans of the Arabian Sect: The Perſians as much deluded by Mortis Ali or Hali, accuſed therefore of Hereſy by the Moors. The Natives are Idolaters worſhiping many Penates or Houſhold-Gods, yea, the Devil too for fear: Yet they acknowledge but One Supreme God; and the various Repreſentations or Shapes adored, are but ſo many different Attributes. After every day's Devotion they dawb their Forheads with Paint, and as Principles of Zeal, abominate eating with any, unleſs of their own Caſt, when they ſtrip and waſh themſelves before Meals.

They

Chap. IV.

They have a due command of their Appetite both as to Time and the Matter they feed on, to wit, Roots, Herbs, Rice, and Cutchery, all manner of Fruits, but nothing that has had Life, or likely to produce Vital Heat, as Eggs, which they will not eat; but they will drink Milk and boil'd Butter, which they call Ghe.

For their Eaſements both Men and Women keep a ſet hour, and go with every one a purifying Pot in their hand (for to take up Water to waſh after their occaſions) to ſome Publick Tank or Pond; the Men apart from the Women; neither of them concerned for Paſſengers, keeping their back-ſides towards them till they have done their Buſineſs.

Among them all it is common to make water ſitting, as when they evacuate the other way; and it is a ſhame for any one to be ſeen to do otherwiſe, they ſarcaſtically ſaying, Such a one piſſes like a Dog (which is held unclean) ſtanding.

Their Doctors of Divinity are the Brachmins, who inſtruct them in their Law, to preſerve all Creatures that are beneficial, and teach them the old Pythagorean Μετεμψύχωσις, Tranſmigration of Souls out of one body into another; as a Tyrant into a Tygre, a Covetous Man or Cruel into a Boar, a fearful Man into an Hare, and ſo on: If they ſee a Tree twined about with another (as moſt Bind-Weeds will), they tell you that in this life, when Human, the Soul got into that Tree was a Debtor to the other, and therefore it is held faſt by the other. The Soul of a Good Man is believed to depart into a Cow, wherefore 'tis Sacrilege with them to kill a Cow or a Calf; but highly piacular to ſhoot a Kite, dedicated to the Brachmins, for which Money will hardly pacify.

Their Doctors of Divinity, and their Tenets.

Their Religious Worſhip conſiſts moſt in waſhing and purifyings; more of which hereafter.

Their Ceremonies.

They marry very young, not knowing their Wives though till at riper years they come to conſummate their Hymeneal Rites.

They marry young.

Their Language they call generally Gentu: They write on the Leaf of a Cocoe with a ſharp Iron Inſtrument. The peculiar Name of their Speech is Telinga.

Their Speech.

The Telinga Character.

The Mahometans bury their dead; the Gentues burn them; and in the Husband's Flames the Wife offers her ſelf a Sacrifice to his Manes, or elſe ſhe ſhaves and turns Whore for a Livelihood, none of her Friends looking upon her; hers, not her Husband's Acquaintance, thruſting her upon it; to which end they give her Dutry; when half mad ſhe throws her ſelf into the Fire, and they ready with great Logs keep her in his Funeral Pile.

The Mahometans bury, the Gentus burn their dead.

Letter I.

Christian Strangers.

The Armenians are settled here on account of Trade (whose History is reserved for a fitter place); they are Christians of a separate Communion.

The Portugals, of the Romish Church.

The English, of the Orthodox Episcopacy.

The Dutch, most Calvinists.

Coin current, and the Commodities.

The Coin current here is a Pagod, 8 s.; Dollar, 4 s. 6 d.; Rupee, 2 s. 3 d.; Cash, 1 d. $\frac{1}{2}$; a Cash $\frac{1}{4}$.

Staple Commodities are Calicuts white and painted, Palempores, Carpets, Tea; Diamonds of both Rocks, the Old and New; Escretores, and other Knick-knacks for Ladies, because far-fetch'd and dear-bought.

Beasts wild and tame.

Beasts they have, Wild Lions, Leopards, Bears, Boars, Tygers, Antelopes, Spotted Deer.

For Service, Oxen, Buffola's, Camels, Asses which they use for burthen, to carry Packs, Water in great Leathern Sacks about the Town for every Family, and any other Slavery: But their Horses, which are small and hot-mettled, they put to no such drudgery, but use them with all the kindness and fair speeches imaginable.

Their hanging Coaches, and those that carry them.

With these (without disparagement to that Image God has stamp'd on that Enchiridion of his Handywork, Man) we might recite the Coolies, Duties, and Palenkeen Boys; by the very Heathens esteemed a degenerate Offspring of the Holencores; and in earnest (excepting the Shape) they come nigh to Brutes. These are the Machines they journey by: On the Shoulders of the Coolies they load their Provant, and what Moveables necessary. The Duties march like Furies, with their lighted Mussals in their hands (they are Pots filled with Oyl in an Iron Hoop, like our Beacons, and set on fire by stinking Rags). Ambling after these a great pace, the Palenkeen-Boys support them; four of them, two at each end of a Bambo, which is a long hollow Cane, thick, light, and strong, arched in the middle (which is done in Cases while it is growing), where hangs the Palenkeen, as big as an ordinary Couch, broad enough to tumble in; cieled with Silk, and Bosses pendent to raise withal, and others at each Corner, as our Coaches have; underneath it is laced with strong broad Girts, over which a Quilt, Skin of a Tyger, or Hide to lye upon, and round Pillows of Silk or Velvet, to bolster their Heads. At every Angle turn'd Staves, and overspreading it a Scarlet Coverlet of London Cloath.

A Set of these Rascals, who are eight, in a Week's time with this Load shall run down their choicest Horses; and bait them generously shall stage it a Month together.

Beasts for War and Food.

For War, Elephants: For to eat, Sheep, poor, fleeced rather with Hair than Wool, their Aspect bewraying as much Goat as Sheep: Goats; Hogs low and black, unclean to the Mahometans: Cows, sacred to the Gentues, as Serapis to the Egyptians; Conies, Hares.

Reptiles.

Reptiles, Snakes, Serpents, the Amphisbena and other kinds; all which they pretend to charm, carrying them up and down in Baskets to get Money of the People, as well as Strangers; when they strike up on a Reed run through a Cocoa-Shell, which makes a noise something like our Bag-Pipes, and the subtle Creatures will listen to the Musick, and observe a Motion correspondent to the Tune; a Generation of Vipers that well deſerve to be ſtiled ſo, knowing when the Charmer charms wiſely. Chap. IV.

Fowls of all ſort belonging to India are plenty, but chiefly tame Geeſe. Fowls.

Fiſhes in abundance, from whence the Town derives its Etymology, Mechlapatan ſignifying the Fiſh-Town. Fiſhes.

For Corn, they have Rice the Staff of the Land, ſome Wheat. Corn.

Fruits to variety. Fruits.

The Water they drink they dig for; not that they are without Rivers, but they are brackiſh. It lies in 15 deg. North Lat. 40 min. From the Lizzard 96 deg. Eaſt. By reaſon of the Multitude of People and ill Site it is unhealthy; though it agree with the Natives, who live to a good Old Age. The Water and Air bad.

The Engliſh for that cauſe, only at the time of ſhipping, remove to Medapollon, where they have a wholſome Seat Forty Miles more North.

Rain they have none from November to May, all which time the Land-Breezes (which blow one half the day off the Sea, but faintly the other) torment them with a ſuffocating Heat; ſo that the Birds of the Air as they fly, often drop down dead, the Wind coming as hot as the Steam from an Oven, by the reflecting of the Sun upon the Sands, which are hurled about the Marſhes. When they feel themſelves freeſt from Sickneſs, though all Perſpiration through the Pores by Sweat is dried up: From the beginning of May they are refreſhed with cooling Showers, which at length with the overflowing Sea cauſe an Inundation; in which ſpace, the Air growing foggy, Empyema's and Fluxes are rifeſt; and Swarms of Ants, Muskeetoes, Flies, and ſtinking Chints, Cimices, &c. breed and infeſt them: This Seaſon we experimented; which though moderately warm, yet our Bodies broke out into ſmall fiery Pimples (a ſign of a prevailing Craſis) augmented by Muskeetoe-Bites, and Chinces raiſing Bliſters on us. Rain when it comes cauſes Inſects.

To arm themſelves againſt this Plague, thoſe that live here have fine Calicut-Lawn thrown over their Beds, which though white as Snow when put on, ſhall be in an hour beſmear'd all over, which might be tolerable, did not their daring Buzzes continually alarm, and ſometimes more ſenſibly provoke, though cloath'd with long Breeches to their Toes, and Mufflers on their Hands and Face, and a Servant to keep them from them with a Fan, without which there is no ſleeping.

Notwithſtanding theſe proviſions, yet there is another Inſect more diſturbing than theſe, and not to be eſcaped but by this Device, and that is the Ant, which creeps up to all their Quarters, and between their Beds, if the Bed-Poſts were not ſet in Pans of Water to hinder their Progreſs. Chinces ſtick among the Cotton, and in rotten Poſts, whoſe bitings wheal moſt ſadly, and if they ſtrive to take a Revenge for that abuſe, and chance to ſqueeze them, they leave a ſtink enough to choak them.

The Air ſo bad here, that it agrees with few new Comers; removing Three Miles up the Countrey it is an infallible Cure for the Diſeaſes of this place, provided it be done in time: The Air better up in the Countrey.

Letter I.

Where the Engliſh have a Garden for Divertiſement; where alſo is a Burial-place graced with Monuments both of Antique and Modern Workmanſhip.

Twelve of the King's Elephants.

Half a Mile beyond, a Dozen of the King's Elephants are ſtabled. When we came they were feeding out of their Houſes on Sugar-Canes freſh gathered and adminiſtred by their Keepers: Alighting from our Palenkeens, they looſed one which was Fourteen Feet high, and the Black clawing his Poll with an Iron Engine, he ſtooped down for him to get up, and being upon his Back guided him as he liſted. His Body is a Symetrical Deformity (if I may ſo ſay); the Hanches and Quarters clapt together ſeem ſo many heaps; his Neck ſhort, flapping Ears like Scates, little-Eye'd, a broad Face, from which drops his Proboſcis or Trunk, thruſting it out, or ſhriveling it in, as he chuſes; through its Hollow he ſucks his Liquor, and with two Fingers, as it were, reaches the Fodder, ſhaking off the dirt againſt his Thigh, or Vermin, ſuch as Mice, which he abhors, he brings it under to his Mouth, from whence proceed two huge Tusks of Ivory for Defence, not Maſtication, for which he is ſupplied within with others; his Tail is curt: He ſhuffles an end a great Pace, moving all the Joints of his Legs, though the Motion of his Hinder-Legs imitate Human Progreſſion, having a Patella or Knee-Pan afore, not articulated behind as other four-footed Beaſts are. When he ſtands, his Legs appear ſo many Columns ſcollop'd at bottom, being flat-hoof'd.

The She's have their Paps under their Bowels afore, as Laurentius truly relates.

Their Modeſty in ingendring has given matter for diſpute, though doubtleſs they perform it after the manner of other Beaſts. They are of a Mouſe-Colour. With their Trunks they ſtrike a violent Blow, and are taught to ſling Iron Links, to the deſtruction of their Enemies. That they draw their weighty Cannon is certain; but that they engage with ſmaller on their Back, I am no Eye-Witneſs.

Our Repair aboard Ship, and coming to Fort St. George.

After a Month's Stay here, a Pataman (a Foot-Poſt) from Fort St. George, made us ſenſible of the Dutch being gone from thence to Ceilon: The Treaſure was reſhipped, and we in leſs than a Week, through contrary Monſoons and Ill Weather (the Sun being in his Zenith, and encountring the Dog-Star over our heads) arrived there.

When ſliding by four French Men of War at Anchor under St. Thomas (of whom the Admiral the Brittoon was a Ship of 1200 Tuns, 68 Braſs Guns; the ſecond had 50 Braſs Guns; the other two were leſs; and the Platform of the City mounted with Braſs Pieces, that ſlung their Shot an incredible way), we againſt all probability found the Maſſenberg there, having ventured alone, and but the day before us came into the Road under our Fort; there alſo rode two Portugal Junks. The Colours the Fort ſhewed us, was St. George's Flag; it bore from us one League Weſt, Low-Land: St. Thomas one League and an half South-Weſt, High-Land behind it; North Lat. 12 deg. 30 min. Long. from the Lizard 96 deg. Eaſt.

The Maſſenberg given over for loſt, we found here

CHAP. V.

Gives a true Narrative of the Engliſh, French and Dutch on the Coaſt of Coromandel, continuing till we double the Cape for the Coaſt of Malabar.

I Went aſhore in a Muſſoola, a Boat wherein ten Men paddle, the two aftermoſt of whom are the Steers-men, uſing their Paddles inſtead of a Rudder: The Boat is not ſtrengthned with Knee-Timber, as ours are; the bended Planks are ſowed together with Rope-yarn of the Cocoe, and calked with Dammar, (a ſort of Roſin taken out of the Sea) ſo artificially, that it yields to every Ambitious Surf, otherwiſe we could not get aſhore, the Bar knocking in pieces all that are inflexible: Moving towards the Shore, we left St. Thomas, which lies but Three Miles to the South of Maderas, and Fort St. George; in the midway Maderas River in great Rains opens its Mouth into the Sea; having firſt ſaluted the Banks of Fort St. George on the Weſt: Towards the Sea the Sand is caſt up into a Rampire, from whence the fluid Artillery diſcharges it ſelf upon us, and we on the Shoulders of the Blacks muſt force our way through it.

Went aſhore in a Boat called a Muſſoola.

Though we landed wet, the Sand was ſcalding hot, which made me recollect my ſteps, and haſten to the Fort. As it looked on the Water, it appeared a Place of good force. The Outwork is walled with Stone a good heighth, thick enough to blunt a Cannon-bullet, kept by half a dozen Ordnance at each ſide the Water-gate, beſides an Halfmoon of Fire-Guns. At both Points are mounted twelve Guns eying the Sea, Maderas, and St. Thomas; under theſe in a Line ſtand Palliſadoes, reaching from the Wall to the Sea; and hedge in at leaſt a Mile of ground. On the South ſide they have cut a Ditch a ſufficient depth and breadth to prevent ſcaling the Wall, which is a quarter of a Mile in length afore it meets with a third Point or Baſtion, facing St. Thomas, and the adjacent Fields; who ſuffer a Deluge when the Rains deſcend the Hills. From this Point to the Fourth, where are lodged a Dozen Guns more that grin upon Maderas, runs no Wall, but what the Inhabitants compile for their Gardens and Houſes planted all along the River parallel with that, that braces the Sea. From the firſt Point a Curtain is drawn with a Parapet; beneath it are two Gates, and Sally Ports to each for to enter Maderas; over the Gates five Guns run out their Muzzels, and two more within them on the Ground.

Rowed by St. Thomas.

Landed, are well wetted at Fort St. George.

Over all theſe the Fort it ſelf lifts up its Four Turrets, every Point of which are loaded with Ten Guns alike: On the South-Eaſt Point is fixed the Standard; the Forms of the Baſtions are Square, ſending forth Curtains fringed with Battlements from one to the other; in whoſe Interſtitiums whole Culverin are traverſed. The Governor's Houſe in the middle overlooks all, ſlanting diagonally with the Court. Entring the Garriſon at the Out-gate towards the Sea, a Path of broad poliſhed Stones ſpreads the way to paſs the Second Guard

The Fort deſcribed.

Letter I.

Guard into the Fort at an humble Gate; oppoſite to this, one more ſtately fronts the High-ſtreet; on both ſides thereof is a Court of Guard, from whence, for every day's Duty, are taken Two hundred Men: There being in pay for the Honourable Eaſt India Company of Engliſh and Portuguez 700. reckoning the Montroſſes and Gunners.

Neat Dwellings.

The Streets are ſweet and clean, ranked with fine Manſions, of no extraordininary Height (becauſe a Garriſon-Town) though Beauty, which they conciliate, by the Battlements and Tarras Walks on every Houſe, and Rows of Trees before their Doors, whoſe Italian Porticos make no ordinary conveyance into their Houſes, built with Brick and Stone.

The Portugals have a Chappel.

Edifices of common note are none, except a ſmall Chappel the Portugals are admitted to ſay Maſs in.

Take the Town in its exact proportion, and it is Oblong.

The Engliſh Maſters of that Place.

The true Poſſeſſors of it are the Engliſh, inſtated therein by one of their Naiks, or Prince of the Gentues, 90 years ago, 40 years before their total ſubjection to the Moors; who likewiſe have ſince ratified it by a Patent from Gulconda, only paying 7000 Pagods yearly for Royalties and Cuſtoms, that raiſes the Mony fourfold to the Company; whoſe Agent here is Sir William Langham, a Gentleman of Indefatigable Induſtry and Worth. He is Superintendent over all the Factories on the Coaſt of Coromandel, as far as the Bay of Bengala, and up Huygly River (which is one of the Falls of Ganges) Viz. Fort St. George alias Maderas, Pettipolee, Mechlapatan, Gundore, Medapollon, Baliſore, Bengala, Huygly, Caſtle Buzzar, Pattanaw. He has his Mint, and Privilege of Coining; the Country Stamp is only a Fanam, which is 3 d. of Gold; and their Caſh, twenty of which go to a Fanam. Moreover he has his Juſticiaries; to give Sentence, but not on Life and Death to the King's Liege People of England; though over the reſt they may. His Perſonal Guard conſiſts of 3 or 400 Blacks; beſides a Band of 1500 Men ready on Summons: He never goes abroad without Fifes, Drums, Trumpets, and a Flag with two Balls in a Red Field; accompanied with his Council and Factors on Horſeback, with their Ladies in Palenkeens.

Sir William Langham Agent.

Diligence of the Fryers.

The Engliſh here are Proteſtants, the Portugals Papiſts, who have their ſeveral Orders of Fryers; who, to give them their due, compaſs Sea and Land to make Proſelytes, many of the Natives being brought in by them.

Number of Engliſh and Portugals.

The number of Engliſh here may amount to Three hundred; of Portuguez as many Thouſand, who made Fort St. George their Refuge, when they were routed from St. Thomas by the Moors about ten years paſt, and have ever ſince lived under protection of the Engliſh.

Thus have you the Limits and Condition of the Engliſh Town: Let us now paſs the Pale to the Heathen Town, only parted by a wide Parrade, which is uſed for a Buzzar, or Mercate-place.

Maderas

THEN divides it ſelf into divers Long Streets, and they are checquered by as many tranſverſe. It enjoys ſome Choultries for Places of Juſtice; one Exchange, one Pagod, contained in a ſquare Stone-wall; wherein are a number of Chappels (if they may be comprehended under that Claſſis, moſt of them reſembling rather Monuments for the Dead, than Places of Devotion for the Living) one for every Tribe; not under one Roof, but diſtinctly ſeparate, though altogether, they bear the name of one intire Pagoda. The Work is inimitably durable, the biggeſt cloſed up with Arches continually ſhut, as where is ſuppoſed to be hid their Mammon of Unrighteouſneſs, (they burying their Eſtates here when they dye, by the perſuaſion of their Prieſts, towards their viaticum for another State) admitting neither Light nor Air, more than what the Lamps, always burning, are by open Funnels above ſuffered to ventilate: By which Cuſtom they ſeem to keep alive that Opinion of Plato, in ſuch a Revolution to return into the World again, after their Tranſmigration, according to the Merits of their former living. Thoſe of a minuter dimenſion were open, ſupported by ſlender ſtraight and round Pillars, plain and uniform up to the top, where ſome Hieroglyphical Portraicture lends its aſſiſtance to the Roof, flat, with Stones laid along like Planks upon our Rafters. On the Walls of good Sculpture were obſcene Images, where Aretine might have furniſhed his Fancy for his Bawdy Poſtures: The Floor is ſtoned, they are of no great altitude; ſtinking moſt egregiouſly of the Oyl they waſte in their Lamps, and beſmear their Beaſtly Gods with: Their outſides ſhew Workmanſhip and Coſt enough, wrought round with monſtrous Effigies; ſo that oleum & operam perdere, Pains and Coſt to no purpoſe, may not improperly be applied to them. Their Gates are commonly the higheſt of the Work, the others concluding in ſhorter Piles.

Near the outſide of the Town the Engliſh Golgotha, or Place of Sculls, preſents variety of Tombs, Walks and Sepulchres; which latter, as they ſtand in a Line, are an open Cloyſter; but ſuccinctly and preciſely a Quadragone with Hemiſpherical Apartitions; on each ſide adorned with Battlements to the abutment of every Angle, who bear up a Coronal Arch, on whoſe Vertex a Globe is rivited by an Iron Wedge ſprouting into a Branch; paved underneath with a great Black Stone, whereon is engraved the Name of the Party interred. The Buildings of leſs note are Low and Decent; the Town is walled with Mud, and Bulwarks for Watch-places for the Engliſh Peons; only on that ſide the Sea waſhes it, and the Fort meets it. On the North are two great Gates of Brick, and one on the Weſt, where they wade over the River to the Waſhermens Town.

The Country is Sandy, yet plentiful in Provisions; in all Places Tops of Trees, among one of which, on the top of a withered Stump sate perching a Chamelion, Græce Χαμαιλέων, clasping with its Claws its rotten Station, filling himself with his Aerial Food, ex tali satietate facile est parare famem; a Banquet which most other Creatures else arise an hungred from: But to be confirmed in the truth of what we have only by Tradition, I caused a Black who had a Bow there, to fell him with an Earthen Pellet, which when he had, after a small time he revived, and making a Collar of Straw for his Neck, he carried him to my Lodgings, where I dieted him a Month on the same Provant. That he changes his Colours at a constant time of the Day, is not to be contradicted; but whether he live by the Air alone, I will not stand to it, unless there were a Dearth of Flies in the Countrey; though for my part I never did see him eat any. In Shape he comes neerest a Newt; with his Lungs his Body does agitate its self up to its Neck; he crawls on all Four, and has a Tail longer than his Body, which all together was no more than half a Foot; he has Teeth, and those sharp, which makes me think him an Anti-beel-ubian. The Country. A Chamelion.

Nine Days spent here, our Ships set sail again for Mechlapatan, leaving us behind them. Our Ships return to Mechlapatan.

In this Interim we have leisure to say something, if not a plenary Panegyrick,

Of the French Transactions in the East-Indies.

Of late Years, that stirring King Lewis the XIV^th^ (who was well instructed first by Mazarine, and since having been no bad Proficient under so expert a Master) has made himself to be taken notice of in Europe by his Conquests and Attempts upon Flanders and the Low-Countries by Land; and has also by his Foreign Expeditions, acquested the World's admiration, by his speedy Growth in Maritime Power. Of the growing Power of the French at Sea.

Insomuch that at his Infant Entrance upon the Watry Stage he was so audacious to join with the Belgians against his Royal Patron of Britain; having his Ends of those he pretended to succour, his wary Policy taught him another Lesson, that caused him to mediate a Triple Alliance.

About which time enjoying full Coffers, he ruminated on great Designs, as the raising an Army against Spain; to the same intent it was necessary for him to think of the continuing a Supply of Money: He therefore (omitting other ways of enriching his Exchequer) put in a Stock with his Merchant-Adventurers, fitting out a Fleet of Twenty Sail of lusty Ships, to settle a Trade in India, committing them to the Charge and Conduct of a Viceroy; who coming safe about the Cape, touched at St. Lawrence, where they did but little besides burying their Viceroy, and dispatching four Ships into Europe. Twenty Sail of French Ships under a Viceroy.

Letter I.

In the ſtead of the Viceroy deceaſed, the now reigning ſucceeded.

Sixteen arrive at Surat.

From thence they ſailed to Surat, where the Great Mogul endowed them with Immunities of Traffick.

War with Holland.

In the mean while a ſecond War betwixt England and Holland was fomented, in the which the French threw off the protecting the Dutch, and ſided with his Majeſty of England. When neglecting his newly-hatch'd Factory at Surat (whether out of its not anſwering his expectations, or his earneſtneſs in proſecuting the Hollanders by Sea as well as by Land, may be known by thoſe that are more intelligent in his Affairs at Home), ſenſe of Honour, obliged his Fleet in the Eaſt-Indies to New Adventures; and want of Money, the Merchants at Surat to Trade upon the Credit of the French King.

The French take Trincomalai from the Dutch.

With fourteen Sail of Ships they roved on the Coaſts of Malabar, and at laſt came to the Iſland Ceilon, ſetting upon the Dutch at Trincomalai, and forced it; but being deſtitute of Proviſions forſook it, after the loſs of abundance of their Men, and four of their Ships.

St. Thomas from the Moors.

From whence they paſſed along the Coaſt of Coromandel, and with Ten Sail came before St. Thomas, demanding Victuals of the Moors; but they denying, they brought their Ships to bear upon the Fort, and landing ſome ſmall Pieces they ſtormed it, driving the Moors to the ſearch of new Dwellings.

Fortify it.

After they had taken it, they broke up their weather-beaten Veſſels, and brought aſhore their Ordnance, keeping their Trenches within, and mounting it with the Sea without; they ſtill maintain it maugre all the great Armies the King of Gulconda has ſent againſt it.

Dutch come againſt it.

Till now the 18th Month of its Siege, and the fourth year of their leaving France, the Dutch of Batavia, in revenge of the Inroads the French have made on their Countrey at home, undertaking to waylay them, that no Suſtenance might be brought to them by Sea, came againſt it with 20 Sail, 15 Men of War, great Ships, ſome of 72 Braſs Guns apiece, well mann'd.

The Viceroy by a Stratagem brings in his Ship.

For all that, the Viceroy, who had then been gone out with four Sail, but returning alone, got betwixt them and the Fort with his ſingle Ship in the Night: The Device this; He left his Light upon a Catamaran, ſo that they thought him at an Anchor without them, when the next Morn he play'd upon them from under the Fort: This Exploit, and the bruit of our Approach, made them withdraw to the Southward for freſh Recruits of Men and Ammunition.

The French ſally out upon the Moors.

Which gave the French encouragement to ſally out upon the Moors (they before being beaten from their Works near the City, had decamped Seven Miles off St. Thomas), and with an handfull of Men pillaged and ſet fire to their Tents, foraging the Countrey round about, returning loaden with Spoils.

The Dutch appear again.

Three days after our Ships departed, the Batavians came again, and caſt Anchor over-againſt St. Thomas with their Flags flying; in the Afternoon they received ſome Shot from the French Fort and the Ships that lay in the Road: The next day all but five weighed, who tarried not many days before they followed the reſt to Policat, a Strong-hold of theirs, but 50 Miles North of us: Where we leave them to the landing 700 Men, to join with the Moors by Land, and their Ships to wait upon ours, upon their repair for Fort St. George: And at a diſtance (becauſe too near an Intruſion would but exaſperate

Chap. V.

Of St. Thomas.

IT is a City that formerly for Riches, Pride, and Luxury, was second to none in India; but since, by the mutability of Fortune, it has abated much of its adored Excellencies. History of St. Thomas.

The Sea on one side greets its Marble Walls, on the other a Chain of Hills intercepts the Violence of the inflaming Heat; one of which, called St. Thomas his Mount, is famous for his Sepulture, (in Honour of whom a Chappel is dedicated, the Head Priest of which was once the Metropolitan Bishop of India), and for a Tree called Arbor Tristis, which withers in the Day, and blossoms in the Night.

About this Mount live a Cast of People, one of whose Legs are as big as an Elephant's; which gives occasion for the divulging it to be a Judgment on them, as the Generation of the Assassins and Murtherers of the Blessed Apostle St. Thomas, one of whom I saw at Fort St. George. St. Thomas Christians.

Within the Walls seven Churches answer to as many Gates; the Rubbish of whose stupendious Heaps do justify the truth of what is predicated in relation to its pristine State.

The Builders of it were the Portugals.

The Confounders the Moors, who surprized them wallowing in their Wealth and Wantonness.

The present Competitors are the French, who are very unlikely to keep it (not for want of Valour, but for that few and unprovided, are not able long to resist multitudes) the Moors, and thirdly, the Hollanders, whose Interests are to destroy the French in India; Which the French foreseeing, had wisely solicited a Truce with Gulconda, and had hopes of that King's complying, till the Arrival of the Dutch, when they could not be heard. For considering a Kindness extorted not so obliging as that freely offered, and his Honour attainted by their Swords being still in their hands, he closed with the Hatred of the Hollanders, for their final Extirpation.

Before which be accomplished, he may chance to find it an hard Task, especially had the French any hopes of Succours: For now they are 600 strong in the Fort and Ships, all stout Fellows, every Soldier fit to be a Commander. Their greatest scarcity will be of Food, with which had not the English privately befriended them, they could not have subsisted hitherto. Though the English, should they have War with France, would find them to be an Annoyance to their Trade: So that were the City again in the hands of the Moors, or even with the Ground, it were better for us.

Here it may be queried, Why Gulconda being a Potent Prince, should permit Garisons to be in the hands of Aliens? To this may be answered, That this of St. Thomas was founded when the Indians were naked and unarm'd. But this satisfies not the Question, since that the Moors having conquered it, they again offered it the Portugals, who slighted the Propositions, unless they would restore them their Guns which they carried away with them. The true reason then is this, That Gulconda, as all the Indian Princes are, is weak at Sea; King of Gulconda weak at Sea.

Letter I.

Sea; therefore it is a Maxim among them to commit their Strongholds on the Sea-Coasts to those they can call their Friends, for not only preventing Invasions at the Charge and Courage of Foreigners; but they (not being Absolute, but subject to the Authority of the Great Mogul) upon any Defeat, have these Places as sure Asylums of Retreat.

Amidst these Scenes of Affairs, what next offers to our View, is odd in it self, To find an Aptness in these People to improve all Gainful Arts, and not to have advanced one footstep from the false Rudiments either of Religion or Customs of the Old World; for they do in my mind more than imitate, pertinaciously holding their Antiquities of Pan, Ceres, and Flora; as may appear by this and other following Farces.

A Festival of the Gentues.

Towards the latter end of August, when their Corn was in the Blade, and they were expecting a plentiful Crop, the Gentues of Maderas held a Feast in Memory of some of their Saints of the Devil's canonizing.

Their Ceremonies were usher'd in with Tumult; in the middle of them were carried their Gods in State, garnished with the Riches of the Orient; they were cut in horrid Shapes; the reason of which, Divina assimulatio est causa diversitatis in rebus; though I should allow the diversity of Creatures in all Orders of the World, hath no other aim but to represent the Divinity, by whatsoever Image, yet I cannot imagine such Deformities could ever be invented for that end. Before them went the Brachmins, making a Noise with their loud Musick; after them their dancing Wenches (who always Morning and Evening tumble afore their Gods, which with some Mimical Gesture is all their Dancing) with Ephods of Silk and Gold upon their Breasts: With these in a Ring hand in hand, were the dancing Boys, all naked but a Clout about their Privities, like the Bacchanalian Youths that used to revel it with Flora's Strumpets through the Streets of Rome.

Thus went they in Procession, till they came to a Pageant, whereon was pictured their Gods; from whence, over a cross Piece of Timber, hung a Cocoa-Nut, which the Hinds in Yellow Caps, and Clouts about their Wastes, striving to hit with a great Club, are washed by a Shower of Water, by the Brachmins placed on purpose; after a long Trial of their Patience, they suffer one to bear it away in Triumph.

All the time of their Sport, Beetle and Cocoa Nuts are scattered among the People, for which they scramble as earnestly as if they were Medals at Coronations.

On a Pageant over-against the Pagod they had a Set of Dancers handed like Puppits, to the amusing of the Mobile.

Then setting open the Gates of the Pagod, they received all the unsanctified Crew, and shut them in; where how they conclude their Rites, is not to be divulged, Ignorance with them being the Mother of Devotion.

Triblitore.

At Triblitore, four Miles North of Maderas, is a Pagod transcending both in respect of Building and Antiquity; there being Characters, the Expounders of the Gentu Language or Holy Writ understand not: To this Mother-Pagod, at certain Seasons of the Year, long long Pilgrimages are set on foot, at what time there is an innumerable Concourse, whereat some of the Visitants count it meritorious to be trod to death under a weighty Chariot of Iron made for the carriage of their Deities; and with themselves lay their Wives and Children to undergo the same Self-martyrdom.

In one of their open Pagods or Chappels, stands a Venerable Sir at the upper end, with the Attendants of Lamps and Bats, to whom they pay a world of Worship: Who this should be, unless that Periomel, from whose Head the Brachmins, Pallas-like fable their origination, I am yet to seek.

Antilopes.

In the way hither are store of Antilopes, not to be taken but by a Decoy made of Green Boughs, wherein a Man hides himself, and walking with this Bush upon his Back, gains so near on them, while grazing or browzing rather on Shrubs or Bushes, as to hit one with an Arrow, when it may be run down with Dogs, the rest of the Herd shunning it: They are of a delicater shape and make than a Deer, their Horns not jagged, but turned as an Unicorn's; nor spread into Branches, but straight, and long, and tapering, rooted on the Os frontis, springing up on both sides.

The Queen of the South.

At the end of August one of the Portugal Junks, we found in the Road, set Sail for Achein; where is Gold, and the Island thought by some to be Solomon's Ophir; and the Queen thereof, by whom it is constantly governed, confidently reported to be the Queen of the South, Achein being on the Island Sumatra in the South Seas.

We fight the Hollanders, and lose three Ships.

The first of September only Seven of our Ten Ships returned from Mechlapatan, with their wounded Men and torn Hulks, who had met the Hollanders, and tried their Force; two days after they were dispatched from Mechlapatan, in Pettipolee Bay, where as soon as Day began to peep, a Thicket of Twenty Sail of our Enemies were discovered stemming the flowing Tide at an Anchor. Our Fleet might have passed them without giving Battel; but that the undaunted Britains scorned to fly, chusing rather to lye a Battery for them, than cowardly to flinch: Wherefore they braced their Sails to the Masts, and being to Leeward, stayed for the Wind which favoured the Hollanders; who coming up with our Fleet, made as if they would have gone by them; but were intercepted by the headmost of ours: Which perceived by the forwardest of theirs, they sent their Shallops aboard their Admiral for Orders, for vis consilii expers mole ruit sua, Strength void of Counsel sinks with its proper weight; which was but too truly the fault of our Commanders, over-confident of their own Conduct, and lightly regarding the Authority of their General.

Bombaim and London disabled.

When they came back again, they brought their Fleet up in a Body, and after the Signal given, it thundred and hailed Bullets till Night.

The first that felt the warmth of the Showres, was the Bombaim; who after an hours hot dispute almost board and board with one of their biggest Ships, bore off hardly able to keep above water, and never came in again, having received 80 Shot in her Hull, and some between Wind and Water, so that in the Hold there was four Feet and an half Water; besides innumerable in her Rigging, Masts and Sails, from those that pelted at a distance.

The

Letter I.

The next Ship that behaved her ſelf ſtoutly, was the Admiral's; who loſt 34 of her Men by the ſcurvy Accidents of Powder 17 of them were ſlain outright.

Antilope ſunk. Preſident and Sampſon taken.

But the Three fatal Ships were the Antilope, Captain Golsbery; the Sampſon, Captain Ernnig, Reer-Admiral; and the Preſident, Vice-Admiral Captain Hide, whoſe rigid Fortune ſaved the drooping Honour of the Engliſh, which is not leſs conſpicuous in Adverſity than in Proſperity. For having ſuſtained the Brunt of the day, they left not off when they were penned in by the Enemy, and deſerted by their Friends: For by Five in the Afternoon the London bore away to ſtop her Leaks, the reſt were glad to follow; and left them to maintain ſo unequal a Fight. The Vice-Admiral was ſeen to blow up his Decks ſeveral times, diſtributing the Hollanders as Doles to the Fiſhes, and left not off till Night parted the Fray; ſo that what became of them our Ships could give us no account.

Dutch Forces march to raiſe the Siege of St. Thomas.

Six days ſince this, a Thouſand Men under Dutch Colours, with a dozen Carriages with great Braſs Pieces, marched by out of ſhot of our Leaguers, and fixed their Standard with the Moors in ſight of St. Thomas.

The next day was ſent from Mechlapatan hither, the Copy of a Letter from Captain Hide, which aſſured us of his being alive, but wounded, his Ship as it is, at the diſpoſal of the Dutch; as alſo Captain Ernnig's, though he was killed firſt: That Captain Golsbery ſunk his, rather than it ſhould go to Batavia; that he, and what Men could ſhift for themſeves, were ſafe.

It may be wondred why the French did not aſſiſt us, they being as much at odds with the Dutch as we; the reality is, they offered their Devoirs, but we muſt equip their Ships; for which our Commanders pretended lack of Orders as well as Money and Materials: Though the plain truth was, they deſpiſed kindneſs, thinking it beneath them to be beholden to them for their help.

The Wealth and Power of the Hollanders in India.

The Factories of the Hollanders on this Coaſt, are Ceilon, Jaffnapatan, Sandraſtapatan, Negapatan, Policat, Mechlapatan.

The Danes have a few, the French leſs.

In the South Sea, under the Agent of Bantam, the Engliſh have Factors at Pegu, Siam, Jambee: The Dutch have Batavia, and the Moluccos, from whence Nutmegs, worth more alone than all we have in India; they being as powerful for Men, Riches and Shipping in Batavia, as in Europe; which is grounded on a different Principle from our Eaſt India Company, who are for the preſent Profit, not future Emolument.

Their Policy in ſecuring.

Theſe, as they gain ground, ſecure it by vaſt Expences, raiſing Forts, and maintaining Souldiers: Ours are for raiſing Auctions, and retrenching Charges; bidding the next Age grow rich as they have done, but not affording them the means.

Our Seven Ships diſpatched for the Malabar Coaſt.

Our Ships that were left, were now ſooner repaired, than fraited with their Salt Peter and Fine Cloth; and had leave to make the beſt of their way for the Malabar Coaſt in leſs than a Fortnight's time, when it was determined to keep off to Sea, as well to eſcape the Hollanders, as the Violence of the Moſſoons; who being upon the point of ſhifting their Quarters, are moſt dangerous near the Shore.

Theſe

Chap. V.

The Monsoons on both Coasts, and Observations thereon.

These Mossoons or Monsoons, are the Winds and Rains customary to all India, varying here only in respect of the Mountains.

Therefore on these Coasts the South Winds blow for Eight Months, four of which are May, June, July, August. Then the Sun is so strong, that it would be uninhabitable, did not there fall at Night those Vapours which the Sun draws up in the Day; and by declining of his exorbitant Heat, leaves them to be condensated at Night; when the Air is more gross, and the Earth is cooled either by thick Mists, or a more palpable Moisture (which you may call pouring Showres) and thereby made fertile, which otherwise would be insupportable and barren.

That which makes this the more plausible is, That the Asiatick India intra Gangem, is a Pene Insula, and the Seas lie near round the Land.

The Heats tempered by Art.

But about the Sun's retiring to his Southern Tropick, the Winds take their Northern Course, the Rains do cease, and the Sea alters its Current to the South, when by the innate coldness of these Blasts the Clime becomes more habitable, unless where the Sands cause a reflection of heat, as at Mechlapatan; where they keep close all Day for three or four Months together, (though then the North Wind begins to abate its impetuosity, and the South Winds prevail) repelling the Heat by a course wet Cloath, continually hanging before their Chamber-windows; which not only resists the Ambient Air, but by the afflux of Nitrous Particles from within, does cast a Chilness over the Room; without which, the Walls, that for that intent are plastered, would be so hot, you could not abide your Hand on them; the same way they have of cooling their Liquors, by a wet Cloth wrapped about their Gurgulets and Jars, which are Vessels made of a porous kind of Earth; the best of Mæcha, reasonable good from Goa, which are carried with them in this nature wherever they travel.

The Rains more intermitting on the Coast of Coromandel.

Before we dismiss this Discourse, it may be noted, That the Rains on this Coast are more intermitting than on the Malabar Coast, so that they can loose hence their Ships for Persia, Mæcha and Juddah, and to the South Seas in those Months they are Wind-bound on the other Coast: for having the Land-Breezes to carry them off to Sea, the Mossoons are more favourable.

Concerning the Regularities of these Winds, perhaps some others may give better Guesses than my self, who am not conceited enough to dogmatize.

The Cause of the Mossoons inquired into.

Among the many that be alledged, I am not fond of any, though this have won a little upon my Opinion; That the Sun may be as well the reason why these Winds should observe his Annual Circumrotation; as that the Ebbings and Flowings of the Sea, by the Moon's meer depression of Air, should be ascribed to her Monthly Revolutions.

And here one thing may be worthy our Curiosity, That after the Seasons of the Heats and Rains, the Rivers Indus and Ganges are said to swell their Banks, and thereby abundantly to encrease the Bordering Countries, where these Rains are less frequent: Whence, it may be, some insight may be had for the Overflows of Egypt, which has set so many Wits on the Tenterhooks, where it is reported it never rains:

Letter I. rains: But in the Countreys near the ſuppoſed Sourſe of Nile, it does to Exceſs.

But you who have greater Reading and Leiſure to digeſt theſe Metaphyſical Notions, will mightily oblige me to furniſh me with your ſolider Arguments.

Among which I would intreat you to conſider the Variety of the Loadſtone in the common Chart: For what the incomparably Ingenuous Des Cartes has wrote on that Subject, acquieſces only in modeſt Hypotheticks, not any ways informing the Underſtanding to a clear Apprehenſion; but after he has brought it through the Maze of Probabilities, he parts with it at the ſame Predicament it entred.

The Tail of the Elephant. Not to deviate any longer, we are now winding about the South-Weſt part of Ceilon; where we have the Tail of the Elephant full in our mouths; a Conſtellation by the Portugals called Rabo del Elephanto, known for the breaking up of the Munſoons, which is the laſt Flory this Seaſon makes, generally concluding with September, which goes out with diſmal Storms.

Water-Snakes. Yet ſo good is Providence, as to warn us here, when all is obſcured, by Water-Snakes, of our too near approach to the Land; which are as ſure Preſages on the Indian Coaſts, as the Cape-Birds are there.

The difference on the Malabar Coaſt. Here the Mountains running Eaſt and Weſt, the Winds are to the Eaſt of the South, and to the Weſt of the North; elſe quadrating with thoſe on Coromandel; only here in April and May the Winds are variable, and then they haſten to leave theſe Coaſts for Perſia, the Red-Sea, and South-Seas, or thoſe make in that are to return hither; otherwiſe they run an hazard of loſing their Voyage, when the South to the South-Eaſt Wind is fixed, which continues to the latter end of September, or beginning of October: Then from the North to the North-Weſt ſets in again; and this Courſe is obſerved moſtly on all the Indian Shores, only ſome few days different in the beginning and ending, which happen to the South, and in Lands commonly earlier than to the North, and break up later when they are more ſevere, but the Intervals are milder; the middle Months clearing up in the day time; but from the firſt ſetting to the going out towards the North, the Sun hardly ſhews his Face, unleſs a Fortnight after the Full Moon in May, and a Fortnight before the Elephanto.

A Rejoinder of the Seaſons.

On the Coaſt of Surat from { Gemini to Libra.

This happens in the Sun's Ecliptick Road.

On the Coaſt of Coromandel from { Taurus to Scorpio.

And thus much may be ſaid in general; only the Land and Sea-Breezes in particular, on this Coaſt of Surat and Malabar, when the Rains are over, keep exactly Land-Breezes from Midnight to Mid-day, and Sea-Breezes from the Noon of Day to the Noon of Night.

Making

Making Land, we beheld it all a Flame, they burning their Stubble for Soilage, the Forerunner of the enſuing Rain; notwithſtanding a King fiſher flew aboard us with the flattering Coaks's of Halcyon days; but like an unskilful Augur was deſervedly reproached with the Ignorance of her own Deſtiny, to dye in Captivity; which fatal Neceſſity made her elect, rather than ſuffer with whole Flocks of little Birds blown from the Main, who not able to ſtem the boiſterouſneſs of the Winds, were hurried thence to periſh in the Sea.

Small Birds drove to Sea.

And now we were begirt with Land: the Maldivæ Iſlands lying South; Cape Comerin North and by Weſt; the Malabar Iſlands Weſt, (whoſe Inhabitants have no relation with thoſe on the Coaſt); whence is brought great quantities of Ambergreece; Ceilon, &c.

The Land our Maſter took for a Malabar Iſland proved a miſtake; for by a ſtrong Current we were lock'd in between the Iſland Ceilon, and the North Eaſt ſide of the Cape, within that deſperate Canal we before deſcribed. Our Error was firſt corrected by ſome Fiſhermen buſy at their Nets, who brought aboard plenty of Fiſhes, all new to us, who never had ſeen ſuch coloured ones, ſome gilded like Gold, others with Vermilion, varied by ſeveral Intermixtures.

Land-lock'd betwixt Ceilon and the Cape.

Strange colour'd Fiſhes.

Whilſt we were loſt in admiration, our Mates found themſelves no leſs at a loſs in their accounts, when they underſtood they were drove 30 Leagues to Leeward of the Cape, by the broken Portugueze ſpoken by theſe Men, and that we could not ſail much farther than Tutticaree, a Portugal Town in time of Yore, where they had a Citadel, and two famous Churches; and before us, which was the Lure, a Ketch of the Dutch's (which we chaſed for hopes of Prize) was ſailing to that Port, and preſently after anchored: We were then in ſeven Fathom Water.

This is the place where they drag Pearl.

All along here the Top of Gates is ſeen above the Clouds, the Ground beneath it Fair, Low, and Sandy.

The Mountain Gates.

Tutticaree is now in the hands of the Dutch, running the ſame Riſco with Columbo, over-againſt which it lies; we being now in the very Jaws of our Enemies, might have here concluded our Voyage, had their Fleet been nigh us.

Tutticaree our danger here.

The next day we were becalmed, and thereby carried into the midſt of the Stream; and although in the Afternoon we had an humming Friſco, it ran with ſuch Violence that we loſt more than we gained: This Miſtake coſt us a Fortnights time before we could compaſs the Cape, beſides Fears and Jealouſies both of our falling into the Torrent, and our Enemies hands.

The Cape lanches into the Sea with Three Points, running into a Campaign ſeveral Miles together, till it grows big with Mountains, procreating their prodigious Race 400 Leagues, ſevering the Coaſt of Coromandel and Malabar, Eaſt and Weſt; Latitude 8 deg. 50 min. North; Longit. 96 deg. Eaſt.

CHAP. VI.

Views the Malabar and Canatick Coaſts up to Bombaim.

A dark Night enlighten'd by Fiſh.

TO prevent the miſchief of ingulphing again by the Current, we anchored a-nights; when a Pitchy Blackneſs was interpoſed betwixt us and the Skies, and not a Star to be ſeen: The Plebs Squammoſa beneath the Surface of the Salt Ocean, gathering their little Fry (which proved to be Pilchards), either by the Repercuſſion of the Saline Bodies of the Waves, which is frequent, or by the more apt Poſition of their Glittering Scales, through that Medium to refract the hovering Light benighted in the Atmoſphere, diſperſed a Luſtre as bright as Day; inſomuch that a ſmall Print might eaſily be read by it.

The Dutch graſp at all the Spice-Trade.

Taking advantage of the Land-Breezes and the Tides, we ſcudded along the Shore, which was Woody, and well ſtock'd with Trees, the Ground even for many Leagues together; the Mountains peeping up behind a great way in the Country.

Being againſt Carnopoly, a Portugal Friar boarded us: It is ſome Miles to the North of Caulam, formerly inhabited by the Portugals, and from them taken by the Dutch, who have built a Caſtle there, and Lord it over the Natives, ſo that at Carnopoly the Dutch exact Cuſtom for all the Goods they carry off to Sea, though there live but one Boy and two Dutchmen. The Portugals have only Five Perſons here. The Engliſh had alſo a Factory for Pepper, but they are gone both from hence and Purcat, 20 Miles more North; the Cauſe we are unacquainted with, but believe the Dutch will leave nothing unattempted, to engroſs the Spice-Trade; for none has eſcaped them but this of Pepper; Cinamon, Cloves, Mace, and Nutmegs, being wholly theirs; and by the Meaſures they follow, this alſo in time muſt fall into their hands.

How far 'tis poſſible.

Nor indeed are Pretenſions wanting, they holding here their Right by Conqueſt (a fairer Claim than undermining), they boaſting they have in a manner ſubdued the Natives; which is no hard matter, ſince this Region of Malabar (in which general Name I reckon as far South as the Land's-End, and Phalapatan North) is divided into ſeveral Petit Signiories, or Arch-Rebels againſt the Zamerhin of Calicut, only paying ſome ſlight Acknowledgments of his Supremacy, as their Chief Biſhop, and joining with him againſt the Great Mogul; elſe ſtriving to ſupplant each other; having a Government moſt like Ariſtocracy of any in the Eaſt, each State having a Repreſentative, and he to act according to the Votes of the Nairos Gentry in full Aſſembly; which as they interfere with one anothers Intereſts, the weakeſt have always been ready to call in help: For which reaſon the Dutch were firſt permitted to rear Caſtles to ſecure the Sea-Coaſts; which they have made ſo good uſe of, as to bring them under their Yoke; the Great Mogul not diſcouraging them in the leaſt.

Cochin.

Keeping on our Courſe we left Cochin to the Southward, once a famous Mart of the Portugals, ſince wreſted from them, and made impregnable by the Dutch.

Left the Bad Weather, but not the Dutch Practices.

At this place we bad adieu to all our bad Weather, though not to the Practices of the Dutch, who had prevented the Engliſh at Panana alſo; ſo that here neither being any Pepper, we had nothing elſe to do but hoiſt Sails for Tanore, where we touched the firſt of November, the Natives having hardly ſhaken off the fear of the Dutch: For a Boat with Sails of Mats (all their ſmall Boats making them their Sails) came to take a Survey of us, and made towards us uncertainly; when after ſeveral Fetches to and again, at laſt they were within Call of us: We ſaw two Sumbrero's (a Mark for ſome of Quality) held up in the Boat-ſtern, and a Man ſtand up and wave his Hat, which made our Maſter ſtretch his Throat to know what he was; whereupon down went the Sumbrero's held up in the Boat-ſtern, the Boat cleverly tacked, and the Men tugged ſtoutly at their Paddles, and we as roundly ſent ſeven Shot after them, and the London as many; but they were more ſcar'd than hurt; for after we had mann'd three Boats after them, they return'd with their Labour for their Pains, the Boat getting ſafe from them. At Night another Boat with an Engliſhman came to ask what Ships we were: Whom when we anſwered Engliſh, he boarded us, and told us our unadviſed Salutes were level'd at an Engliſh Merchant ſent off by the Chief, who notwithſtanding he preſented two Piſtols at the Breaſts of the Boatmen, could not beat out of them the ſuſpicion they were poſſeſſed with of our being Dutch: Which ſhews how ſtrangely they are awed by them; and the rather, they being ſolicitous Blazers of their own good Fortune upon us, and our Defeat by them; which they had taken care to publiſh, to bring us into Diſrepute, which commonly waits on Ill Succeſs, before we could come to tell our own Tale.

Letter I.

Went aſhore at Tanore.

At our arriving aſhore the Natives flocked about us, and gazed upon us as if they would have ſtared us through; amidſt a Lane of whom we were uſhered by a few Portugals to their Chappel, at the Door whereof ſtood the Padre to receive us, and through it to conduct us to his Houſe.

Their Wares.

From whence I went to obſerve the Town, which is miſerably poor and ſtraggling, though in the heart of it a double Row of Cottages opened their Shops of Wares, which conſiſted of Pepper, Turmerick, Ginger, Caſſia Lignum, the leſſer Cardamoms, Bunco, i. e. Tobacco, and Hubble-bubble Canes, the Product of this Coaſt, as are alſo Beetle-Nuts the greateſt Gain from this place to Surat, to be reaped by them.

Amongſt whom were Shroffs, or Money-changers. On one ſide in a ſquare place was their Fiſh-Market, through which we came into another Lane, at whoſe end there was a Moſque.

Their Houſes mean.

Their Houſes are little Hovels or Hogſties, the beſt of them ſcarce worthy the Name of a Booth. The Engliſh Houſe is in the faſhion with the reſt, covered all over with Cajans, and ſeated (which they mightily affect) under Trees. The People are Tawny, not Black. Their Language Malabar. Here is a Specimen of their Character.

Pag: 52

They are ſubject to the Zamerhin of Calicut, who ſent hither his Delegate to welcome us, and invite us to a Continuance of Trade: He gave our Fleet ſeven Guns, which were planted near the Waterſide; which Compliment was returned by the Fleet.

Their Nation how diſtinguiſhed.

The Nation is diſtinguiſhed by Three Ranks. The Prieſts make the firſt; they come abroad in ſeveral diſtracted Poſtures, ſometimes all naked, plaiſter'd over with Aſhes; their Hair plaited like an Horſe's Tail; at other times appearing leſs barbarous, being covered, but as Stoical in their Behaviour.

The Nairo's.

The ſecond Form is that of the Nobiles, who are all bred Soldiers, and therefore called Nairo's; the one part of them wearing naked Swords rampant in one hand, and a Target made of a Buffola's Hide lacquer'd and curiouſly painted in the other, with which they defend themſelves as aſſuredly as with an Iron Shield; the reſt of them walk with a ſpiked Lance barbed, as long as a Javelin, and poiſed at the But-end with Lead; at darting of which they are very expert.

TheHusbandmen.

The laſt and loweſt are the Artizans and Tillers of the Earth, of which here are no great ſtore, being ever negligent in that they reap the leaſt Benefit by; wherefore their Vaſſals are commonly employed in that ſervice, they being Drudges both to their Maſters and Prince, who here as in all India is ſole Proprietor of Lands; allowing the Occupiers no more than a bare Subſiſtence, and not that when a bad Year fills not the Publick Granaries; drubbing the poor Hinds till their

Bones

Bones rattle in their Skins, they being forced often to ſell their Children for Rice, which is the beſt here on this Coaſt of any place elſe in the whole World. Chap. VI.

In Habit they excel not one another; the Peer as well as Peaſant, wrapping only a Lunga about his Middle, and thence reaching to his Knees. Only their Men of Honour that have deſerved it from the Zamerhin, have their Wriſts rounded with thick golden Bracelets, illuſtrated with Precious Stones. Their Men how clad.

Their Women are nearer white than the Men, of an Olive or Sallow Colour, cloathed as they on Coromandel, ſtretching their Ears with Gold and Gems. Their Women.

In Manners the Natives are ſlovenly enough, if not brutiſh. In Religion moſt Heathens, though the Infection of Mahometiſm is contagious among them. Manners and Religion.

They have Hoſpitals here for Cows; and are charitable to Dogs, providing for them abroad, but not ſuffer them to defile them within Doors; being more merciful to Beaſts than Men. Hoſpitals for Cows.

Of Chriſtians here are not an inconſiderable number. Here are alſo thoſe Elephant-Legged St. Thomeans, which the unbiaſſed Enquirers will tell you chances to them two ways: By the Venom of a certain Snake, for which the Jangies or Pilgrims furniſh them with a Factitious Stone (which we call a Snake-ſtone) and is a Counterpoyſon to all deadly Bites; if it ſtick, it attracts the Poyſon; and put it into Milk, it recovers it ſelf again, leaving its virulency therein, diſcovered by its Greenneſs: As alſo by drinking bad Water (to which, as we to the Air, they attribute all Diſeaſes) when they travel over the Sands, and then lying down when they are hot, till the Earth at Night is in a cold ſweat, which penetrating the rarified Cuticle, fixes the Humours by intercepting their free concourſe on that ſide, not to be remedied by any Panacea of their Eſculapian Sectators; it is not much unlike the Elephantiaſis Arabum. St. Thomas Chriſtians.

Their Coins are of Gold; a St. Thomas, 10 s. a Fanam, 7 and ½ of which go to a Dollar, or Petacha: Theſe are Gold. Of Copper, a Buſerook, 20 of which make a Fanam. Coins Current.

The Country is inticing and beautiful, Woody in the Plain, up the Country Mountainous, where grows the Pepper: It is a Berry that is brought forth by a Bind-weed, wedded to a Tree, which it hugs as affectionately as the Ivy does the Oak; it is firſt Green, when dried it is black, and husked white: Long Pepper grows on a Shrub leaved and ſtalked like our Privet. The Pepper.

Their other Trees and Fruits are common with the reſt of India; Rice is their chief Grain.

Beaſts and Fowls, Tame and Wild, are not ſcarce.

The firſt Blackamore Pullen I ever ſaw, were here; the outward Skin was a perfect Negro, the Bones alſo being as black as Jet; under the Skin nothing could be whiter than the Fleſh, more tender, or more grateful. Blackamore Pullen.

After two Nights cold and diſquieted Lodging on the Ground (though under covert of the Engliſh Houſe) and an Helliſh Conſort of Jackalls (a kind of Fox), with the Natives ſinging and roaring all Night long; being drunk with Toddy, the Wine of the Cocoe: I was deſirous to go Aboard; when, it being Evening, the Sea Breezes began Intenſely cold Anights.

Letter I. began to drive the Waves with a great ſurf upon the Shore; inſomuch that our Men could not carry me to the Pinnace, riding at the Grapling without; wherefore hiring a Canoo, the Blacks played the Charon, and I narrowly eſcaped with my Life (being overſet); finding by ſad Experience, that Cold Nights affect even in theſe Hot Countries, as ſenſibly as under the Frozen Bear: Leaving off to wonder at the Natives quivering and quaking after Sun-ſet, wrapping themſelves in a Comby, or Hair-cloath, and the better ſort with Quilts, and making good Fires: For being well drenched in the Sea, the Wind blowing very high, I was almoſt nummed to death before I could reach the Ship. The reaſon of this Coolneſs anights is becauſe the Rains have lately cooled the Air as well as Earth, which alſo may be aſcribed to the Sun's Ecliptick diſtance, as well as the length of the Nights, which are but little longer than the Days; but chiefly to the ſoaking Miſts bedewing the Earth after Sun-ſet.

Latitude of Tanore. Tanore lies in 10 deg. 30 min. North Latitude.

Having taken in what Bales of Pepper this Place afforded; we weighed by Two in the Morning, and by Four in the Afternoon Anchored againſt that Anciently Traded Port of Calicut, in the Latitude of 11 deg. 30 min. North.

Calicut.

Of Calicut.

ASHore the firſt Houſe facing us was the Engliſh; near it were placed ſix ſmall Pieces, reſounding our Salutes at our Entry.

The Portugal Fort overflowed. On the back-ſide lay two great Guns, diſmounted, of Braſs, all that is extant of the Portugal Town and Caſtle (which ran out as far into the Sea as our Ships now ride, near four Miles) overflowed by Water; nothing remaining of it but only what is taken upon Chronicle.

The Story of Calicut. What is alſo left of Calicut, is not equivalent to what might be expected from the gleaning of ſo many Ages of Traffick; unleſs, as Antiquaries eſteem, moſt of thoſe things are Moth-eaten by Time, which Vermin has been plaguy pernicious here: For the City that ſtood upon Stilts, is tripped up, for down it is gone; and the Temple, whoſe Marble Pillars durſt compare with thoſe of Agrippa's in the Roman Pantheon, is Topſy-turvy. And if any one that comes after me, make you believe it to be not above Four Miles in length, and in that not an Houſe befitting a Chriſtian; here and there a Moſque, and Burying Places with Tanks: A good long Bazzar with Traſh, and Ripe Fruit; another with Opium, and Spices of this Coaſt; Changers and Jewellers, unfenced and rude in Building; he tells you but the truth. Indeed it is pleaſantly ſituated under Trees, and it is the Holy See of their Zamerhin or Pope.

Its Condition ſince the Portugals left it. The Citizens are urbane, being trained up to Commerce; but the Trade gone to Goa, along with the Portugals; who at their firſt arrival into this Bay, found more Ships by 500 than we did, without either Chart or Compaſs, who moſt of them tranſported their Commodities to the Red Sea, along the Coaſts; or to the Gulph of Perſia; ſia; and thence they were carried over-land to Scanderoon, Aleppo, or Conſtantinople, unto the Hands of the Venetians, from whom we were ſerved with them; and by that means they gained for themſelves the Power and Greatneſs of their State. Chap. VI.

Since by the Proſperous Attempts of the Portugals about the Cape of good Hope, we are taught to bring them home at a cheaper Rate, whereby theſe Indian Hugſters begin to decline.

For a long time the Portugals kept in with Calicut, and drew a great reſort hither, as well over-land as by Sea; till the Zamerhin, not brooking them as Inmates, ruined their Fortifications, (which occaſioned their remove to Goa), and with them the Fame of Calicut.

Their Coin admits no Copper; Silver Tarrs, 28 of which make a Fanam, paſſing inſtead thereof. Coins.

They have yet a correſpondence with Perſia, as may appear by their Abſees, a Sixteen penny piece of Silver, current among them.

Their Trade in common with India is moſtly for Beetle Nuts, and Cocoe Nuts, for Oyl, which latter they dunging with (Bubſho) Fiſh, the Land-Breezes brought a poyſonous Smell on board Ship cauſed by their putrifying.

Breaking ground hence, the Mountains were grown to that height, that they ſeemed to be the Partition Walls betwixt this World and the Sphere of Fire; for the Sun was a long while after he had gilded the Canopy of Heaven, before he could drive his Steeds over thoſe Olympick Towers with his blazing Orb: Which I take notice of, becauſe the Sun and Stars aſcend the Horizon to the Meridian directly in the Torrid Zone, and ſo deſcend; whereby there is little or no Twilight, as there is nearer the Poles, where they aſcend and deſcend more obliquely. The right aſcent of the Sun to the Meridian.

At Mangalore the Dutch have a Fort, and 6 Miles to the North the French have a Flag flying; within a League off which a Grey Rock extols its hoary Head eight Fathom above Water, navigable on all ſides, juſtly called by us Sacrifice Iſland; in remembrance of a bloody Butchery on ſome Engliſh by the Pirate Malabars, who are the worſt Pickeroons on this Coaſt, going in Fleets, and are ſet out by the Great Men aſhore; the Chief of whom lives at Durmapatan, where we took in fuller and larger Pepper than any yet: They are ſtronger here in Shipping than the reſt; they houſing ſeveral Junks of Burthen, drawn up on the Banks of the River, not yet lanched ſince the Rains; which they always do when they ſet in, keeping them dry all the Winter with the Thatch of Cajans. Several places on the Malaber Coaſt Harbours for Pirates.

Parting from hence, the Mountains above, and the Valleys below were covered with Woods, only now and then Hills of Red Earth were interſperſed (which our Dawbers uſe for Painting) that held on their pace till we were up with Canamore, another Fortreſs of the Dutch: From whence they ſpake Defiance by ſpending three Shots unregarded by us.

From Durmapatam, five Leagues North, lies Phalapatan; where I took Boat, and ſailed up the River with the Laſcars, or Sea-men of the Country; of whom I ſhall ſay no more at preſent, than, that they are a ſhame to our Sailors, who can hardly ever work without horrid Oaths and hideous Curſing and Imprecations; and theſe Moor- Phalapatan.

men,

Letter I.

men, on the contrary, never ſet their Hands to do any Labour, but that they ſing a Pſalm, or Prayer, and conclude at every joint Application to it, Allah, Allah, invoking on the Name of God.

On each ſide upon the Teaming Banks are homely Villages, a plain Dreſs becoming Art, the Servant, where her Miſtreſs, Nature, is ſo coruſcant, here being whole Armies of Trees ſurpriſingly beautiful. Beſides theſe Benefits for Delight, there flow no leſs for Profit; they improving the Commodiouſneſs of the River (which is Sailable round to Durmapatan) by a Free Trade. Six Miles up ſtands Phalapatan, of Building baſe; it is overgrown with the Weeds of Mahometiſm, the Moors planting themſelves here; whoſe King I was ſo lucky to ſee out of my Boat, my Laſcars entreating me to give them leave to go aſhore to provide Victuals in the Buzzar.

The King.

His Meen was Patriarchical, his Head gray, his Beard Snowed with Age, his Raiment white in the Eaſtern Mode. His Son and Heir, a Child, followed him; as he paſſed, the People payed him humble Reſpect; he was without a Guard, it being needleſs where Subjects are Loyal-hearted.

Crocodiles in the River.

The River was full of Aligators, or Crocodiles, which lay basking in the Sun in the Mud on the River's ſide, whom the Natives are fearleſs of; conceiting the Brachmines have power to lay a Spell upon them, that they do no harm. Which, whether true or falſe, 'tis certain they as ſeldom do harm in the Water, as the Tigres in the Woods, over whom they fancy their Prieſts have the ſame prevalency.

Cutty-Cony.

A Mile more up was Cutty-Cony, the fair Palace, as it ſignifies in Malabar; but though it do in their Language, it would not make the Interpretation good in Engliſh, it agreeing but in one particular, that is, the Site. It having the advantage of an Hill, has an eaſy

Its proſpect.

Proſpect over the Water, as broad here as our Thameſis; and over the Verdent Meadows, which ſpread themſelves Weſtward, till Hills of Cardamoms do bound the ſight, running from thence North by Eaſt, while they meet with Mount Sephir (all along unchriſtned Gate) theſe are the minor Cardamoms, and the beſt, if not the only in the World: On the Eaſt a gravelly Foreſt with tall benty Graſs, offers, beſides its taking Look, diverſity of Game; as Hares, wild Boars, Tigres, and wild Elephants, which are dreaded by Travellers, they ſtriking all down before them, Trees as well as Animals: The like Terror is conceived by the craſhing noiſe among the Woods made by the wild Bulls; for all which, 'tis the practice of the Woodmen to dig deep Pits, and cover them with Sads, laid over with Boughs, to entrap them in their headſtrong and unwary Courſe. Monkeys with white Ruffs, and black ſhagged Bodies, looking very gravely, are brought from hence.

On the South a Wood of Jamboes, Mangoes, Cocoes; on the North a Grove of Pepper.

The Gentiles loth to reſign it to the Engliſh.

The Place is now reſigned to the Engliſh, though the Gentiles were unwilling to deſert it, it being an Arch-Brachmine's Seat, where was a ſmall Pagod ſtanding in the middle of the Yard well endowed, till they had robbed their Gods of their Gold and Silver; and now they are ſaid to be dumb and ſullen becauſe of the Engliſh. But without any prejudice to Truth, we may believe the Uſurers Faith and theirs to be both under one Lock and Key; Quantum nummorum habet in arcâ, tantum habet & fidei. Chap. VI.

and

It is walled about by the Engliſh with Mud, except the two round Points towards the Land, whoſe Foundations and Baſtions are of Stone. They have Fourteen ſmall Guns mounted; here are twenty two Soldiers, beſides Factors: The Air ſo ſalubrious, that never any Engliſh are remembred to lay their Bones here. The Fort is a Tetragone from Corner to Corner. The Engliſh Fort.

Without, beſides the Engliſh, there are a ſelect Company of Nairoes, who are ſtout, ready, and reſolute for any Action: Their Weapons are Bows and Arrows, with Falchions by their ſides.

By theſe the Countrey is inhabited; among whom if a Man fall ſingle, ſalvage Beaſts are more compaſſionate; but if you have but a Boy with you of their Caſt, you may travel ſecure enough. Unſafe travelling without a Nairo.

Beyond the Outworks live a few Portugals Muſteroes or Miſteradoes; among whom are Stews and Brothels; the Women of this Coaſt being the moſt profeſſedly Lewd of any; being ſaid to inſtruct the Men to be Patients, while they act the Maſculine Part in their Laſcivious Twines. Naughtineſs of their Women.

Sixteen Tarrs here make one Fanam; Nine Fanams one Piece of Eight; four Caſh are the eighth part of one Rupee. Coins.

Outſtretching the Malabar Coaſt, we ſailed along by Batticalai on the Canatick Coaſts; and the next Morning, between two Iſlands we ſaw ſculking Six Malabar Proes waiting their Booty; but making uſe of their Oars as well as Sails, ſoon outſtripped us. Left the Malabar Coaſt.

The Day after we came to an Anchor at Onor, the Land Hilly and Barren, which I went to ſee; it is in 13 deg. 10 min. North. We paſſed to it through a narrow Bite, which expatiates into a wide Swallow, and then thruſts us up the River. On the North ſide a Bow and Arrow Caſtle overlooks it, while it runs peaceably to the Town. Where we landed, the Dutch had a Houſe, and a new Junk lanched, with her Colours furl'd: One end of the Town ſtands in an hole; over a Rocky Hill ſtands the other part, upon which the Caſtle with its Stone Wall faces an Heath a great way, yet looking aſquint on the Under-woods. It is built after the exact Rules of Ancient Fortifications, with a Drawbridge, and a Moat round, now a dry Ditch, the Caſtle without Soldiers, falling to decay. It was built by the Portugals, ſeized by the Canareens by the help of the Dutch, between whom and the Portugals, the Town of poor Buildings is divided: Many of the Natives have receiv'd the Chriſtian Faith. Though thoſe that continue in their Paganiſm are the moſt impiouſly Religious of any of the Indians, being too too converſant with the Devil. Onor the firſt Land we touched on the Canatick Shore.

The Nairoes have no footing here, nor have the Moors much.

They live in no diffidence of one another, nor Strangers of them, journeying among them without a Guide, in Broad Roads, not in By-Paths, as in the Nations properly called the Malabars: They have well-conſtituted Laws, and obſerve them obediently.

From hence we came to Mirja in the ſame Dominions. I went to view the Place; the Boat that carried me was Brigantine built. At Mirja the Protector of Canora came aboard.

At the Entry into the Harbour only a Rock withſtands the Waſhes, but on the Shore huge craggy Mountains are drawn up for a ſecond Letter I. Onſet, all of Black Stone, yet ſomewhat undermined by the beating of the Sea, where it works its ſelf into a Syrtes; on the other ſide of which the Fragments of the Town are ſhelter'd. At my Landing, one of their Princes was the firſt that welcomed me aſhore, (who here as well as in Italy ſcorn not to be Merchants); he was ſeated under a ſhady Tree, on a Carpet ſpread upon the Sand, and his Retinue ſtanding about him; he it ſeems was expecting the Protector of Canara (the Raja being in Minority), who came anon, with his Lords and Guards, armed with Swords and Gantlets, Partizans adorned with Bells and Feathers, as alſo were the Horſes that carried his Luſcarry or Army, with ſuch Trappings as our fineſt Team-Horſes in England wear.

His obſtreporous Muſick. He ventured off to Sea to ſee our Ships; he was rowed by a Gang of 36, in a great deal of Pomp; his Muſick was loud, and with the Kettle-drums made a Noiſe not unlike that our Coopers make on their Hogſheads driving home their Hoops: He went aboard two or three Ships, who entertained him with their Guns and Chears of their Men, preſenting him with Scarlet Cloath. He is a Gentile, as are his Subjects.

Our Lading. Our Lading here was Pepper, Salt-Petre, and Beetle-Nut for Surat.

In our way from Mirja we met with a Man of War Pink, commiſſion'd from the Preſident for the ſcowring theſe Seas, which had 22 Guns, and ſeventy odd Men, the Name, The Revenge.

Near Carwar is the Iſland Angediva, Fam'd for the Burial of ſome Hundreds of our Countreymen.

Carwar the Chief Port of Viſiapour, now in the hands of Seva Gi. Carwar was the Chief Port of Viſiapour on this Coaſt, but a Grand Traytor to that King Seva Gi, is now Maſter of it, and the adjacent Countrey as far as Guzerat; having well nigh forced our Factory, and done other Outrages on us, which would ask our Fleet a longer time to require Satisfaction, if they were able, than they could ſtay; unleſs they would loſe their Paſſage round the Cape of Good Hope, and content themſelves to winter at the Mauritius, which all Ships that outſtay their time are forced to. For the Sun being almoſt at his Southern Solſtice, at his return he leaves a ſharp Winter (which we proved), and adverſe Winds in thoſe Seas, they lying without the Tropick, which ſpurs them on for expedition. What this Seva Gi is, and the reaſon of his Uſurped Power, a longer Duration in the Countrey muſt declare, who is every where named with Terror, he carrying all before him like a mighty Torrent.

The Shore is Hilly, and indifferent Woody; near it Iſlets are ſcattered to and again.

The People partly Moors, partly Gentues. The People partly Moors, partly Gentues, under the King of Viſiapour, who was, till this turbulent Seva Gi drove all into a Commotion, a perfect Monarch, hardly paying the Mogul Tribute, when Duccan and Viſiapour were united into one Kingdom.

Hence it is Hilly up to Guzerat; though Gates hold on where the Coaſts of Guzerat begin, and outſtretches them.

Goa. Fifteen Leagues to the Norward of Carwar lies Goa, the only place of conſequence the Portugals retain of their firſt Diſcoveries.

The City lies up the River, out of our ſight on Shipboard, though we could diſcern the River to be thwacked with ſmall Craft; without out the Bar a great Carrack unrigg'd, and on both ſides the River Magnificent Structures. The Soil Fat, Level, and fit for the Share many Miles together, the Hills keeping a wide diſtance from them. Chap. VI.

About two days after we paſſed Goa, a Ship with a Portugal Flag at the Main Top-Maſt Head weathered our Admiral, and after ſeeing what we were, lay by for a Fleet of ſix more good Ships, one Hoy, and half a dozen Proes, being their Northern Armado; they fitting out one for the South alſo; the one againſt the Arabs, the other againſt the Malabars. The Portugal Armado.

The beginning of December the North Weſt Wind blew bitter cold upon us, and would hardly give the Sun leave to be Maſter in his own home; though a Cloud in the day time, ever ſince the Rains cleared up, could hardly vapour betwixt him and the Earth. Sharply Cold.

At Nights we had hoſpitable Lights ſhewed us from the Shore, to mark out the Rocks, which lye very thick along to intrap the unwary Pilot. Light-houſes.

In 17 deg. 20 min. North, lies Rajapore, a French Factory now, formerly Engliſh. Rajapour.

Twenty Miles to the Northward, Choul, a Fortreſs of the Portugals, lay fair in ſight. Choul.

And having the Latitude of 18 deg. 40 min. North, Bombaim opened its ſelf; the Tide being ſpent, we came to an Anchor without the Bay, not having our Bearings right; and December the Eighth we paid our Homage to the Union-Flag flying on the Fort of Bombaim.

The BAY

Is indented a vaſt Circumference, in which it is able to contain 1000 of the beſt Ships in Europe, in ſafe Harbour from Wind and Weather. As we paſſed up the Bay, two of the Mogul's Men of War, each 300 Tun, with bloody Colours out, rode before Kerenjau. Under the Caſtle, beſides innumerable little Veſſels, as Hoys, Ketches, and the like, lay Three Men of War, with their Top Armour out, Waſte-Cloath and Penants at every Yard-Arm; to wit, The Revenge, 22 Guns: The May-boon, taken from the Dutch, 220 Tuns: The Hunter, 14 Guns. Bombaim.

The Caſtle is ſeated towards the bottom of the Bay, commanding it every way from the Points and Flankiers.

At Evening the next day I was ſent for on Shore, and received by the Honourable Gerald Aungier, Governor both for the King and Company, and Preſident of all the Eaſt-Indies.

Thus after a plenary Anniverſary, this Voyage was accompliſhed; and juſt that Day Twelvemonth you left me Aboard Ship at Graveſend, I ſet foot on Shore at Bombaim, where for this Shipping I remain

AN HISTORICAL ACCOUNT OF BOMBAIM, And the Parts Adjacent.

LETTER II.

CHAP. I.

Mentions the Island and its Possessors.

SIR,

BY the Falcon (in which Ship I am now taking my Passage to Surat) I received at once the News of your good health, and that welcome one of Peace with Holland; the first I embrace as a Friend, the other I congratulate with all good Men. Chap. I.

Nulla salus Bello, Pacem te poscimus omnes.

I shall neither apologize for my long Letter, or sending this before you give me your Thoughts of the former; the Distance of Place shall excuse both: And I proceed where you left me last, at Bombaim, and so on till these Ships shall depart for England.

BOMBAIM

In East-India is one of the Islands of Salset, parted from that part of the Canarick Coast which lies neareſt Duccan, 60 Leagues North of Goa, and as many South of Surat. These Islands are in number seven; viz Bombaim, Canorein, Trumbay, Elephanto, the Putachoes, Munchumbay, and Kerenjau, with the Rock of Henry Kenry; arising as so many Mountains out of the Sea; which accords to the Fancy of the Natives, who affirm that Nereus has lost these Islets, with a great deal more of the Low-Lands, from his Trident, the Earth gaining upon the Sea: And as a Remonstrance of their Credulity, they bring for proof the vast Rocks that are many Miles up the Countrey, bestuck with Oyster-shells and other Trophies of the Sea's having Islands of Salset, in number seven.

Letter II.

having had once Dominion there, all which they call Conchon, or the Netherlands.

Their Situation.

In whoſe opening Arm, that is, from Choul Point to Baçein (two famous Cities belonging to the Portugals) ſome 30 Leagues diſtance, lye thoſe Spots of Ground, ſtill diſputable to which ſide to incline: For at Low Water moſt of them are foordable to the Main, or from one to the other; and at Spring-Tides again a great part of them overflowed.

The Bay makes the moſt commodious Port in India.

Bombaim is the firſt that faces Choul, and ventures fartheſt out into the Sea, making the Mouth of a ſpacious Bay, from whence it has its Etymology; Bombaim, quaſi Boon Bay.

Beyond it lies Canorein, Trumbay, Munchumbay, with their Creeks, making up the North ſide of the Bay: Between whom and the Main lies Elephanto, Kerenjau, Putachoes, with the great Rock or barren Iſlet of Henry Kenry: Theſe, with ſome part of the Main, conſtitute the South-Eaſt ſide of the Bay; all which together contribute to the moſt notable and ſecure Port on the Coaſts of India; Ships of the greateſt as well as ſmaller Burthen having quiet Harbour in it; whither if they can, they chuſe to betake themſelves, if they happen, as oft they do, to loſe their Voyages by the Monſoons.

From whence the Iſland is called Bombaim.

From whence theſe Pieces of Land receive their general Name of Salſet, if it be worth Enquiry, I can only gueſs, either becauſe it ſignifies in Canorein a Granary, as they are to the Portugals North of Goa, and ſometimes to Goa it ſelf, as at this time, when their Armado of Rice was all loſt, which annually uſed to furniſh them with Proviſions of Corn; or elſe analogically, from the fruitful Peninſula of the ſame Name, near which Goa its ſelf ſtands: But whether this be certain or not, the reaſon of the Denomination of Bombaim is convincing.

What Import this Iſland is to the Engliſh.

To go on then from whence we deviated, it is neceſſary you ſhould be firſt acquainted, That after Vaſquez de Gama, in the Year 1547, had laid open theſe Seas for Traffick to the Eaſt-Indies; the Portugals to their Honour took for a while ſure Footing of what they had induſtriouſly ſo long laboured for, and brought moſt of the Borderers on the Sea-Coaſts under their Subjection; not all India, as they have fondly reported. It ſuffices then, to avoid a Volume of Diſcourſe, that Bombaim with theſe Iſlets continued ſtill in their hands, until the Year 1661, when the Crown of Portugal parted with theſe, together with the Haven, to His Majeſty of Great Britain, as a Portion of the Dowry of Donna Infanta Catherina, Siſter to the King of Portugal, and Conſort to Charles the Second, late King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland. A matter of great Import to the Kingdom, had it been transferred according to Contract, as well in regard to the Protection of our Ships, as for the Profit of the Soil to the Engliſh Inhabitants; but moſt of all for the Awe it might impoſe upon them, who are the Diſturbers of our Trade here.

The Portugals loth to part with it.

But upon what grounds they refuſed to ſurrender, may be underſtood, if we conſider the different Intereſts, as well as Remoteneſs of the Portugueze in Europe and Eaſt-India. It is confeſſed they will talk big of their King, and how nearly allied to them, as if they were all Couſin-Germans at leaſt; but for his Commands, if con-

contrary to their Factions, they value no more than if they were merely titular; as may appear by what follows. For notwithstanding the King of England sent a Fleet of Five Royal Ships under the Command of my Lord of Malbery, to waft over a Vice-Roy for them, confirmed so by their own King, and one of their own Nation; and to take possession of these Islands in the name of the King of England; yet they not only positively denied to surrender, but constrained the Vice-Roy to a negation; otherwise to expect never to assume that Dignity, which, by that Act they made him sensible, was more in their disposal than the King's.

The English Fleet go to Swally.

Whereupon Malbery examining his Commission, was vexed he was pinched, and knew not how to ease himself; wearied therefore with Delays, he retreated to Swally, and there upon the Sands set the Souldery on Shore (himself not stirring out of the Ship) Five hundred stout Men led by Sir Abraham Shipman, who was designed Generalissimo for the King of England on the Indian Shore: Where, when in Arms, and exercised after the English Training, they seemed formidable to the Moors; wherefore they are entreated by the President for the English Factory at Surat, Sir George Oxendine, that they would repair Aboard; since the Jealousy of the Moors was such, that unless they did, they vowed the Factory a Sacrifice.

Thence to Angediva.

Thus bidding adieu to Swally, they at length arrived at Angediva, a Barren unhealthy and uninhabited Island, not far from the Main, and but 12 Leagues to the Southward of Goa.

The Portugals brought to yield up Bombaim.

Where Malbery left them to negotiate the Right of his Master; so much of which at last they were brought to grant, as enforced them to deliver up Bombaim, though they capitulated for that too; parcelling it out into little Islets, made only by the inundations of the Sea: But were glad at length when they saw Malbery resolute, to resign the whole Island, with the Bay, into the hands of the English, upon the Conditions first assented to, that the Royalties should belong to the King of England, but every particular Man's Estate to the Right Owner, and the Liberty of their own Ceremonies in Religion, upon their Oath of Allegiance.

Mortality of English at Angediva.

In the mean while Sir Abraham, with near 300 of his best Men, rested content without any farther Acquests, leaving their Bones at Angediva; poysoned partly by the noisomeness of the Air, the violence of the Rains, and the little defence against them; but chiefly by their own Intemperance.

The Fleet with the remaining English take possession of the Island.

Mr. Cook being next to Sir Abraham, took up his Commission, who with those Men that were left, was admitted upon Bombaim in the Year 1664. when the Royal Fleet returned.

Where at first landing they found a pretty well Seated, but ill Fortified House, four Brass Guns being the whole Defence of the Island; unless a few Chambers housed in small Towers in convenient Places to scowre the Malabars, who heretofore have been more insolent than of late; adventuring not only to seize their Cattle, but depopulate whole Villages by their Outrages; either destroying them by Fire and Sword, or compelling to a worse Fate, Eternal and intolerable Slavery.

The Fort raised.

About the House was a delicate Garden, voiced to be the pleasantest in India, intended rather for wanton Dalliance, Love's Artillery, lery, than to make reſiſtance againſt an invading Foe: For the Portugals generally forgetting their priſtine Vertue, Luſt, Riot and Rapine, the enſuing Conſequences of a long undiſturbed Peace where Wealth abounds, are the only Remarkable Reliques of their Ancient worth; their Courages being ſo much effeminated, that it is a wonder to moſt how they keep any thing; if it were not that they have lived among mean ſpirited Neighbours. But to return to this Garden of Eden, or Place of Terreſtrial Happineſs, it would put the Searchers upon as hard an Inqueſt, as the other has done its Poſterity: The Walks which before were covered with Nature's verdent awning, and lightly preſſed by ſoft Delights, are now open to the Sun, and loaded with the hardy Cannon: The Bowers dedicated to Reſt and Eaſe, are turned into bold Rampires for the watchful Centinel to look out on; every Tree that the Airy Choriſters made their Charming Choir, trembles, and is extirpated at the rebounding Ecco of the alarming Drum; and thoſe ſlender Fences only deſigned to oppoſe the Sylvian Herd, are thrown down to erect others of a more War-like Force. But all this not in one day.

Letter II.

It was ſufficient at firſt for the Engliſh to make preparations for a growing Strength, though at preſent ſuch as might offend as well as defend.

A Governour ſent out by the King.

Whilſt things were in this poſture upon ſome Male-adminiſtration of his Office, Cook was outed, and Sir Gervis Lucas was ſent over by the King; who, had he lived, would have made the Portugals perform their Compact, ſeizing from them the Putachos, who to ſtop his Mouth, were willing to comply for the Cuſtoms of Trumbay.

The Government tranſferred to the Eaſt-India Company.

Upon his deceaſe Captain Gary was impowered by the King; who began to act as Vice-Roy, carrying his Chair of State about with him; but his Majeſty finding it expenſive to bear out this Man's Pride, and in the caſting up Accounts, not available to him, only to the Commanders of his Majeſty's Ships, who by their own Adventures made good Improvements; and the Eaſt-India Company thereby began to be ſenſible that their Trade would be impaired in the vending their Commodities at home, and their Ships in India little bettered by the King's Port in India; and above all, they being liable to be Sufferers for the Hoſtilities committed by his Majeſty's Officers on the Indians (who underſtand no diſtinction between King and Company) they as freely ſupplicated for, what his Majeſty was as willing to grant, the Iſland: They holding it, from that time, of his Majeſty about four years after the King had poſſeſſed it, they defraying all Charges.

In this Exigency on either ſide, the Martial as well as Civil Affairs, are wholly devolved on the Merchants; and now how they will manage the Sword as well as the Quill, concernes them.

The Old Soldiers ſtomach the Yoke of the Company's Servants.

The Old Soldiers are conſtrained to ſubmit, or disband, which makes them ſtomach a hard Service under harder Maſters: For beſides that natural Antipathy betwixt the Subtilty of the one, and Generoſity of the other; the ſtupendious elevation of their Servants on this new acquired Power thrown into their hands, Men, moſt of them of no Experience or Education, coming young hither, but what they learn from a Luxurious and Griping People, whoſe Government quadrates not with a Britiſh Militia: It will not be eaſy to conceive, conceive, as well from the incoherence of Diſpoſitions, as the Lordly Government of a Servant, what Grudges or Miſcarriages may be produced? For where the Soldiers and Generals have different Intereſts, and mutual Obligation is interrupted, the courſe of things muſt neceſſarily run counter: Moreover, where they ſhould be moſt eminent in Dangers and Aſſaults, and lead them on to bold Enterprizes; yet if a tenderneſs to Self-preſervation ſtep in between the Publick Honour and Safety, (as it always does, where that bane to Noble Actions, Covetouſneſs, is concomitant) and which is almoſt eſſential to a Merchant, a fear of being laught at for venturing too far; the Caſe is deſperate. For Inſtance, Our Ten Ships, moſt of them hired by Merchants, and the Commanders ſome of them (not to ſay all, for there were of them as worthy Men as any in the World) Principal Owners, were more willing to ſhift for themſelves, than to hazard a ſtout and unanimous Reſiſtance: Which had they maintained boldly, as they imprudently gave the firſt Onſet (by the Hollanders own confeſſion) they had gained a Victory never to be ſuſtained by them, nor for our Fleet ſufficiently to have been recompenſed; whereas for want of wiſe Conduct, and a joint Defence, they impreſſed on themſelves and Nation a Blur never to be wiped off. Yet ſuch, by the Conſtitution of the Company it ſelf, is the preſent Misfortune, that inſtant Gain is preferred before Glory or a future emolument; which is the reaſon, why they are leſs ſolicitous for ſetling by Power, what they muſt ever be forced to beg, a Trade; and comply with Injuries, than command a Submiſſion, as the Dutch do: But here alſo being left Tenants at will, they think it enough to leave Buſineſs in no worſe plight than they found it.

And here might be conſidered, Whether it were not more for the Publick Welfare, ſhould His Majeſty be pleaſed to make it a Royal Company, or a National Concern, as the Hollanders is; than to let it be at the will of the Company under the forementioned Circumſtances to impoſe Governours on the Iſland.

Governours for the Company.

The firſt of which was Sir George Oxendine, who being Preſident, and therefore more immediatly requiſite for him to reſide at Surat, ordered Mr. Goodyeer, his Deputy, to govern Bombaim; but Sir George not long after finiſhing his days, together with his Preſidency at Surat, Goodyeer haſtens thither in hopes to ſucceed, when gaping for that which included this, he is excluded of both: Upon which account there happened an Interregnum at Bombaim; whereby this Body Politick grew up into an Anarchy, and ſet upon its weak Limbs a Quintuple Head, called Commiſſioners, who were as followeth, viz. Mr. James Adams, Chairman, (outed in two days) Mr. Sterling, a Scotch Miniſter, Mr. Cotes, Captain Burgeſs, Lieutenant Houghton; who upon the juſt and happy choice of the Honourable Gerald Aungier, were diſſolved; and Mr. Matthew Grey nominated Deputy, till the Company ſent out Captain Young, who had it not long before Mr. Philip Gyfford was put in; who deſerves to be remembred for his great care in raiſing the Baſtions, and in a manner finiſhing, what always was ſtill but beginning by the reſt. He ruled three Years, when the Company thinking their Work to go on too faſt, gave the Charge of Deputy-Governour to Captain Shaxton, and an handſome Recruit of Soldiers; which revived the not yet extinguiſhed Fewd between the Merchants and the Soldiers: Whereupon Shaxton was kept from it a full year; and in that Interim, the Preſident diſtaſted at the Inſolencies of the Mogul's Governour at Surat, and fearing a ſecond Confuſion of Government at Bombaim, together foreſeeing Clouds gathering from the Netherlands, not minding ſo much thoſe of the Seaſon (the Muſſoons being about to enter) inſomuch, that narrowly eſcaping a Dangerous Voyage, he came and took the Government himſelf in the Year 1671. where theſe three Years he has regulated Affairs with that Prudence, that whereas he found a Diſaffected and Incongruous Council, he has now knit them into a Bond of at leaſt ſeeming Friendſhip; and does daily ſtudy to advance the Company's Intereſt, and the good and ſafety of the People under him.

Letter II.

Strength of the Iſland.

To this the Hollanders are witneſs; for the Spring before our Fleet arrived (the ſame Fleet that we unfortunately engaged) the Dutch attempting to ſurprize the Iſlanders, found them and the Fort in ſo good a Condition, that they were glad to betake themſelves to their Boats without any Booty, and the next day hoiſted Sails (for, ſaid they, Bombaim been as ſtark as de Deel) and not without good reaſon; for within the Fort were mounted 120 Pieces of Ordnance, and in other convenient Stands 20 more, beſides 60 Field-pieces ready in their Carriages upon occaſion to attend the Militia and Bandarines. To the Fort then belonged 300 Engliſh, and 400 Topazes, or Portugal Firemen: To the Militia out of Portugal muſters 500 under Engliſh Leaders, all well armed: Of Bandarines (that lookt after the Woods of Cocoes) with Clubs and other Weapons, 300. Beſides ſome Thouſands more would make a Shew, but not to be relied on, ſhould it come to the puſh. Moreover in the Road were riding Three Men of War, the beſt of 30 Guns.

The Fort ill contrived.

Thus were they provided at our Arrival; nor were their Forces leſſened by our coming. Since which a Trench out of the hard Rock the Fort is founded on, is digging to Moat it with the Sea: And they are deviſing Horn-works for its better ſecurity; a thing, to ſpeak truly, of greater undertaking and expence than ever to endure accompliſhing by the Company; and without it, it will prove a thing of ill contrivance, it being ſtraitned for room to receive a ſufficient number of Defendants, and worſe ſupplied with Water for Store, or Granaries for Proviſion for a Siege. The firſt Modellers were to blame in not enlarging it to a Tank that ſtands without the Parade, which they might have done with almoſt the ſame Charges.

The Town.

From whence let us walk the Rounds. At diſtance enough lies the Town, in which confuſedly live the Engliſh, Portugueze, Topazes, Gentues, Moors, Cooly Chriſtians, moſt Fiſhermen.

It is a full Mile in length, the Houſes are low, and Thatched with Oleas of the Cocoe-Trees, all but a few the Portugals left, and ſome few the Company have built, the Cuſtom-houſe and Ware-houſes are Tiled or Plaſtered, and inſtead of Glaſs, uſe Panes of Oiſter-ſhells for their Windows (which as they are cut in Squares, and poliſhed, look gracefully enough.) There is alſo a reaſonable handſome Buzzar.

At the end of the Town looking into the Field, where Cows and Buffoloes graze, the Portugals have a pretty Houſe and Church, with Orchards

Orchards of Indian Fruit adjoining. The Engliſh have only a Burying-Place, called Mendam's-Point, from the firſt Man's Name there interr'd, where are ſome few Tombs that make a pretty Shew at entring the Haven; but neither Church or Hoſpital, both which are mightily to be deſired.

Freſh Water-ſprings ſcarce.

There are no Freſh Water Rivers, or falling Streams of living Water: The Water drank is uſually Rain-water preſerved in Tanks, which decaying, they are forced to dig Wells, into which it is ſtrained, hardly leaving its brackiſh Taſte; ſo that the better ſort have it brought from Maſſegoung, where is only one freſh Spring.

Woods of Cocoes.

On the backſide of the Towns of Bombaim and Maijm, are Woods of Cocoes (under which inhabit the Banderines, thoſe that prune and cultivate them), theſe Hortoes being the greateſt Purchaſe and Eſtates on the Iſland, for ſome Miles together, till the Sea break in between them: Overagainſt which, up the Bay a Mile, lies Maſſegoung, a great Fiſhing-Town, peculiarly notable for a Fiſh called Bumbelo, the Suſtenance of the Poorer ſort, who live on them and Batty, a courſe ſort of Rice, and the Wine of the Cocoe, called Toddy. The Ground between this and the great Breach is well ploughed, and bears good Batty. Here the Portugals have another Church and Religious Houſe belonging to the Franciſcans.

Portugal Churches.

Beyond it is Parell, where they have another Church, and Demeſnes belonging to the Jeſuits; to which appertains Siam, manured by Columbeens, Husbandmen, where live the Fraſſes, or Porters alſo; each of which Tribes have a Mandadore, or Superintendent, who give an account of them to the Engliſh, and being born under the ſame degree of Slavery, are generally more Tyrannical than a Stranger would be towards them; ſo that there needs no other Taſkmaſter than one of their own Tribe, to keep them in awe by a rigid Subjection.

Salt-Pans.

Under theſe Uplands the Waſhes of the Sea produce a Lunary Tribute of Salt, left in Pans or Pits made on purpoſe at Spring-Tides for the overflowing; and when they are full, are incruſtated by the heat of the Sun. In the middle, between Parell, Maijm, Sciam, and Bombaim, is an Hollow, wherein is received a Breach running at three ſeveral places, which drowns 40000 Acres of good Land, yielding nothing elſe but Samphire; athwart which, from Parell to Maijm, are the Ruins of a Stone Cawſey made by Pennances.

Maijm.

At Maijm the Portugals have another compleat Church and Houſe; the Engliſh a pretty Cuſtom-houſe and Guard-houſe: The Moors alſo a Tomb in great Veneration for a Peor, or Prophet, inſtrumental to the quenching the Flames approaching their Prophet's Tomb at Mecha (though he was here at the ſame time) by the Fervency of his Prayers.

Salveſong.

At Salveſong, the fartheſt part of this Inlet, the Franciſcans enjoy another Church and Convent; this ſide is all covered with Trees of Cocoes, Jawks, and Mangoes; in the middle lies Verulee, where the Engliſh have a Watch.

Malabar-hill.

On the other ſide of the great Inlet, to the Sea, is a great Point abutting againſt Old Woman's Iſland, and is called Malabar-hill, a Rocky, Woody Mountain, yet ſends forth long Graſs. A-top of all is a Parſy Tomb lately reared; on its Declivity towards the Sea, the Remains of a ſtupendious Pagod, near a Tank of Freſh Water, which the Malabars viſited it moſtly for.

Bigneſs of the Iſland.

Thus have we compleated our Rounds, being in the Circumference Twenty Miles, the Length Eight, taking in Old Woman's Iſland, which is a little low barren Iſland, of no other Profit, but to keep the Company's Antelopes, and other Beaſts of Delight.

A mixt People.

The People that live here are a Mixture of moſt of the Neighbouring Countries, moſt of them Fugitives and Vagabonds, no account being here taken of them: Others perhaps invited hither (and of them a great number) by the Liberty granted them in their ſeveral Religions; which here are ſolemnized with Variety of Fopperies (a Toleration conſiſtent enough with the Rules of Gain), though both Moors and Portugals deſpiſe us for it; here licenſed out of Policy, as the old Numidians to build up the greateſt Empire in the World. Of theſe, one among another, may be reckoned 60000 Souls; more by 50000 than the Portugals ever could. For which Number this Iſland is not able to find Proviſions, it being moſt of it a Rock above Water, and of that which is overflowed, little hopes to recover it. However, it is well ſupplied from abroad both with Corn and Meat at reaſonable Rates; and there is more Fleſh killed for the Engliſh alone here in one Month, than in Surat for a Year for all the Moors in that Populous City.

Engliſh Government.

The Government here now is Engliſh; the Soldiers have Martial Law: The Freemen, Common; the chief Arbitrator whereof is the Preſident, with his Council at Surat; under him is a Juſticiary, and Court of Pleas, with a Committee for Regulation of Affairs, and preſenting all Complaints.

Power and State of the Preſident.

The Preſident has a large Commiſſion, and is Vice-Regis; he has a Council here alſo, and a Guard when he walks or rides abroad, accompanied with a Party of Horſe, which are conſtantly kept in the Stables, either for Pleaſure or Service. He has his Chaplains, Phyſician, Chyrurgeons, and Domeſticks; his Linguiſt, and Mint-Maſter: At Meals he has his Trumpets uſher in his Courſes, and Soft Muſick at the Table: If he move out of his Chamber, the Silver Staves wait on him; if down Stairs, the Guard receive him; if he go abroad, the Bandarines and Moors under two Standards march before him: He goes ſometimes in his Coach, drawn by large Milk-White Oxen, ſometimes on Horſeback, other times in Palenkeens, carried by Cohors, Muſſlemen Porters: Always having a Sumbrero of State carried over him: And thoſe of the Engliſh inferior to him, have a ſuitable Train.

An unhealthy Climate.

But for all this Gallantry, I reckon they walk but in Charnel-houſes, the Climate being extremely Unhealthy; at firſt thought to be cauſed by Bubſho, rotten Fiſh; but though that be prohibited, yet it continues as Mortal: I rather impute it to the Situation, which cauſes an Infecundity in the Earth, and a Putridneſs in the Air, what being produced ſeldom coming to Maturity, whereby what is eaten is undigeſted; whence follows Fluxes, Dropſy, Scurvy, Barbiers (which is an enervating the whole Body, being neither able to uſe Hands or Feet) Gout, Stone, Malignant and Putrid Fevers, which are Endemial Diſeaſes: Among the worſt of theſe, Fool Rack (Brandy made of Blubber, or Carvil, by the Portugals, becauſe becauſe it ſwims always in a Blubber, as if nothing elſe were in it; but touch it, and it ſtings like Nettles; the latter, becauſe ſailing on the Waves it bears up like a Portugal Carvil: It is, being taken, a Gelly, and diſtilled cauſes thoſe that take it to be Fools), and Foul Women may be reckoned.

Engliſh Women no good Nurſes.

To prevent the latter of which, and to propagate their Colony, the Company have ſent out Engliſh Women; but they beget a ſickly Generation; and as the Dutch well obſerve, thoſe thrive better that come of an European Father and Indian Mother: Which (not to reflect on what Creatures are ſent abroad) may be attributed to their living at large, not debarring themſelves Wine and Strong Drink, which immoderately uſed, inflames the Blood, and ſpoils the Milk in theſe Hot Countries, as Ariſtotle long ago declared. The Natives abhor all heady Liquors, for which reaſon they prove better Nurſes.

The Air agreeable to the Country People.

Notwithſtanding this Mortality to the Engliſh, the Country People and naturalized Portugals live to a good Old Age, ſuppoſed to be the Reward of their Temperance; indulging themſelves neither in Strong Drinks, nor devouring Fleſh as we do. But I believe rather we are here, as Exotick Plants brought home to us, not agreeable to the Soil: For to the Luſtier and Freſher, and oftentimes the Temperateſt, the Clime more unkind; but to Old Men and Women it ſeems to be more ſuitable.

Few return home.

Happy certainly then are thoſe, and only thoſe, brought hither in their Nonage, before they have a Guſt of our Albion; or next to them, ſuch as intoxicate themſelves with Læthe, and remember not their former Condition: When it is expoſtulated, Is this the Reward of an harſh and ſevere Pupilage? Is this the Elyſium after a tedious Waſtage? For this, will any thirſt, will any contend, will any forſake the Pleaſures of his Native Soil, in his Vigorous Age, to bury himſelf alive here? Were it not more charitable at the firſt Bubbles of his Infant-Sorrows, to make the next Stream over-ſwell him? Or elſe if he muſt be full grown for Miſery, how much more compaſſionate were it to expoſe him to an open Combat with the fierceſt Duellists in Nature, to ſpend at once his Spirits, than to wait a piecemeal'd Conſumption? Yet this abroad and unknown, is the ready Choice of thoſe to whom Poverty threatens Contempt at home: What elſe could urge this wretched Remedy? For theſe are untrodden Paths for Knowledge, little Improvement being to be expected from Barbarity. Cuſtom and Tradition are only Venerable here; and it is Hereſy to be wiſer than their Forefathers; which Opinion is both bred and hatch'd by an innate Sloth; ſo that though we ſeem nearer the Heavens, yet Bodies here are more Earthy, and the Mind wants that active Fire that always mounts, as if it were extinguiſh'd by its Antipariſtaſis: Whereby Society and Communication, the Characteriſtick of Man is wholly loſt. What then is to be expected here, where ſordid Thrift is the only Science? After which, notwithſtanding there is ſo general an Inqueſt, few there be acquire it: For in Five hundred, One hundred ſurvive not; of that One hundred, one Quarter get not Eſtates; of thoſe that do, it has not been recorded above One in Ten Years has ſeen his Country: And in this difficulty it would hardly be worth a Sober Man's while, much leſs an Ingenuous Man's, who ſhould not defile his purer Thoughts, to be wholly taken up with ſuch mean (not to ſay indirect) Contemplations; however, a neceſſary Adjunct, Wealth, may prove to buoy him up on the Surface of Repute, leſt the Vulgar ſerve him as Æſop's Frogs did their firſt rever'd Deity.

What Credit it bears with its Neighbours.

Thus much being premiſed for what concerns the Iſland its ſelf, it remains to ſpeak of it with relation to the Credit it bears among its Neighbours: The Dutch caſt an envious Eye on it, and were it in their hands, would doubtleſs make it render all it is capable; and in reſpect of Commerce it ſeems to offer many Conveniences; the Banyans liking it better than Surat, living freer, and under milder Taxations, which they put the preſent Preſident in ſome hopes of complying with, could he open the way from hence up the Country: but that depending on ſo many Intricacies, muſt be not only a work of Time, but Power to bring to paſs; as afterwards may fall more properly in our way to make appear.

Our preſent Concern then is with the Portugal, Seva Gi, and the Mogul: From the firſt is deſired no more than a mutual Friendſhip; from the ſecond, an Appearance only; from the laſt, a nearer Commerce: The firſt and ſecond become neceſſary for Proviſions for the Belly, and Building; the third for the Groſs of our Trade: Wherefore Offices of Civility muſt be performed to each of theſe; but they ſometimes interfering, are the occaſion of Jealouſies; theſe three being ſo diametrically oppoſite one to another: For while the Mogul brings his Fleet either to Winter or Recruit in this Bay, Seva takes Offence; on the other hand, the Mogul would ſoon put a ſtop to all Buſineſs, ſhould he be denied: The Portugal, as in League with neither, thinks it a mean compliance in us to allow either of them Countenance, eſpecially to furniſh them with Guns and Weapons to turn upon Chriſtians, which they wiſely make an Inquiſition-Crime.

CHAP. II.

Is a Survey of the Iſland of Canorein near Bombaim.

The Superior of the Jeſuits,

UPON theſe ſcores it was not long before I was employed to wait on the Father Superior of the North, a Learned Man, and a Spaniard by Nation, of the Order of the Jeſuits.

Complimented.

The Preſident commanded his own Baloon (a Barge of State, of Two and twenty Oars) to attend me and one of the Council, to compliment the Father on the Iſland of Canorein, parted from Bombaim by a Stream half a Mile broad: Near our Landing-place ſtood a College, not inferior to the Building, nor much unlike thoſe of our Univerſities, belonging to the Jeſuits here, more commonly called Pauliſtines (whoſe Viſitor was now my Patient), who live here very ſumptuouſly, the greateſt part of the Iſland being theirs. Our Entertainment was truly Noble, and becoming the Gravity of the Society. After I had done my Duty, the Fathers accompanied us to the Barge; afore the College-Gate ſtood a large Croſs, thwack'd full of young Blacks ſinging Veſpers: The Town is large, the Houſes tiled; it is called Bandora.

At

Their Convents serve for Castles.

At our department they gave us Seven Guns, which they have planted on the Front of their College for their own Defence, besides they are fitted with good store of Small Arms: Following therein the Advice given by a Statesman to the King of Spain, about the Netherlands; That if the Society of the Loyolists were multiplied, their Convents might serve for Castles.

A fine Prospect on the Water.

In the middle of the River we had a pleasant Prospect on both sides; on Bandora side, the College, the Town, the Church of St. Andrew a Mile beyond, and upon the Hill that pointed to the Sea, the Aquada, Blockhouse, and a Church; on the other side, the Church of Maijm, with other handsome Buildings.

A Journey of Pleasure: And Civility of the Jesuits.

Curiosity led me a second time to visit the Island Canorein, having obtained leave for a longer Stay; nor went I alone, some of the best Quality on the Island being led by the same desire, joining themselves with me: We carried a Train of Servants, Horses, and Palenkeens, which were ferried over before us; and we coming soon after, were met by the Fraternity, and conducted to the Fathers, who detained us till Afternoon by a stately Banquet, shewing us the Civility of the Church and College, diverting us both with Instrumental and Vocal Musick, and very good Wine.

After which we were dismiss'd, and four Mile off Bandora were stopp'd by the Kindness of the Padre-Superior, whose Mandate whereever we came caused them to send his Recarders (a Term of Congratulation, as we say, Our Service) with the Presents of the best Fruits and Wines, and whatever we wanted.

Delightful Aldeas.

Here, not adjoining to any Town, in a sweet Air, stood a Magnificent Rural Church; in the way to which, and indeed all up and down this Island, are pleasant Aldeas, or Country Seats of the Gentry; where they live like Petty Monarchs, all that is born on the Ground being theirs, holding them in a perfect state of Villainage, they being Lords Paramount.

Magatana, a Country Seat.

From hence, when we had baited, the same Night we travelled easily to Magatana, using our Fowling-Pieces all the way, being here presented with Rich Game, as Peacocks, Doves, and Pigeons, Chitrels, or Spotted Deer.

When we came to the Town, two several Churches strove to receive us; but having some Acquaintance with the Father of the one, and not with the other, we excused our selves to the latter, and took up with our Friend. As soon as we came in, the Servitors fetch'd us warm Water to wash our Feet, which was very refreshing; it put me in mind of Lot's Courtesy to the Angels. After this, as a piece of extraordinary Civility, they shewed us the Necessary House; and it is so in a Countrey where Fluxes are so common; and for that reason it is kept as neat as their Lodging Rooms, having Water to wash after you have used a clean Towel hung there for that purpose.

This Night we fared very well. Next Morn before Break of Day we directed our Steps to the anciently fam'd, but now ruin'd City of Canorein; the way to it is so delightsome, I thought I had been in England; fine Arable, Pasture, and Coppices; thus we passed Five Mile to the Foot of the Hill on which the City stands, and had passed half a Mile through a thick Wood, peopled by Apes, Tygers, wild Buffolo's, and Jackalls; here were some Flocks of Parockets:

When

Letter II.

When we alighted, the Sun began to mount the Horizon over the Hills, and under our Feet, as if he had newly bathed his fiery Courſers, there appeared the Mouth of a Tank, or Aqueduct, out of a Rock, whoſe ſteaming Breath was very hot, but water cold: From hence it is thought the whole City to be ſupplied with water; for as we aſcend, we find ſuch Places, where convenient, filled with Limpid Water, not over-matched in India: If it be ſo, (as I know not how to contradict it) that it ſhould have its Current upwards through the hard Rocks artificially cut, the World cannot parallel ſo wonderful a Water-courſe!

The City of Canorein, formerly an Heathen Fane.

From hence the Paſſage is uneaſy and inacceſſible for more than two abreaſt, till we come to the City, all cut out of a Rock; where is preſented Vulcan's Forge, ſupported by two mighty Coloſſes, bellied in the middle with two Globes. Next a Temple with a beautiful Frontiſpiece not unlike the Portuco of St. Paul's Weſt Gate: Within the Porch on each ſide ſtand Two Monſtrous Giants, where two Leſſer and one Great Gate give a noble Entrance; it can receive no Light but at the Doors and Windows of the Porch, whereby it looks more ſolemnly; the Roof is Arched, ſeeming to be born up by huge Pillars of the ſame Rock, ſome Round, ſome Square, 34 in number. The Corniſh Work of Elephants, Horſes, Lions; at the upper end it rounds like a Bow; near where ſtands a great Offertory ſomewhat Oval, the Body of it without Pillars, they only making a narrow Piatzo about, leaving the Nave open: It may be an 100 Feet in Length, in Height 60 Feet or more.

Beyond this, by the ſame Mole-like Induſtry, was worked out a Court of Judicature (as thoſe going to ſhew it will needs give Names) or Place of Audience, 50 Feet ſquare, all beſtuck with Imagery, well Engraven according to old Sculpture. On the Side, over-againſt the Door, ſate one Superintendent, to whom the Brachmin went with us, paid great Reverence, not ſpeaking of him without a token of worſhip; whom he called Jougy, or the Holy Man; under this the way being made into handſome Marble Steps, are the King's Stables, not different from the Faſhion of our Noblemens Stables, only at the head of every Stall ſeems to be a Dormitory, or Place for Devotion, with Images, which gave occaſion to doubt if ever for that End; or rather made for an Heathen Seminary of Devotes, and theſe their Cells or Chappels, and the open Place their Common-Hall or School: More aloft ſtood the King's Palace, large, ſtately and magnificent, ſurrounded with leſſer of the Nobility.

Reported to be dug out of the Rocks by Alexander.

To ſee all, would require a Month's time; but that we might ſee as much as could be in our allotted time, we got upon the higheſt part of the Mountain, where we feaſted our Eyes with innumerable Entrances of theſe Cony-burrows, but could not ſee one quarter part. Whoſe Labour this ſhould be, or for what purpoſe, is out of memory; but this Place by the Gentiles is much adored: Some contend for Alexander; and as a proof, think they have ſaid enough, when it is received by Tradition, that a great Gap out of a ſolid Rock was cut by him to make this an Iſland: But this is contradictory to the Story delivered of Alexander, That he ſailed up Indus, and encountred King Porus, of whom ſome little Remains may be collected, they ſpeaking of that King by the Name of Por in Cambaia, baia, where Alexander landed with his Army; and followed the Course of Indus, directly contrary to this Place, that lying North-East, this South from thence; nor do we read his ſtay in India was ſo long, to atchieve ſuch Acts as theſe, this Place being not the only Inſtance of this nature; but more probable to be an Heathen Fane, or Idolatrous Pagod, from the Superſtitious Opinion they ſtill hold of its Sacredneſs: Wherefore the Portugals, who are now Maſters of it, ſtrive to erace the remainders of this Herculean Work, that it may ſink into the oblivion of its Founders. Chap. III.

Returning to Magatana, we ſpent ſome days in riding about the Country, which we found every-where provided with Churches.

The Chief City of this Iſland is Tanaw: In which are Seven Churches and Colleges, the chiefeſt one of the Pauliſtines; the Houſes Tiled, but low: Here are made good Stuffs of Silk and Cotton. Tanaw the Chief Place.

There is another great Town called Mein, where is a Caſtle and ſome Soldiers, towards the Sea; over-againſt Baçein there is another Fort and Aquada. Mein a great Town.

The Portugals ſuffer none but Chriſtians here: It has no Rivers, but only Inlets of the Sea; but good Springs from the Rocks; the Ground excellently fertile, either of it ſelf, or by the care of the Inhabitants; that it yields as good Cabbages, Coleworts, and better Rhadiſhes than ever I yet ſaw: Beſides Garden-Fruit, here are incomparable Water-Melons, and Onions as ſweet, and as well taſted as an Apple; and for the natural growth of the Soil, it is known not only to ſupply the adjoining Iſlands, but Goa alſo. It is more than 20 Miles in Length, and 70 in Circumference. Happineſs of the Soil.

CHAP. III.

A Viſit to Baçein, a Portugal City in India; our return by Elephanto, and the Putachos, with Obſervations on the Iſland Bombaim.

THE ſeveral Capitaneos of the Portugals are Triennial, which are the Alternate Governments entailed on the Families of the Conquerors, and therefore made Circular; every one in his courſe having his turn to rule in ſome Place or other for Three Years, and upon theſe they can borrow or take up Mony as certain as upon their Hereditary Eſtates, the next Incumbent being Security for the payment: Purſuant to this, a new Governour coming to Choul, his Honour the Preſident ſent to congratulate him; and the Admiral of the North coming to Baçein, another was ſent on the ſame Meſſage. The Capitaneos of the Portugals Alternate.

Nor could the hot Months be over, before John de Mendos, of a Noble Family, ſent for me to Baçein for the cure of his only Daughter, illuſtriouſly born, handſome, and on the point of

Letter II.

Marriage with the Admiral of the North, though not full Twelve years old.

A Meſſage to Baçein.

Leaving Bombaim, at this time of the year, we could go either within or without; but the firſt being related to be pleaſanteſt, I choſe that way; ſailing by Trumbay, where we receive Cuſtom, we might ſee a comely Church and Aldea: At Noon we reached Tanaw: Having gained our Paſſage over the Flats, we made no ſtay, but rowed ſtreight to Baçein; every half Mile we were preſented with freſh Proſpects of delicate Country-Manſions; two of which of ſpecial note draw the Eyes of the Beholders; one of John de Melos, three Mile off Tanaw, it ſtanding high, curiouſly built, has a Tarras Deſcent with Walks and Gardens half a Mile, till it lead to a ſpacious Banquetting-houſe over the Water, with Stone-ſtairs for Landing: Beyond it a Mile, on the ſide of an Hill, ſtands Grebondel, a large neat built Town of Martin Alphonſo's; and at top of all, his Houſe, Fort and Church, of as ſtately Architecture as India can afford; he being the Richeſt Don on this ſide Goa. Here we are Land-locked by the Gut, which is fabled to be made by Alexander; from which we have an open paſſage to Baçein, it lying bare towards the Sea.

B A C E I N

The City is round.

Is incircled with a round Stone-wall, and has a Gate for every Wind; it is ſtrong enough againſt the Indians, but not able to endure an European Foe: There are upon the Out-walls, and in the Fort, Forty two great Guns; the Fort in the middle of the City is circular; towards the Market appears a State-houſe Piatzed, where the Governour convocates the Fidalgos every Morning upon conſultation, in which they all ſtand, a Chair not being permitted the Governour, though Gouty: Towards Evening they meet there to Game.

Six Churches within the Walls.

Within the Walls are ſix Churches, four Convents, two Colleges, one of the Jeſuits, another of the Franciſcans. It bears the Name of an Academy; the Students are inſtructed in the Jeſuits College, but live in Town: Where is a Library, with Claſſes of Hiſtorians, Moraliſts, Expoſitors, and no more. It is a College of Polite Structure, in the Portuco is a Copy of Angelos, repreſenting the Reſurrection; above Stairs, as well as below, are fine ſquare Cloiſters, as all their Collegiate Churches have, on the ſides whereof are their Cells; they have a ſpacious Refectory, and a goodly Church; three parts of the City is devoted to their uſe.

The Dwellings of the Fidalgos.

The Fidalgos (for few Artiſans are tolerated within the Walls) have ſtately Dwellings, graced with covered Balconies, and large Windows two Stories high, with Panes of Oiſter-ſhell, which is their uſual Glazing among them in India, or elſe Latiſed. They ſhew their Greatneſs by their number of Sumbreeroes and Cofferies, whereby it is dangerous to walk late for fear of falling into the Hands of thoſe Pilfering Abuſive Raſcals. None but Chriſtians lodge within the City, the Banyans repairing to the Suburbs upon Tattoo.* The City is a Mile and half round; it ſtands on an Iſland, ſeparated by a ſmall Channel from the Main, as far off the Iſland Canorein, as Canorein from Bombaim, and parted after the like nature.

The

The Land about it plain, and fruitful of Sugar-Canes, Rice, and other Grain; a great part of which has lately been deſtroyed by the Arabs of Muſchat, who put them to a ſore fright in Baçein: and this is done often, ſetting fire to their Villages, and carrying away their Fidalgos Priſoners, together with their Wives and Families, butchering the Padres, and robbing the Churches without reſiſtance, conceived on a deadly Feud, partly out of revenge of the Portugal Cruelties at Muſchat; but chiefly out of deteſtation of each other's Religion; inſomuch that Quarter is denied on either ſide: But that on this Pretence. The Portugals ſtriving to poſſeſs themſelves of Muſchat, were put to ſuch ſtreſs, that had not their Armado come to their relief, they muſt have deſiſted their Enterprize: Upon the arrival whereof the new Recruits gained ſo much on the Arab Governour, that he yielded up the otherwiſe invincible Fort of Muſchat; where the Portugals acting all nefarious Outrages, contrary to their Promiſe, the Arabs re-armed themſelves with Courage and freſh Succors, and at length beat them from hence to Ormus in the Gulf of Perſia; from whence alſo they were routed by the help of the Engliſh (we then being at war with them); the firſt blow to their Greatneſs in theſe Parts.

The Devaſtations made by the Arabs about Baçein.

The ground of their Quarrels.

To check theſe Incurſions of the Arabs, the Portugals every Year are at the charge of a luſty Squadron in theſe Seas, which were thoſe we met on the Coaſt returning from thence; who were no ſooner gone, than the Arabs ſent their Fleet to do this Miſchief here; which now 'tis done, they are again in queſt of them, but they fly as often as theſe purſue.

The Arabs care not to engage the Portugals.

And if ſuch be the gaſping Strength of the Portugals, to terrify the Potenteſt Enemies to Chriſtianity in theſe Parts, what was their flouriſhing Eſtate? Whence it may eaſily be ſuppoſed before now all had bowed to the Croſs, which yet bend under Heatheniſm or Mahometiſm, had they not been prevented by unhappy Pretenders, that (I fear) too much preferred Merchandize and private Pieques, before the welfare of Religion: For it is morally probable, that had not the Dutch and we interrupted them, all might have been Chriſtian in theſe parts of the World.

Their laſt Efforts.

Having in a Week's time compleated my Buſineſs, returning the ſame way, we ſteered by the South ſide of the Bay, purpoſely to touch at Eliphanto, ſo called from a monſtrous Elephant cut out of the main Rock, bearing a Young one on its Back; not far from it the Effigies of an Horſe ſtuck up to the Belly in the Earth in the Valley; from thence we clambred up the higheſt Mountain on the Iſland, on whoſe Summit was a miraculous Piece hewed out of ſolid Stone: It is ſupported with Forty two Corinthian Pillars, being a Square, open on all ſides but towards the Eaſt; where ſtands a Statue with three Heads, crowned with ſtrange Hieroglyphicks: At the North ſide in an high Portuco ſtands an Altar, guarded by Giants, and immured by a Square Wall; all along, the Walls are loaded with huge Giants, ſome with eight hands, making their vanquiſhed Knights ſtoop for mercy. Before this is a Tank full of water, and beyond that another Place with Images. This ſeems to be of later date than that of Canorein, though defaced by the Portugals, who have this Iſland alſo;

Eliphanto, another Idolatrous Temple cut out of a ſolid Rock.

Letter II.

but no Defence upon it, nor any thing elſe of Note; it may be Ten Miles round, inhabited by the Povo, or Poor: From hence we ſailed to the Putachoes, a Garden of Melons (Putacho being a Melon) were there not wild Rats that hinder their Growth, and ſo to Bombaim.

The Heats.

The Weather now was grown exceſſive hot, the Earth beginning to gape for Thirſt, the Sun being in its Zenith with us; the South Winds are ſet in ſtrong, and the Toddy-Trees ferment their Wine over the Veſſels, the Prodromi of the enſuing Rains; which make their firſt ſhew at the firſt Full Moon in May, and continue a Fortnight, in which ſpace it is unhealthy; till after a Fortnight's fair Weather they ſet in for altogether.

The Mogul's Fleet winter at Bombaim.

This Seaſon makes the Syddy retreat hither with his Fleet, who from a Lord of Duccan is promoted to be the Mogul's Admiral; or truer, driven to diſtreſs by Seva Gi, undertakes this Employment, in confidence to recover his own Dominion on the Sea-Coaſt, whilſt the Mogul's General at Land is to ſtop his Proceedings on that ſide: But Seva Gi poſſeſſed of his Country, and bidding for his ſtrong Caſtle at Dan de Rajapour Bay, which he has been to defend this Summer, derides his Attempts, and is preparing to be inſtall'd Mau Raja, or Arch Raja, at his Court at Rairee; for which an Embaſſy to keep all right muſt be diſpatch'd.

The Ingenuity of the Toddy Bird.

In the mean while Nature affords us a pleaſant Spectacle for this Seaſon, as well as Matter for Admiration; whereby I know not why we ſhould deny Reaſon wholly to Animals; unleſs it be, Man having ſo much, they ſeem comparatively to have none: For here is a Bird (having its Name from the Tree it chuſes for its Sanctuary, the Toddy-Tree) that is not only exquiſitely curious in the artificial Compoſure of its Neſt with Hay, but furniſhed with Devices and Stratagems to ſecure its ſelf and young ones from its deadly Enemy the Squirrel; as likewiſe from the Injury of the Weather; which being unable to oppoſe, it eludes with this Artifice, contriving the Neſt like a Steeple-hive, with winding Meanders; before which hangs a Penthouſe for the Rain to paſs, tying it by ſo ſlender a Thread to the Bough of the Tree, that the Squirrel dare not venture his Body, though his Mouth water at the Eggs and Prey within; yet it is ſtrong enough to bear the hanging habitation of the Ingenious Contriver, free from all the Aſſaults of its Antagoniſt, and all the Accidents of Guſts and Storms: Hundreds of theſe Pendulous Neſts may be ſeen on theſe Trees.

The Brabb-Tree.

Here is another Tree called Brabb, bodied like a Cocoe, but the Leaves grow round like a Peacock's Tail ſet upright, of the ſame ſubſtance with the Cocoe, only varying in figure; the Fruit of this is leſs than the Cocoe, and filled with a Gelly; the Wine from this is preferred new, before the other; there is a Tuft at top, cut off and boil'd eats like Colliflowers; on which Tree theſe Birds build alſo.

The Rains ſet in.

And now the Rains are ſet in, all Hoſtilities and Commerce ceaſe, and every one provides for this time, as the laborious Ant for the Winter, here being no ſtirring out to Sea, or travelling in the Country; the beſt Paſtime now being good Fellowſhip. Thus lies this place afloat, and the Rains and Thunder are violent enough to convince the incredulous of a poſſibility of a General Deluge. This holds holds with little intermiſſion till St. Francis's Moon, the firſt Full Moon in Auguſt; when our Europe Ships, if they ſave their Paſſage about the Cape, venture to make in here, by the directions of the yellow Bellies of the formerly mentioned Water-Snakes, who are a warning to them of adventuring too near the Shore, till this open Weather appear.

The Heathens make an Offering to the Sea.

After this Full Moon, the Banyans, aſſiſted by their Brachmins, go in Proceſſion to the Sea-ſhore, and offer Cocoe-Nuts to Neptune, that he would reſtore them their Mare Pacificum; when they make Preparations to go to Sea, and about their Buſineſs of Trade.

By this opportunity our Ambaſſadors croſſed an Arm of the Sea, and returning from Seva Gi, delivered the Preſident this following Account; which I the rather inſert, becauſe the manner of dealing with theſe Princes and Great Men may be the better underſtood by this formal Addreſs.

CHAP. IV.

A Narrative of an Embaſſy to Seva Gi, and Journey to Rairee, the Court of the Rajah.

THE Ambaſſador having received Inſtructions, and got all things ready for his Journey, embark'd on a Bombaim Shebar (together with two Engliſh Factors, who were appointed by the Honourable the Preſident to accompany him); and about Nine a Clock at Night arrived at Choul, a Portugal City on the Main, into which he could not enter, the Gates being ſhut up, and Watch ſet; ſo that they paſſed this Night in the Suburbs, in a ſmall Church called St. Sebaſtians; and the next day about Three in the Afternoon receiving Advice that Seva Gi was returned to Rairee from Chiblone, departed thence to Upper Choul, a Town belonging to the Rajah, about two Miles diſtant from the Portugal City; and was in former time a great Mart of all ſorts of Duccan Commodities; but now totally ruined by the late Wars betwixt the Mogul and Seva Gi, whoſe Arms have plundered and laid it waſte.

How the Subidar is created.

The Subidar of this Town being a Perſon of Quality, who commands the Countries oppoſite to Bombaim, as Magatan, Penn, and Tull, he thought good to give him a Viſit, and to preſent him with a couple of Pamerins; and the rather, becauſe he underſtood by the Linguiſt Naran Sinaij, he had ſome Averſion to our Nation, and might hinder our Proceedings at Court; from which he was willing to take him off by all fair means: He received the Viſit kindly, and promiſed all Courteſy that lay in his Power to perform; and after ſome immaterial Diſcourſe they returned to their Tents.

Proceed on their Journey.

The Day following they took Boat, and ſailed up Choul River, to a Town called Eſthemy, ſix Leagues diſtance from Choul, where they ſtaid till next day; and ſet forth about ſix in the Morn from Eſthemy, and about Sun-ſet pitched their Tent in a Plain, ſix Miles ſhort of Niſhampore, where they ſtayed about an hour to refreſh their Coolies, and

Letter II.

and then ſet forward for Niſhampore, and at Nine paſſing by Niſhampore, arrived next Morning at Gongouly, a little Village ſituated on the Bank of a pleaſant Rivulet; from whence in a fair Day may be diſcerned the Caſtle of Rairee: The day after they proceeded on their Journy to Rairee, and about Nine of the Clock in the Evening came to Puncharra, a Town at the Foot of the Hill, where they underſtood that Seva Gi was departed thence to Purtaabgur, to viſit the Shrine of Bowany, a Pagod of great eſteem with him, and celebrated ſome Ceremonies there in order to his Coronation; having carried with him ſeveral Preſents, and among the reſt a Lumbrico of pure Gold, weighing about one Maund and a quarter, which is Forty two Pounds, which he hath dedicated to the ſaid Pagod.

Seva Gi gone a Pilgrimage.

In the interim, underſtanding they could not be admitted into the Caſtle till Seva Gi's return, they pitched their Tent in the Plain; and in order to their more ſpeedy diſpatch, make their Buſineſs known to their Procurator Narun Gi Pundit (whoſe reception was very kind) and delivered him his Honour's Letters; ſhewing him the ſeveral Preſents they brought for the Rajah, and Miniſters of State; of which he highly approved, and promiſed them to help them to the Rajah's preſence, as ſoon as conveniently he could after his return from Pilgrimage to Purtaabgur: And bad them reſt content, that his Endeavours ſhould be totally employed in the Honourable Company's Intereſt, and procuring them a ſpeedy diſpatch: For which having rendered him Thanks, he preſented him with the Articles which they brought for the Rajah to ſign, tranſlated into Moratty Language; which he ſaid he would peruſe, and then give his judgment of them. He then took occaſion to diſcourſe with him concerning the Concluſion of a Peace betwixt the Rajah and the Syddy of Banda Rajapore; urging many Arguments to create in him a belief it would be for the Rajah's advantage, but he would not be perſuaded it was for his Maſter's Intereſt to raiſe a Siege which had coſt him ſo much Blood and Treaſure; eſpecially now he hath ſuch hopes of gaining the Place: And therefore told them, it would be in vain to move it to the Rajah, who was reſolved to take in the Caſtle, let it coſt him what it will: And to that effect was daily ſending down more Ordnance, Ammunition, Men and Money.

Our Ambaſſador replied, The Preſident had no other Deſign in making this motion, than that of a good Neighbour; having obſerved the Miſeries each Party endured, and the general obſtruction of Trade, occaſioned by the War; but ſince he deſired him to deſiſt mentioning it to the Rajah, he ſhould not trouble him therewith; but what was more conſiſtent with our own and his Intereſt; which was the encouraging Trade and Merchandiſe in his Country, and opening the ways to Baligaot, that Merchants might with ſafety bring down their Goods to Port; which would be much to the Rajah's Profit, and encreaſe of his Treaſury: And this he recommended to his Prudence to perſuade the Rajah thereto; who being a Soldier from his Infancy, its poſſible minded not ſuch concerns.

The Officiouſneſs of a Chief Miniſter of State to the Engliſh.

To which he anſwered, That he doubted not but it would be effected in a ſhort time; for that the King of Viſiapour, who is Owner of thoſe Countries (from whence moſt ſorts of Wares come) being weary of Wars with his Maſter, had ſent ſeveral Embaſſies to conclude conclude a peace with him; which he thought would be made up in two or three Months, and then the Ways would be free, and the Merchants have Egreſs and Regreſs as formerly. That the Rajah, after his Coronation, would act more like a Prince, by taking care of his Subjects, and endeavouring the advancement of Commerce in his Dominions; which he could not attend before, being in perpetual War with the Great Mogul, and King of Viſiapour. This is the Subſtance of his Diſcourſe with Narun Gi Pundit, who ſeemed to him to be a Man of Prudence and Eſteem with his Maſter: So after a little ſitting he took his leave of him, having firſt preſented him with a Diamond Ring, for which he expreſſed a liking; and his Eldeſt Son a Couple of Pamerins, which are fine Mantles.

Who procured their paſs up to the Caſtle.

They continuing under their Tent, found it very hot and incommodious; wherefore they were glad when they heard the Rajah was returned from Purtaabgur, when the Ambaſſadour ſollicited Narun Gi Pundit to procure his leave to paſs up the Hill into Rairee Caſtle: The next day they receiv'd order to aſcend the Hill into the Caſtle, the Rajah having appointed an Houſe for them; which they did; leaving Puncharra about Three in the Afternoon, they arrived at the top of that ſtrong Mountain, forſaking the humble Clouds about Sun-ſet.

Rairee a ſtrong Hill.

It is fortified by Nature more than Art, being of very difficult acceſs, there being but one Avenue to it, which is guarded by two narrow Gates, and fortified by a ſtrong Wall exceeding high, and Baſtions thereto: All the other part of the Mountain is a direct Precipice; ſo that it's impregnable, except the Treachery of ſome in it betray it. On the Mountain are many ſtrong Buildings, as the Rajah's Court, and Houſes of other Miniſters, to the number of about 300. It is in length about two Miles and an half, but no pleaſant Trees, or any ſort of Grain grows thereon. Their Houſe was about a Mile from the Rajah's Palace, into which they retired with no little content.

The Engliſh have Audience of Seva Gi.

Four days after their aſcent, by the ſollicitation of Narun Gi Pundit, the Rajah gave them Audience, though buſily imployed by many other great Affairs, relating to his Coronation and Marriage. Our Ambaſſador preſented him, and his Son Samba Gi Rajah, with the Particulars appointed for them; which they took well ſatisfied with them; and the Rajah aſſured them we might trade ſecurely in all his Countries without the leaſt apprehenſion of Ill from him, for that the Peace was concluded. Our Ambaſſadour replied, that was our Intent; and to that intent the Preſident had ſent him to this Court to procure the ſame Articles and Privileges we enjoyed in Indoſtan and Perſia, where we traded. He anſwered, it is well, and referred our Buſineſs to Moro Pundit his Peſhua, or Chancellour, to examine our Articles, and give an account what they were. He and his Son withdrew into their private Apartments, to conſult with the Brachmines about the Ceremonies preparatory to his Enſtalment; which chiefly conſiſted in Abſtinence and Purifying; till which be over, he will hear no farther of Buſineſs. They likewiſe departed to their Lodgings.

What Preſents were made.

A day or two after our Ambaſſador went to Narun Gi Pundit, and took his Advice concerning the preſenting of the reſt; who told him he

Letter II.

he might go in Perſon to Moro Pundit, but to the reſt he ſhould ſend by Naran Sinaij what was intended for them: Declaring likewiſe if he would have his Work ſpeedily effected, and without any impediment, that it was neceſſary to be at ſome more charge to preſent Officers with Pamerins, who were not in their Liſt of Preſents; to which he aſſented, conſidering the time of the Year was ſo far ſpent, and that if he ſhould be forced to ſtay the whole Rains out at Rairee, the Honourable Company's Charges would be greater than the Additional Preſents: He anſwered that two Pamerins were not enough for Moro Pundit, that we muſt preſent him with four; and Peta Gi Pundit Vocanovice, or Publick Intelligencer, with the Diamond Ring, valued at 125 Rupees.

The Debir, or Perſian Eſcrivan, with Four Pamerins.
Sam Gi Nayne, Keeper of the Seal, with Four.
Ab Gi Pundit Four.

And then he ſhould not doubt of a ſpeedy Concluſion; otherwiſe they would raiſe Objections on purpoſe to impede the Negotiation. For every Officer in Court expected ſomething according to their Degree and Charge.

Rajah, Seva Gi weighed in Gold.

About this time the Rajah, according to the Hindu Cuſtom, was weighed in Gold, and poiſed about 16000 Pagods, which Money, together with an 100000 more is to be diſtributed among the Brachmines after the day he is enthroned, who in great numbers flock hither from all parts of his Territories.

Grants the Requeſt of the Engliſh.

Being earneſt to preſs on his Errand he came for, the Ambaſſador ſent to Narun Gi Pundit to know what was tranſacted in the Articles; but was returned for Anſwer, The Rajah ſtopt his Ears to all Affairs, declaring he had granted all the Demands, except thoſe two Articles, expreſſing, Our Money ſhall go current in his Dominions, and his on Bombaim; and that he ſhall reſtore whatever Wrecks may happen on his Coaſts belonging to the Engliſh, and Inhabitants of Bombaim: The firſt he accounted unneceſſary to be inſerted, becauſe he forbids not the paſſing of any manner of Coins; nor on the other ſide, can he force his Subjects to take thoſe Monies whereby they ſhall be Loſers; but if our Coin be as fine an Allay, and as weighty as the Mogul's, and other Princes, he will not prohibit it. To the other he ſays, that it is againſt the Laws of Conchon to reſtore any Ships, Veſſels, or Goods, that are driven aſhore by Tempeſt, or otherwiſe; and that ſhould he grant us that Privilege, the French, Dutch, and other Merchants, would claim the ſame Right; which he could not grant without breaking a Cuſtom has laſted many Ages: The reſt of our Deſires he willingly conceded, embracing with much ſatisfaction our Friendſhip, promiſing to himſelf and Country much Happineſs by our Settlement and Trade: Notwithſtanding Narun Gi Pundit did not altogether deſpair of obtaining our Wrecks, becauſe we enjoyed the ſame Privilege in the Mogul, and Duccan Country.

The Ambaſſador ſummoned to the Coronation.

Near a Month after they had been here, Narun Gi Pundit ſent word, That to Morrow about Seven or Eight in the Morning, the Rajah Seva Gi intended to aſcend his Throne; and he would take it kindly if they came to congratulate him thereon; that it was neceſſary to preſent him with ſome ſmall thing, it not being the Cuſtom of the Eaſtern Parts to appear before a Prince empty-handed. The Ambaſſador ſent him word, according to his Advice he would wait on the Rajah at the preſcribed time.

of

Accordingly he attends.

Accordingly next Morning he and his Retinue went to Court, and found the Rajah ſeated on a Magnificent Throne, and all his Nobles waiting on him in Rich Attire; his Son Samba Gi Rajah, Peſhuah, Mora Pundit, and a Brachmin of great Eminence, ſeated on an Aſcent under the Throne; the reſt, as well Officers of the Army as others, ſtanding with great Reſpect. The Engliſh made their Obeiſance at a diſtance, and Narun Sinai held up the Diamond Ring that was to be preſented him: He preſently took notice of it, and ordered their coming nearer, even to the Foot of the Throne, where being Veſted, they were deſired to retire; which they did not ſo ſoon, but they took notice on each ſide of the Throne there hung (according to the Moors manner) on heads of Gilded Launces many Emblems of Dominion and Government; as on the Right-hand were two great Fiſhes Heads of Gold, with very large Teeth; on the Left, ſeveral Horſes Tails, a Pair of Gold Scales on a very high Launce's head, equally poized, an Emblem of Juſtice; and as they returned, at the Palace Gate ſtood two ſmall Elephants on each ſide, and two fair Horſes with Gold Trappings, Bridles, and Rich Furniture; which made them admire how they brought them up the Hill, the Paſſage being both difficult and hazardous.

The Rajah marries a fourth Wife. Seva Gi ſigns the Articles.

Two days after this, the Rajah was married to a Fourth Wife, without State; and doth every day beſtow Alms on the Brachmins.

Some days after, Narun Gi Pundit ſent word the Rajah had ſigned their Articles, all but that about Money. Then the reſt of the Miniſters of State ſigned them, and they went to receive them of Narun Gi Pundit, who delivered them to the Ambaſſador with Expreſſions of great Kindneſs for our Nation, and offered on all occaſions to be ſerviceable to the Engliſh at the Court of the Rajah.

No Nation eat more Fleſh than the Engliſh.

I will only add one Paſſage during the Stay of our Ambaſſador at Rairee: The Diet of this ſort of People admits not of great Variety or Coſt, their delightfulleſt Food being only Cutchery, a ſort of Pulſe and Rice mixed together, and boiled in Butter, with which they grow Fat: But ſuch Victuals could not be long pleaſing to our Merchants, who had been uſed to feed on good Fleſh: It was therefore ſignified to the Rajah, That Meat ſhould be provided for them; and to that end a Butcher that ſerved thoſe few Moors that were there, that were able to go to the Charge of Meat, was ordered to ſupply them with what Goat they ſhould expend (nothing elſe here being to be gotten for them), which he did accordingly, to the conſumption of half a Goat a Day, which he found very profitable for him, and thereupon was taken with a Curioſity to viſit his new Cuſtomers; to whom, when he came, it was told them, The honeſt Butcher had made an Adventure up the Hill, though very old, to have the ſight of his good Maſters, who had taken off of his hands more Fleſh in that time they had been there, than he had ſold in ſome Years before; ſo rare a thing is it to eat Fleſh among them; for the Gentiles eat none, and the Moors and Portugals eat it well ſtew'd, bak'd, or made into Pottage; no Nation eating it roaſted ſo commonly as we do: And in this point I doubt we err in theſe Hot Countries, where our Spirits being always upon the Flight, are not ſo intent on the buſineſs of Concoction; ſo that thoſe things that are eaſieſt digeſted, and that create the leaſt trouble to the Stomach, we find by Experience to agree beſt here.

Letter II.

CHAP. V.

Our Paſſage to Swally, and Relation of the Engliſh Preſidency at Surat.

AFter the Rains were over, and the North-Eaſt Wind had brought in the Cool Seaſon, by Command from the Preſident I was ſent to Surat.

In a Week's time we turned it up, ſailing by Bacein, Tarapore, Valentine's-Peak, St. John's, and Daman, the laſt City Northward on the Continent, belonging to the Portugueze. As alſo paſſing by Balſore (the firſt Town of the Moors Southward of Surat) and eight Ships riding at Surat River's Mouth, we then came to Swally Marine, where were flying the ſeveral Colours of the Three Nations, Engliſh, French, and Dutch, on Flag-Staffs erected for that purpoſe, who here land and ſhip off all Goods, without moleſtation.

Arrival at Swally.

Here we were welcomed by the Deputy-Preſident, Mr. Matthew Grey, an Eminent Merchant, and by the reſt of the Council, who took Care for my Entertainment, which here was but rude, the Place admitting of little better Tenements than Booths, ſtiled by the name of Choultries: Before Preſident Andrews's time they always lodged in Tents; but ſince, Wooden Houſes tiled with Pan-Tiles have been raiſed in an Incloſure allotted by the Governor. In which Compound are included Warehouſes, Stables, and other Out-houſes, with as good a Garden as this Sandy Soil will allow; in which ours exceeds the other two, being far pleaſanter ſeated.

The Sands full of Fleas and Banyans.

To this place belong two ſorts of Vermin, the Fleas and Banyans; the one harbouring in the Sand, faſten upon you as you paſs; where 'tis ſome Paſtime to ſee what Shift the Banyan makes, being bit by them, he dare not kill them, for fear of unhouſing a Soul, according to their Notion of Tranſmigration; but giving them a ſevere Pinch will put them to ſhift for themſelves in a Neſt of Cotton-Wool. The other Vermin are the Banyans themſelves, that hang like Horſe-leeches, till they have ſuck'd both Sanguinem & Succum (I mean Mony) from you: As ſoon as you have ſet your Foot on Shore, they crowd in their Service, interpoſing between you and all Civil Reſpect, as if you had no other Buſineſs but to be gull'd; ſo that unleſs you have ſome to make your way through them, they will interrupt your going, and never leave till they have drawn out ſomething for their Advantage. At this time of Shipping they Preſent the Governor of of Surat, to licenſe them to keep a Mart here, which they make the Europeans pay dearly for: Yet ſuch is their Policy, that without theſe, neither you nor the Natives themſelves ſhall do any Buſineſs, though they are worſe Brokers than Jews; if they be not the Spawn of them, the Rechabites, that would drink no Wine. Theſe generally are the Poorer ſort, and ſet on by the Richer to Trade with the Seamen for the meaneſt things they bring; and notwithſtanding they take them at their own rates, get well enough in exchange of Goods with them. They are the abſolute Map of Sordidneſs, fareing hardly, and profeſſing fairly, to entrap the unwary; enduring ſervily foul Words, Affronts and Injuries, for a future hope of Gain; expert in all the ſtudied arts of Thriving and Inſinuation; ſo that, Lying, Diſſembling, Cheating, are their Maſterpiece: Their whole deſire is to have Money paſs through their Fingers, to which a great part is ſure to ſtick: For they well underſtand the conſtant turning of Caſh amounts both to the Credit and Profit of him that is ſo occupied; which theſe Banyans are ſenſible of, otherwiſe they would not be ſo induſtrious to enſlave themſelves.

Travel to Surat.

Having viewed the Tombs by the Sea-ſide, and ſome more conſpicuous at the end of the Plain belonging to the Engliſh; others ſeated behind the Dutch Choultry, partly Engliſh, partly Dutch: Marks ſet to avoid, as well the Sylla and Charibdis of Damkin and Mora, two Nurſeries for Stews, as to warn them of the Sands coming into the Hole where the Ships ride at Anchor very ſecurely: We in the Company's Coaches Travelled to Surat, Ten Mile, brave Champion ground; but the Coach wherein I was, breaking, we were forced to mount the Indian Hackery, a Two-wheeled Chariot, drawn by ſwift little Oxen. By Sun-ſet we entred the Company's Barge, waiting to carry us over the River; where ſaluted us the dreadful Noiſe of the Moors Drums and Trumpets, it being cuſtomary for them to ſound at the Caſtle every Three hours; but chiefly at Sun-riſe and Sun-ſet: I could think of nothing but the laſt Trump; ſo that I could perſuade my ſelf there was little Muſick in it; but they ſay Time will bring it to be agreeable to the Ears. On the other ſide the River, other Four wheeled Coaches expected us, and the Moors let us paſs the Cuſtom-houſe without Examination, having Women among us; which was no ordinary point of Civility, they otherwiſe being ſtrict Examiners, unleſs the Preſident croſs the River, when they forbear alſo.

The Coaches and Guards.

The Coach where the Women were, was covered with Cheeks, a ſort of hanging Curtain, made with Bents variouſly Coloured with Lacker, and Chequered with Packthred ſo artificially, that you may ſee all without, and your ſelf within unperceived: Ours was open, and guarded by ſuch a Troop as went to apprehend our Saviour, dreſſed after the ſame manner we find them on old Landskips, and led by the ſame Phanatick Lights we ſee there Painted.

Our Reception at the Engliſh Houſe was Courteous and Welcome, for the Heat of the Day had tired us.

The Engliſh Factory.

The Houſe the Engliſh live in at Surat, is partly the King's Gift, partly hired; Built of Stone and excellent Timber, with good Carving, ving, without Repreſentations; very ſtrong, for that each Floor is Half a Yard thick at leaſt, of the beſt plaſtered Cement, which is very weighty. It is contrived after the Moor's Buildings, with upper and lower Galleries, or Terras-walks; a neat Oratory, a convenient open Place for Meals. The Preſident has ſpacious Lodgings, noble Rooms for Counſel and Entertainment, pleaſant Tanks, Yards, and an Hummum to Waſh in; but no Gardens in the City, or very few, though without they have many, like Wilderneſſes, overſpread with Trees. The Engliſh had a neat one, but Seva Gi's coming, deſtroyed it: It is known, as the other Factories are, by their ſeveral Flags flying.

Letter II.

Full of Noiſe.

Here they live (in Shipping-time) in a continual hurly-burly, the Banyans preſenting themſelves from the hour of Ten till Noon; and then Afternoon at Four till Night, as if it were an Exchange in every Row; below ſtairs, the Packers and Warehouſe-keepers, together with Merchants bringing and receiving Muſters, make a meer Billinſgate; for if you make not a Noiſe, they hardly think you intent on what you are doing.

The Four Chief Offices.

Among the Engliſh, the Buſineſs is diſtributed into four Offices; the Accomptant, who is next in Dignity to the Preſident, the general Accompts of all India, as well as this place, paſſing through his hands; he is Quaſi Treaſurer, ſigning all things, though the Broker keep the Caſh. Next him is the Warehouſe-keeper, who Regiſters all Europe Goods Vended, and receives all Eaſtern Commodities Bought; under him is the Purſer Marine, who gives Account of all Goods Exported and Imported, pays Seamen their Wages, provides Waggons and Porters, looks after Tackling for Ships, and Ships Stores. Laſt of all is the Secretary, who models all Conſultations, writes all Letters, carries them to the Preſident and Council to be peruſed and ſigned; keeps the Company's Seal, which is affixed to all Paſſes and Commiſſions; records all Tranſactions, and ſends Copies of them to the Company; though none of theſe, without the Preſident's Approbation, can act or do any thing. The Affairs of India are ſolely under his Regulation; from him iſſue out all Orders, by him all Preferment is diſpoſed; by which means the Council are biaſſed by his Arbitrament.

The Company's Servants. and their Salaries.

The whole Maſs of the Company's Servants may be comprehended in theſe Claſſes, viz. Merchants, Factors, and Writers; ſome Blewcoat Boys alſo have been entertained under Notion of Apprentices for Seven Years, which being expired, if they can get Security, they are capable of Employments. The Writers are obliged to ſerve Five Years for 10 l. per Ann. giving in Bond of 500 l. for good Behaviour, all which time they ſerve under ſome of the foremention'd Offices: After which they commence Factors, and riſe to Preferment and Truſt, according to Seniority or Favour, and therefore have a 1000 l. Bond exacted from them, and have their Salary augmented to 20 l. per Ann. for Three Years, then entring into new Indentures, are made Senior Factors; and laſtly, Merchants after Three Years more; out of whom are choſe Chiefs of Factories, as Places fall, and are allowed 40 l. per Ann. during their ſtay ſtay in the Company's ſervice, beſides Lodgings and Victuals at the Company's Charges.

The under Factories modelled by this.

Theſe in their ſeveral Seigniories behave themſelves after the Fundamentals of Surat, and in their reſpective Factories live in the like Grandeur; from whence they riſe ſucceſſively to be of the Council in Surat, which is the great Council; and if the Preſident do not contradict, are Sworn, and take their place accordingly, which conſiſts of about Five in Number, beſides the Preſident, to be conſtantly Reſident.

The Preſidency.

As for the Preſidency, though the Company interpoſe a deſerving Man, yet they keep that Power to themſelves, none aſſuming that Dignity till confirmed by them: His Salary from the Company is 500 l. a Year; half paid here, the other half reſerved to be received at home, in caſe of miſdemeanor to make ſatisfaction; beſide a Bond of 5000 l. Sterling of good Securities.

The Accountant has 72 l. per Annum, Fifty Pound paid here, the other at home: All the reſt are half paid here, half at home, except the Writers, who have all paid here.

The advantage of being at the Council.

Out of the Council are elected the Deputy-Governor of Bombaim, and Agent of Perſia; the firſt a Place of great Truſt, the other of Profit; though, by the appointment from the Company, the ſecond of India claims Bombaim, and the Secretary of Surat the Agency of Perſia, which is connived at, and made ſubject to the Will of the Preſident, by the Intereſt of thoſe whoſe Lot they are; chuſing rather to reſide here, where Conſignments compenſate thoſe Emoluments; ſo that none of the Council, if noted in England, but makes conſiderably by his Place, after the rate of Five in the Hundred, Commiſſion; and this is the Jacob's Ladder by which they aſcend.

The Baſeneſs of the Banyans.

It would be too mean to deſcend to indirect ways, which are chiefly managed by the Banyans, the fitteſt Tools for any deceitful Undertaking; out of whom are made Broakers for the Company, and private Perſons, who are allowed Two per Cent. on all Bargains, beſides what they ſqueeze ſecretly out of the price of things bought; which cannot be well underſtood for want of knowledge in their Language; which Ignorance is ſafer, than to hazard being poyſoned for prying too nearly into their Actions: Though the Company, to encourage Young men in their Service, maintain a Maſter to learn them to Write and Read the Language, and an Annuity to be annexed when they gain a perfection therein, which few attempt, and fewer attain.

Number of Perſons in the Factory.

To this Factory belongs Twenty Perſons in number, reckoning Swally Marine into the Account; a Miniſter for Divine Service, a Chirurgion, and when the Preſident is here, a Guard of Engliſh Soldiers, conſiſting of a double File led by a Serjeant.

The preſent Deputy has only Forty Moor-men, and a Flag-man carrying St. George his Colours Swallow-tailed in Silk, faſtned to a Silver Partiſan; with a ſmall Attendance of Horſe with Silver Bridles, and Furniture for the Gentlemen of the Houſe, and Coaches for Ladies and Council.

State of the Preſident.

The Preſident beſides theſe has a Noiſe of Trumpets, and is carried himſelf in a Palenkeen, an Horſe of State led before him, a Mir- chal (a Fan of Oſtriches Feathers) to keep off the Sun, as the Ombrahs or Great Men have, none but the Emperor have a Sumbrero among the Moguls: Beſides theſe, every one according to his Quality has his Menial Servants to wait on him in his Chamber, and follow him out.

All Places in India ſubject to the Preſidency, with their Commodities.

The Preſidency of Surat is eſteemed Superior to all in India, the Agency of Bantam being not long ſince ſubordinate to it, but ſince made independent; tho the South Sea Trade is ſtill maintained from hence to Bantam with ſuch Cloath as is vendible there, from thence with Dollars to China for Sugar, Tea, Porcelane, Laccared Ware, Quickſilver, Tuthinag and Copper; which with Cowreys, little Sea-Shels, come from Siam and the Phillipine Iſlands; Gold and Elephants Teeth from Sumatra, in exchange of Corn. From Perſia, which is ſtill under the Preſidency, come Druggs and Carmania Wool; from Moco, Cohor, or Coffee. The Inland Factories ſubject to it, are Amidavad, whence is provided Silks, as Atlaſes wrought with Gold; Agra, where they fetch Indico, Chuperly, Courſe Cloath, Siring Chints, Broach Baftas, broad and Narrow; Dimities, and other fine Calicuts: Along the Coaſts are Bombaim, Rajapore for Salloos; Carnear for Dungarees, and the weightieſt Pepper: Calicut for Spice, Ambergreez, Granats, Opium, with Salt Peter, and no Cloath, though it give the name of Calicut to all in India, it being the firſt Port from whence they were known to be brought into Europe: All which, after the Europe Ships have unladen at Surat, they go down to fetch; and bring up time enough before the Caphalas out of the Country come in with their Wares.

The Inveſtment ſet on foot in the Rains.

The Places about Surat afford variety of Calicuts, but not ſuch vaſt quantities as are yearly exported, and moreover not ſo cheap; which is the reaſon at every place the Factors are ſent to overſee the Weavers, buying up the Cotton-yarn to employ them all the Rains, when they ſet on foot their Inveſtments, that they may be ready againſt the Seaſon for the Ships: Or elſe the Chief Broaker imploys Banyans in their ſteads, who is reſponſible for their Fidelity.

This Trade managed by a Company better than Free Traders.

On theſe Wheels moves the Traffick of the Eaſt, and has ſucceeded better than any Corporation preceeding, or open Trade licenſed in the time of Oliver Cromwell; though how much more to the benefit of England than a Free Commerce, may be gueſſed by their already being over-ſtocked with Europe Merchandiſe, which lowers the Price. What then would a Glut do, which certainly muſt follow, but debaſe them more, and enhance theſe?

Their Freemen greater Slaves than their Servants.

But leſt the New Company ſhould be exclaimed againſt as too greedy Monopolizers, they permit Free Traders on their Iſland Bombaim; when, to ſpeak truth, they are in a far worſe Condition than their Servants; being tied up without hopes of raiſing themſelves: So that in earneſt they find out that to be but a Trick.

The Charges of the Engliſh Company not ſo great as the Hollanders.

However, to confeſs on the Company's behalf, the Trade (I mean on this Coaſt) for ſome years lately paſſed has hardly ballanced Expences. They employing yearly Forty Sail of ſtout Ships to and from all Parts where they trade, out and home; Manning and maintaining their Iſland Bombaim, Fort St. George, and St. Helens; beſides ſides large Sums expended to bear out the Port of their Factors; which notwithſtanding by impartial Computation has been found inferior to the Coſts of the Hollanders, and therefore more to the profit of the Engliſh Eaſt-India Company, than theirs, in the few Years they have adventured; ſo that I ſhould mightily blame them, ſhould they prove ungrateful to His Majeſty, who by his gracious Favour has united them in a Society, whereby they are Competitors, for Riches (though not Strength) with the Noted'ſt Company in the Univerſe.

Their Charter put in force.

This was granted preſently after the Happy Reſtoration of our Gracious Sovereign, when Order began to dawn, and diſpel the dark Chaos of Popular Community: Then was ſent out a Preſident, to put their Charter in Force, and eſtabliſh a Graduation among their Servants, which before was not obſerved; only for Orders ſake, they did nominate an Agent; the reſt being independent, made no diſtinction. When as now, after a better Model, they commence according to their ſtanding, and are under a Collegiate manner of Reſtraint.

The Courſe of the Preſidents.

The laſt Agent was Agent Rivinton, who was aboliſhed by the Company's ſending out Preſident Wych, who lived not much more than two years: Preſident Andrews took his place; and he reſigning, Sir George Oxendine held it till his Death; in whoſe time Seva Gi plunder'd Surat; but he defended himſelf and the Merchants ſo bravely, that he had a Collat or Serpaw, a Robe of Honour from Head to Foot offered him from the Great Mogul, with an Abatement of Cuſtoms to Two and an half per Cent. granted to the Company: For which his Maſters, as a Token of the high Senſe they had of his Valour, preſented him a Medal of Gold, with this Device:

Non minor eſt virtus quam quærere parta tueri.

After whoſe Deceaſe, the Honourable Gerald Aungier took the Chair, and encounter'd that bold Mountaineer a ſecond time, with as great Applauſe; when the Governor of the Town and Province durſt neither of them ſhew their Heads:

Fluctum enim totius Barbariæ ferre urbs una non poterat.

The Engliſh defend themſelves with Honour againſt Seva Gi a ſecond time.

The Enemies by the help of an Europe Engineer had ſprung a Mine to blow up the Caſtle; but being diſcovered, were repulſed; for though he had ſet Fire to the reſt of the City, they retained the Caſtle, and the Engliſh their Houſe.

The Power of the Preſident.

The Extent of the Preſidency is larger in its Miſſions than Reſidency; in which Limits may be reckoned an hundred Company's Servants continually in the Country; beſides the Annual Advenues of Ships, which during their Stay are all under the ſame Command: Therefore what Irregularities are committed againſt only the Preſidency or Company, in caſe of Non-Submiſſion, the Perſons offending are to be ſent home, and diſmiſſed their Employments for Refractorineſs; but if an higher Court lay hold of them in caſe of Murder,

Letter II.

Murder or any Capital Crime, then they are to be ſent to Bombaim, there to have a Legal Trial, according to the Laws of England, as the Preſident is created Governor of his Majeſty's Iſland.

The ill ſucceſs of the firſt Adventurers imputed to want of Government, and War with Portugal.

The ill managing of which Penalties formerly, or the Invalidity to inflict them, may be the true Cauſe of the Unproſperouſneſs of the Ancient Undertakers; who had this Inconveniency ſtill attending, to wit, the incorrigible ſtubborneſs of their own Men, after they had overcome all other Difficulties, occaſioned by the Grant of the Eaſt to the Portugal, and Weſt-Indies to the Spaniard. Nevertheleſs this Fairy Gift was the Ground of a long and tedious Quarrel in each of the World's Ends; ſo that our Ships encountring with their Carracks, ſeldom uſed to part without the loſs of one or both. Nay, the long-liv'd People yet at Swalley, remember a notable Skirmiſh betwixt the Engliſh and Portugals there, wherein they were neatly intrapp'd; an Ambuſcado of ours falling upon them behind in ſuch ſort, that they were compelled between them and the Ships in the Road, to reſign moſt of their Lives; and gave by their Fall a memorable Name to a Point they yet call Bloody Point, for this very reaſon. But ſince theſe Sores are fortunately bound up in that Conjugal Tye betwixt our Sacred King and the Siſter of Portugal, laying all foul Words and Blows aſide, let us ſee how the Affairs ſtand betwixt them and the Dutch, who followed our Steps, and got in at the Breach we made. They made them more Work, not only beating them out of their South-Sea Trade, but poſſeſſed themſelves of all their Treaſures of Spice, and have ever ſince kept them, with all their Strong-holds, as far as Goa; they only enjoying the Gold Trade of Moſambique undiſturbed; the Japanners having baniſhed both their Commerce and Religion.

The Company enrich this Port.

Wherefore our Ships almoſt alone, were it not for a little the French of late, lade Calicuts for Europe: The Dutch have a Factory here, that vend the Spices they bring from Batavia, and inveſt part of the Money in courſe Cloath, to be diſpoſed among their Planters, or ſold to the Malayans, and ſend the reſt back in Rupees: So that we ſingly have the Credit of the Port, and are of moſt advantage to the Inhabitants, and fill the Cuſtom-Houſe with the ſubſtantialeſt Incomes. But not to defraud the French of their juſt Commendations, whoſe Factory is better ſtor'd with Monſieurs than with Caſh, they live well, borrow Money, and make a Shew: Here are French Capuchins, who have a Convent, and live in Eſteem.

The Diamond Trade better in the hands of the Company's Servants than in theirs.

And here I might conclude, did not the Diamond-Trade and other Jewels interpoſe; which I could wiſh for the Company's ſake might never be ſtruck out of their Indulgence allowed to their Servants: For it will never amount to Advantage in their hands, becauſe the Jews, who are the chief Chapmen in England will blow upon them, unleſs they come to their Prices, when more than enough is offered them. But in particular hands the Caſe is otherwiſe, every one ſnatching at a Prize, which none is ſenſible of, but the private Buyer; but when they are publickly Invoiced, it will be at their own Wills to make their Bargains. Withal, in the Company's Servants hands, it not only keeps them Honeſt, but they grow Rich without wronging the the Company: Whereas ſhould they retract this, not only the Jews would find others to furniſh them, as the French and Dutch, with their Encomiendums; but other Monied Gentlemen in England might be tempted to ſet up for Interloping, who know not how better to diſpoſe of their Monies on any Bank, than by adventuring Large Sums, that do now to my knowledge return them in a Year and a half's time from 50 l. to 70 l. per Cent. advance, and the Factors good Gainers too; and all this while no Prejudice done either to Freight or the Company's Trade; which if they will not believe, let them experiment to their own Coſt. Nor can I ſay more on this Subject, than both French and Dutch Jewellers coming over Land do underſtand, who have made good Purchaſe by buying Jewels here, and carrying them into Europe to be Cut and Set, and returning ſell them here to the Ombrahs, among whom were Monſieur Tavernier, and now Monſieur Rezin, and Monſieur Jordan.

Thus much may ſerve for this Year; by the next I may prepare a farther Account, if I live; for ſo long I will be

DESCRIPTION

OF

AND Journy into DUCCAN.

LETTER III.

CHAP. I.

Animadverſions on the City and People of Surat in the East-Indies.

SIR,

GOING out to ſee the City of Surat, I paſſed without any Incivility, the better becauſe I underſtood not what they ſaid; for though we meet not with Boys ſo rude as in England, to run after Strangers, yet here are a ſort of bold, luſty, and moſt an end, drunken Beggars, of the Muſſlemen Caſt, that if they ſee a Chriſtian in good Clothes, Mounted on a ſtately Horſe, with rich Trappings, are preſently upon their Punctilio's with God Almighty, and interrogate him, Why he ſuffers him to go a Foot, and in Rags, and this Coffery (Unbeliever) to vaunt it thus? And are hardly reſtrained from running a Muck (which is to kill whoever they meet, till they be ſlain themſelves) eſpecially if they have been at Hodge, a Pilgrimage to Mecca, and thence to Juddah, where is Mahomet's Tomb; theſe commonly, like evil Spirits, have their Habitations among the Tombs: Nor can we complain only of this Libertiniſm, for the Rich Moormen themſelves are perſecuted by theſe Raſcals. Chap. I. The Rudeneſs of the Devotes,

As for the reſt, they are very reſpectful, unleſs the Seamen or Soldiers get Drunk, either with Toddy, or Bang (a pleaſant intoxicating Seed, mixed with Milk) then are they Monarchs, and it is And Seamen:

Letter III.

Madneſs to oppoſe them; but leave them to themſelves, and they will vent that Fury, by breathing a Vein or two with their own Swords, ſometimes ſlaſhing themſelves moſt Barbarouſly.

The Buildings.

The Town has very many noble lofty Houſes of the Moor-Merchants, flat at top, and Teraſſed with Plaſter. There is a Parſy, Broker to the King of Bantam, has turned the outſide of his Pockets on a ſumptuous Houſe, a ſpacious Fabrick, but ill contrived, as are many of the Banians. They, for the moſt part, affect not ſtately Buildings, living in humble Cells or Sheds. Glaſs is dear, and ſcarcely purchaſeable (unleſs by way of Stambole, or Conſtantinople, from the Venetians, from whom they have ſome Panes of Painted Glaſs in Saſh Windows) therefore their Windows, except ſome few of the higheſt Note, are uſually folding Doors, skreened with Cheeks, or Latiſes, Carved in Wood, or Iſing-glaſs, or more commonly Oiſter-ſhells. The greateſt Commodity here is Air, which is to be admired in the Rich Banyans, how they ſtew themſelves out of a penurious humour, crowding Three or Four Families together into an Hovel, with Goats, Cows, and Calves, all Chamber-fellows, that they are almoſt poyſoned with Vermin and Naſtineſs; but ſurely they take delight in it, for they will freſh and faſting beſprinkle themſelves with the Stale of a Cow, as you behold a good Chriſtian with Holy-water, or a Moorman ſlabber his Beard with Roſe-water: Nay more, they uſe it as a Potion, or Philter, and bid the Devil do his worſt after it; ſo ſtupid, that notwithſtanding Chints, Fleas, and Muskeeto's, torment them every Minute, dare not preſume to ſcratch where it itches, leſt ſome Relation ſhould be untenanted its miſerable abode.

The Heathen Rites more ſuppreſſed here than in Gulconda.

The Habits and Cuſtoms of this place are reconcilable with them in the Kingdom of Gulconda, only the Moguls being more abſolute, and of a more Puritanical Sect than the Chia's; the Heathens are ſuppreſſed in reſpect of their Barbarous Rites, and reduced to a more civil Garb, being more decently Clothed.

Moguls and Chia's diſagree.

The Moguls, who are Lords here, differ from them of Gulconda in point of their Caliph's Succeſſion, the firſt maintaining the Sect of the Arabs, the others of the Suffean, or Perſian.

Sects of the Moguls.

They have Four Expoſitors of the Law, to whom they give Credit in matter of Ceremonies, viz.

Hanoffi.
Shoffi.
Hamaleech.
Maluche.

Their great ſcruple is about Eating together among all ſorts of theſe Eaſtern Nations.

All Muſſelmen (true Believers) as they call themſelves of this Perſuaſion, Communicate in that point; only ſome Punctilio's in reſpect of Marriage remain yet undecided; as for an Hanoffi to offer his Daughter to a Shoffi, is a great ſhame; but if the other requeſt it firſt, he may comply without derogation.

They

Chap. I.

They are distinguished, some according to the Consanguinity they claim with Mahomet; as a Siad is a Kin to that Imposture, and therefore only assumes to himself a Green Vest and Puckery (or Turbat) none other being permitted to wear them. A Shiek is a Cousin too, at a distance, into which Relation they admit all new made Proselytes. Meer is somewhat Allied also, and Mussanne. The rest are adopted under the Name of the Province or Kingdom they are Born in, as Mogul the Race of the Tartars, and are esteemed, as the Name imports, White Men; Patan, Duccan; or Schisms they have made, as Bilhim, Jemottee, and the lowest of all is Borrah.

Their Diet.

These Eat highly of all Flesh Dumpoked, which is Baked with Spice in Butter; Pullow, a Stew of Rice and Butter, with Flesh, Fowl, or Fish; Fruits, Achars, or Pickles, and Sweatmeats: If they invite a Christian, they order Dishes apart, and between Meals Entertain with Coho, Tobacco, Pawn, which makes a fragrant Breath, and gives a rare Vermilion to the Lips; and as a great Compliment drown you with Rosewater, Senting themselves with Essence of Sandal and Oranges, very Costly, and exquisitely Extracted. They drink no Wine Publickly, but Privately will be good Fellows, not content with such little Glasses as we drink out of, nor Claret or Rhenish (which they call Vinegar) but Sack and Brandy out of the Bottle they will Tipple, till they are well warmed.

Way of Entertainment.

At the First entrance into their Houses, for the greater Respect, they meet at the Portal, and usher Strangers to the place of Entertainment; where, out of common Courtesy, as well as Religion, (when they enter an Holy Place) they pull off their Slippers, and after the usual Salams, seat themselves in Choultries, open to some Tank of purling Water; commonly spread with Carpets, or Siturngees, and long round Cushions of Velvet to bolster their Back and Sides, which they use when they ride in their Chariots, which are made to sit Cross-legg'd on, not their Legs hanging down as ours; it being accounted among them no good breeding to let their Legs or Feet be seen whilst sitting: In their Palenkeens, Coaches, or swinging Cotts, which they affect for Ease, are laid huge Bolsters of state, and Quilts of Cotton to lie at length, their Ceilings and Posts are Hung with Mechlapatan Pintado's, and adorned with other Gallantry.

Their Attire is Rich.

They go rich in Attire, with a Poniard, or Catarre, at their Girdle; as they are Neat in Apparel, they are Grave in their Carriage.

The Women wear Jewels.

Their Women wear the Breeches, but in a most servile condition; yet they have their Ornaments of Head, with Bracelets of Pearl, Ear-rings and Nose-rings, to which they hang Jewels, mostly set in Silver, because Gold is Nigess, or Unclean.

Strict observers of the Hours of Prayer.

They are strict observers of the Hours of Prayer, when they strip off all their Gorgeous Habiliments to their Shift, and after Washing Hands and Feet, Prostrate themselves during the time of Devotion, when Rising they Salute their Guardian-Angels according to the Opinion of the Stoicks, who allotted every one his Juno and his Genius; having made their Orisons, and Purified themselves, they return to Company as before.

They

Letter III.

They are great Revellers by Night, in the heat of the Day they ſleep and dally.

Great Revellers at Circumciſions and

They circumciſe the Foreskin of the Male, which is performed by a Barber, at Eight years of Age; with Feaſting, and carrying the Boy about in pomp, with Muſick and great Expreſſions of Joy. Of the Girls they make ſmall account, they being inſtructed within doors how to pray.

Marriages.

The Cazy or Judge, after the Match is made by the Parents, marries them; from whence doubtleſs our Phanaticks borrowed their Cuſtom of Marrying by a Juſtice of Peace: This is alſo a time of Solemnity ſometimes kept for ſeveral Weeks together with Illuminations on their Houſes, their Garments tinctured with Saffron, riding triumphantly through the Streets with Trumpets and Kettle Drums; fetching the Bride from her Kindred, and they ſending Banquets, Houſhold-ſtuff, and Slaves their Attendants, with a great Train through their Streets, which is all their Dowry: But the Cazy has a Knack beyond thoſe Couplers of Europe, he can looſe the Knot when they plead a Divorce. They have four Wives if they can maintain them, and as many other Women as they pleaſe; ſhe that bears the firſt Son is reckoned the Chief.

Quick in Labour.

At their Labours they ſeldom call Midwives, being pretty quick that way, though there are not a few live well by that Profeſſion; known by Tufts of Silk on their Shooes or Slippers, all other Women wearing them plain: At the end of their Quarentine, which is Forty days, after the Old Law, they enter the Hummums to Purify; and the Child, without much Ceremony, is named by the Parents.

Great Lamentation when any dye.

At Funerals, the Mullahs or Prieſts, make Orations or Sermons, after a Leſſon read out of the Alchoran, and lay them North and South, as we do Eaſt and Weſt, when they are Inhumed, expecting from that Quarter the appearance of their Prophet. Upon the death of any, in the hearing of the Outcry, which is great among the Women, beating their Breaſts, and crying aloud, they neither eat, nor ſhift their Cloaths, till the Perſon be interred; the Relations mourn by keeping on dirty Cloaths, and a neglect of their Apparel; neither waſhing nor ſhaving themſelves: It is uſual to hire People to lament, and the Widow once a Moon go to the Grave with her Acquaintance to repeat the doleful Dirge, after which ſhe beſtows Holway, a kind of Sacramental Wafer; and entreats their Prayers for the Soul of the Departed; and for that reaſon the moſt ſtore of Graves are in Croſs-ways, or High-roads, that the Paſſengers may be put in mind of that Office: They never Enſhrine any in their Moſchs, but in the places adjoining them; where they build Tombs, and leave Stipends for Mullahs to offer Petitions up for them.

The Duty of their Prieſts.

The Duty of the Mullahs, beſides theſe, is to call from the Steeples of their Moſchs every Pore, that is, once in Three hours ſtopping their Ears with their Fingers: Allah Eckbar, Allah Eckber, Eſchadu ela Hale ilallah we Eſchedu, Mahmed eweſul: Cuah Fleje ala Selah heie ula Felah, Alla Eckber, Alla Eckber, La Jelah Hallah: i.e. God is Great, I profeſs, there is no Deity but God, and confeſs that Mahomet is the Prophet of God. Their Prieſts ſay Prayers five times a-day, a-day, and expound the Alchoran once a-week, and that on Friday, which day they are not to lye with their Women, ſetting it apart for the Service of God.

The Xeriff their High-Prieſt.

Here is a Xeriff, who is as it were their Primate, under him the Cazys, or Judges, are the next, then the Inferior Clergy, as the Mullahs, and Scribes, or Teachers of Youth in the Arabick Tongue.

Extravagancies of the Fakiers or Holy Men.

With theſe, by the favour of the preſent Mogul, who lived long in that Order, till he came to the Throne, muſt be numbred the Fakiers or Holy Men, abſtracted from the World, and reſigned to God, for the Word will bear that Interpretation; on this Pretence are committed ſundry Extravagancies, as putting themſelves on voluntary Penances. Here is one that has vowed to hang by the Heels, till he get Money enough to build a Moſch to Mahomet, that he may be held a Saint. Another ſhall travel the Country with an Horn blowed afore him, and an Ox it may be to carry him and his Baggage, beſides one to wait on him with a Peacock's Tail; whilſt he rattles a great Iron Chain fettered to his Foot, as big as thoſe Elephants are Foot-locked with, ſome two yards in length, every Link thicker than a Man's Thumb, and a Palm in length; his ſhaking this ſpeaks his Neceſſity, which the poor Gentiles dare not deny to relieve; for if they do, he accuſes them to the Cazy, who deſires no better opportunity to fleece them: For they will not ſtick to ſwear they blaſphemed Mahomet, for which there is no evaſion but to depoſit, or be cut, and made a Moor.

They make every place their home, and all their own.

Moſt of theſe are Vagabonds, and are the Peſt of the Nation they live in; ſome of them live in Gardens and retired Places in the Fields, in the ſame manner as the Seers of old, and the Children of the Prophets did: Their Habit is the main thing that ſignalizes them more than their Virtue; they profeſs Poverty, but make all things their own where they come; all the heat of the Day they idle it under ſome ſhady Tree, at night they come in Troops, armed with a great Pole, a Mirchal or Peacock's Tail, and a Wallet; more like Plunderers than Beggers; they go into the Market, or to the Shopkeepers, and force an Alms, none of them returning without his ſhare: Some of them paſs the bounds of a modeſt Requeſt, and bawl out in the open Streets for an Hundred Rupees, and nothing leſs will ſatisfy theſe.

How clad.

They are cloathed with a ragged Mantle, which ſerves them alſo for a Matraſs, for which purpoſe ſome have Lyons, Tygres or Leopards Skins to lay under them: The Civileſt of them wear Fleſh-coloured Veſts, ſomewhat like our Brick-makers Frocks, and almoſt of that Colour. The Merchants, as their Adventures return, are bountiful towards them, by which means ſome of them thrive upon it.

They are become formidable.

Theſe Field Conventiclers at the hours of Devotion beat a Drum, from them called the Fakiers Drum; here are of theſe Strolers about this City enough to make an Army, that they are almoſt become formidable to the Citizens; nor is the Governour powerful enough to correct their Inſolencies. For lately ſetting on a Nobleman of the Moors, when his Kindred came to demand Juſtice, they unanimouſly aroſe roſe in defence of the Aggreſſor, and reſcued him from his deſerved Puniſhment.

Letter II.

The Governor not able to quell them.

For all the Governor comes to his Seat attended every Morning with 300 Foot with Fire-Arms, Three Elephants in their Cloathing (which is here alſo a principal Mark of the Greatneſs of theſe Men in place, the more Elephants they keep, they are looked on as more Honourable) Forty Horſes mounted, Four and twenty Banners of State; beſides a large Retinue of the Cazy's, who is always preſent to aſſiſt him in Law Points. Moreover he has Loud Trumpets made as big, and like our Stentoro Phonica, or ſpeaking Trumpet, with Thundring Kettle-Drums; yet neither the Formality of this Appearance, nor regard due to his Office, is terrible enough to prevail with theſe to ſubmit to reſign the Caitiff, and hardly is his whole Force able to keep them from bare-faced Rebellion.

The Villany of the Governor's Servants had a Tragical Event.

But though theſe Outlaws (for as ſuch they ought to be look'd on, while they diſown all Subjection) behave themſelves thus, the poor Inhabitants that work for their Bread, are under ſeverer Reſtraints; for the Governor's Servants being upheld by as uncontrouled Licentiouſneſs, on pretence of preſſing the Craftſmen from their daily Labour into the Governor's Service, extort continued Fees from them, or elſe they are ſure to be ſet on work, without any thing for their Pains: Which was but even now made a Publick Grievance, by the Reſiſtance of a ſturdy Patan, (who is ſprung from a Warlike People, of whom it is ſaid, They never draw their Swords, but Blood muſt follow): And thus it happen'd; The Patan having employ'd a Taylor at his houſe, one of the Governor's Men ſeized him for his Maſter's Service; but the Patan ruſhing in to releaſe him, the Soldier ran a young Brother of the Patan's through, naked and unconcerned in the Scuffle; which ſo enraged the Patan, that forcing the Sword out of the hand of this inhuman Butcher, he kill'd him and two more that came to his Reſcue; and going into his houſe, ſlew his own Wife, and Siſter, and a little Son of his own, that they might not fall a Sacrifice to the Governor's Rage: The wretched Taylor, animated by the Example of the Patan (tho but coolly), had murder'd his Wife had ſhe not fled; but laying hold on his Old Father and Mother, he diſpatched them; and bolting forth into the Street, ſet upon what Governor's Men he and the Patan could meet: Tidings whereof ſtriking the Governor's Ears, he came with all his Power to beſet the exaſperated and deſperate Men; but though a Thouſand Men were up in Arms, and gazing upon the Patan ſtanding with his Sword in his hand at the Entrance of the Houſe, none durſt venture to apprehend him; till his Fury abating, and Promiſes given by a Great Man, of Favour if he reſigned; he attending to his Parley, in the mean while two Men with Guns from atop of the Houſe diſcharged on him, and wounded him and the Taylor mortally, but not before they had carried this falſe Great Man with ſome of his Attendants along with them out of the World: So that theſe Curs ſet to keep the Sheep, are the firſt that worry them.

Leſt therefore all Shew of Juſtice ſhould be baniſhed, now and then, when they have not Mony to buy it off, or the Emperor be inform-informed, ſome Exemplary Puniſhments are inflicted: Some Inſtances whereof I ſhall relate. Chap. I.

Some exemplary Puniſhments.

The one was of an Armenian, Chawbucked through the City for ſelling of Wine. The other was of a Goldſmith who had coined Copper Rupees; firſt they ſhaved his Head and Beard, as our Countrymen do Bayliffs when they preſume to Arreſt in Privileg'd Places; then putting a Fool's Cap on his Head, they ſet him on an Aſs, with his Face to the Tail, which is led by an Holencore, and one of their Drums is beat before him, which is an Affront of the higheſt degree; thus they lead him up and down the City, where the Boys and Soldiers treat him but ſcurvily, pelting him all the way he paſſes: Being brought back to Priſon, they cut off his Hand, and let him lye during the Governor's Pleaſure. The Third was of a Pack of Thieves that had infeſted the Roads a long time, and after ſome whiles Impriſonment the Banyans proffered Money for their Redemption; but the Great Mogul ſending an Expreſs, they were led to Execution; They were Fifteen, all of a Gang, who uſed to lurk under Hedges in narrow Lanes, and as they found opportunity, by a Device of a Weight tied to a Cotton Bowſtring made of Guts, (with which they tew Cotton) of ſome length, they uſed to throw it upon Paſſengers ſo, that winding it about their Necks, they pulled them from their Beaſts, and dragging them upon the Ground ſtrangled them, and poſſeſſed themſelves of what they had: One of theſe was an Old Man with his two Sons, the youngeſt not fourteen. This being their Practice, they were ſentenced, according to Lex Talionis, to be hang'd; wherefore being delivered to the Catwal, or Sheriff's Men, they led them two Miles with Ropes about their Necks to ſome wild Date-Trees: In their way thither they were chearful, and went ſinging, and ſmoaking Tobacco, the Banyans giving them Sweetmeats, they being as jolly as if going to a Wedding; and the Young Lad now ready to be tied up, boaſted, That though he were not Fourteen Years of Age, he had killed his Fifteen Men; wherefore the Old Man, as he had been a Leader of theſe Two, was firſt made an Example for his Villany, and then the two Striplings were advanced, as all the reſt were, half a Foot from the Ground; and then cutting their Legs off that the Blood might flow from them, they left them miſerable Spectacles, hanging till they dropped of their own accord.

Delinquents of another kind.

The following Delinquents being of another kind, we ſhall ſee how they fare: The one was of a Rich Merchant of the Moors killing his Wife, and a Child he had by her of Three Years old, upon taking her with her Paramour in Adultery; for which Crime a Pecuniary Mulct excuſed him: The other was a Boy's ſticking a Sodomitiſh Moor to the Heart with his own Catarre, while he attempted upon his Body; which Fact was ſo far from being accuſed as a Fault, that the Boy came off with Commendation; though there is nothing more frequently committed among them, than the unnatural Sin of Buggery.

The Crime of growing rich.

There is another thing above all the reſt an unpardonable Offence; for a Banyan or Rich Broker to grow Wealthy without Protection of ſome Great Perſon; for it is ſo mighty a Diſquiet to the Governor, Letter III. that he can never be at eaſe till he have ſeen the bottom of this Miſchief; which is always cured by Transfuſion of Treaſure out of the Banyans into the Governor's Coffers: Which makes them become humble Suiters for the Umbrage of any of Quality, to skreen them from this Violence.

The Sheriff. The next in the Executive Power is the Catwal, the Governor of the Night, as the other two Great Officers rule the Day; or nearer our Conſtitution, the Sheriff of the City: For after the Keys are carried to the Governor, it is the Catwals Buſineſs with a Guard of near Two hundred Men, to ſcower the Streets and Brothels of Idle Companions; to take an account of all People late out, to diſcover Fires and Houſe-breakers, and to carry all lewd Perſons to Priſon, which is ſolely committed to his Charge: So that all Night long he is heard by his Drums and Trumpets, ſhouting and hallowing of his Crew in their Perambulation through all Parts of the City; with Lights and Flambeaus, with ſome few of his Companions in Coaches or Palenkeens: Moreover he ſeiſes all Debtors, and ſecures them, and has the care of Puniſhing and Executing all Offenders.

The Chief Cuſtomer. This is a Place of great Truſt, but neither ſo Honourable or Profitable as the Shawbunder's is; who is King of the Port, or Chief Cuſtomer, though ſomething abated by the Mogul's too fondly in a Religious Vanity granting Immunity to the Muſſlemen lately, which is no ſmall detriment.

The Cuſtom-houſe has a good Front, where the Chief Cuſtomer appears certain hours to chop, that is, to mark Goods outward-bound, and clear thoſe received in: Upon any ſuſpicion of default he has a Black-Guard that by a Chawbuck, a great Whip, extorts Confeſſion: There is another hangs up at the daily Waiters, or Meerbar's Choultry, by the Landing-place, as a terror to make them pay Cæſar his due; the Puniſhment, if detected, being only Corporal, not Confiſcation of Goods: This Place is filled with Publicans, Waiters and Porters, who are always at the Receipt of Cuſtom, but are a little too tardy ſometimes in the delivery of Goods, making the Merchant dance attendance, till a right underſtanding be created betwixt the Shawbunder and them, which commonly follows when the Fiſt is mollified.

The Mint. Over-againſt the Cuſtom-houſe is a ſtately Entrance into the Mint, which is a large Town of Offices within it ſelf; hither repair all Shroffs or Bankers, for the proof of Silver, which in this place is the moſt refined, and pureſt from allay, in the World; as is alſo their Gold: Their loweſt Coyn is of Copper.

Many Markets. Between theſe two is a crowded Buzzar of all thoſe who come to ſell and buy Cloath; being diſengaged here, we paſs the High-Streets, with Shops on each ſide, not like ours in Europe, being more like Pedlers Stalls; we croſſed ſeveral Buzzars, which yielded ſuſtinence to the many Mouths we encountred.

Piercing thorough the City to the Walls which are building to ſurround it, and a Ditch accompanying it, (though but ſhallow, yet the Wall is high, and of good well baked Brick) at length we came in ſight of the Caſtle, having a large Pomarium.

They

Chap. I.

The Caſtle built by Tamberlane.

They ſay it has been ſtanding ever ſince Tamberlane was here; who they give out to be its Founder: It may be ſo; for it is old, yet bears 30 or 40 ſtout Pieces of Ordnance, fronts the River, and is Moated by it; to which they paſs a Draw-bridge, but admit no Stranger: It is Manned by 300 Luſcarries or Soldiers, armed with Gun, Sword and Buckler, has a peculiar Governor independent from him of the Town or Province, being as it were confined to it, not preſuming, on forfeiture of his Head, on any account to paſs out of a Garden by the Bridge, it being his fartheſt Walk.

Up and down the City are Remains of Seva Gi's Fury, the Ruins being not yet repaired; of whom they ſtand in hourly fear, having their Sores ſtill freſh in their Memory: To prevent whoſe Rage, they are collecting an Hundred thouſand Rupees till their Walls be finiſhed, when we ſhall ſee how they will defend them; having 700 Men allotted for that Office, beſides Europe Gunners at every Gate, which are Six in number, beſide 36 Baſtions with half a dozen great Guns apiece: Upon the top they have piled ſpiked Timber to annoy the Scalers.

The Wall and Gates.

Every Gate is barbed with Iron Spikes to break the ruſhing in of the Elephants; theſe alſo are under a diſtinct Command.

Number of Soldiers.

The Governor of the Town has an Army of 1500 Men in pay, with Matchlocks, Swords and Javelins; Two hundred Horſe with Quivers full of Arrows at the Bow of their Saddles, Lances at their Right Stirrup, and Swords of an unweildy bulk, with Bucklers hanging over their Shoulders; their Bows are curiouſly and ſtrongly made with Horn, and for that reaſon better in Dry than Wet Weather.

Their Moſchs.

Among the many Moſchs to and again, only two are famous with long Spires by the Wall, where is a ſtately Dwelling for the Xeriff.

Caravans.

They have Three other Places for Strangers called Caravan-Serawes, or Inns, intended by the Donors gratis, but ſince perverted, and let out to Foreigners.

Stables.

Near the Governor's Stables were Forty Camels houſed, ready for War, and half a dozen Elephants.

Theſe Stables are rather Sheds, or Booths of Hair-cloath, to remove on occaſion, than any Building fixed for that purpoſe; and were it not for the manner of treating their Horſes, not worth the mentioning: They have no Racks, but feed as Nature intended them, from the Ground, if they get Hay; for their Corn, it is uſually Garavance, a ſort of Peaſe which they put into an Hair Bag, and by a String (clapping their Mouths into it) faſtned behind their Ears, is kept from the Ground; out of this they have their daily Allowance; beſide Butter, Sugar and Jaggaree or Mulaſſo's made into Paſt, with the Meal of Garavance, which fattens all their Beaſts of War, and makes them ſlick and fine; they cover them very warm with a kind of Felt or Flock-work, two or three double, and tye them by all their Feet ſtretched out at length; in which poſture they always ſtand: When they make their Beds, they ſift the Dung they make, after it is dried in the Sun, and make a ſoft lying for them of it; they court them with all the gentleneſs and kind Speeches imaginable, ſeldom or never ſpeaking to, or uſing them harſhly; every Horſe has one Man wholly imployed about his Service, and pretends to no other buſineſs; ſo that as good Horſes are chargeable to purchaſe, they are alſo chargeable in keeping.

The Governor quarrels with the Dutch.

The Governor about this time taking occaſion to quarrel with the Dutch, offering ſeveral Abuſes both of Body and Purſe; the Commodore was reſolved no longer to endure it, and therefore had ſent for their Fleet, and in the mean time threatned to remove the Factory to Gogo, a Port over-againſt Swally; which with Diu Point makes Swally Hole: To prevent which, a Decoy was put upon all Fringi's, that we could not go out of the Gates of the City, but by eſpecial Commiſſion from the Governor.

CHAP. II.

Shews the Tombs, Outwalks, Ceremonies, and Auſterities of the Gentiles, with the Ships and River about Surat.

The Raſpoots take Toll with the Mogul.

HAving obtained Leave of the Governor, we went out of the Walls by Broach-Gate (they taking Names from the chief Places they lead to), where, as at every Gate, ſtands a Chocky, or Watch to receive Toll for the Emperor; and which is a ſhame, a Raſpoot alſo for the Raſpoots, otherwiſe they would infeſt the Villages adjacent, and drive away the Cattel; for all which it is unſafe to be far out of the Town late at Night, unleſs well guarded. This way was all ſtrewed with Moor-men's Tombs, and one of eſpecial Note of a Perſian Ambaſſador, who returning from England with Sir Anthony Shirley, is reported to poyſon himſelf here, rather than anſwer ſome ill Management of his Office to his Maſter: Not far from whence, on a ſmall Hill on the left hand of the Road, lies Tom Coriat, our Engliſh Fakier (as they name him), together with an Armenian Chriſtian, known by their Graves lying Eaſt and Weſt: He was ſo confident of his Perfection in the Indoſtan Tongue, that he ventured to play the Orator in it before the Great Mogul. In his return from him he was killed with Kindneſs by the Engliſh Merchants, which laid his rambling Brains at Reſt.

Dutch and Armenian tombs.

From hence we paſſed over to the Dutch Tombs, many and handſome, moſt of them Pargetted. Adjoining to which the Armenians have a Garden, where on a Terras (Forty Yards in Length, and Five in Breadth) are reared ſeveral Monuments Coffin-Faſhion, with a place to burn Incenſe at the Head, like the Moors, only over it a Croſs: One of more Eminency had an Arch over it at the upper-end.

Thence we took a Round, though the Incloſures are contiguous, to the Engliſh Tombs, ſhort of which the Portugals have a Burial-Place.

The Engliſh Burial-Place.

The Ground the Engliſh Dead are inhumed in, is ſtocked not with ſo many Tombs as the Dutch; though in one of Sir George Oxendine's it excels the Proudeſt.

The

The French have a ſeparate Place to depoſit their Dead, overagainſt the Engliſh, with only one ſingle Tomb, and that a ſmall one.

The French Tomb.

In every place up and down the Fields are Tombs of Muſſlemen: A Mile from the City, buried like Diogenes with their Heels upwards, ſtand a Row of Sepulchres of the Muttany, or Burſta's Pilgrims, with the Soles of their Feet imprinted on the middle; ſome under a Fourſquare, others Round riſing Tombs, by the ſide of a Tank, on an aſcending Mount.

The Burſta's or Heathen Wanderers.

A Mile and a half further is Pulparra, a Town ſeparated for the Banyans to exerciſe their Funeral and Feſtival Rites. This is a Seminary of their Heathen Doctors or Brachmins, many of whom were in the River doing their Devotions, which conſiſts in Waſhing and Praying.

Pulparra, an Heathen Seminary.

The Elder ſate in a Row, where the Men and Women came down together to waſh, having Lungies about their Waſtes only, which before they put on, they ſelect a Brachmin of their proper Caſt to hold their Veſt; which they ſhift ſo cleaverly, that the quickeſt Eye can diſcover nothing more than decent. At their coming up out of the Water they beſtow their Largeſs of Rice or Doll (an Indian Bean) and the Brachmin his Benediction, by impreſſing a Mark anſwerable to their Caſts on their Forheads; which is the way they live, purely on Benevolence.

Here they have Two Pagods remaining, but defaced by the Moors: One of them, however, ſtill ſhews a Cruſt of Plaſter, with Images Antick enough, but of excellent durance and ſplendour, like Alabaſter, made of a white Loam calcined, and then called Arras; which they powder and ſteep in Water Three or Four Years before it be fit for their purpoſe; the longer the better.

Two Pagods of excellent Loam.

Here are many Monuments of their miſled Zeal; the moſt dreadful to remember, is an extraordinary one erected by the River-ſide, where they Burn their Dead, in Honour of a Woman who Burnt her ſelf with her dead Husband. Several Corps were Flaming in their Funeral Piles; which after the Fire has ſatisfied its ſelf with, they caſt the Aſhes up into the Air, and ſome upon the Water; that every Element may have a ſhare. Some of the Devouteſt deſire to expire in this Water, giving in charge to their Relations to lay them up to the Chin in it at the Article of Death.

The Burning of their Dead.

Thoſe whoſe Zeal tranſport them no farther than to die at home, are immediately Waſhed by the next of Kin, and bound up in a Sheet; as many as go with him, carry him by turns on a Colt-ſtaff; and the reſt run almoſt naked and ſhaved, crying after him, Ram, Ram, making all the haſte they can to Pulparra to Burn him; which Fire is often very coſtly, being maintain'd with Wood of Aloes; ſometimes they expend ſome Thouſands of Rupees. The Relations exclude themſelves all Society till the time of Mourning be over; the Women crying, O Si, O Si, beating their Breaſts violently, and expoſtulating the reaſon of their Departure, as if he had not a kind Wife, loving Children, good Poſſeſſions, and the like: In the time of this Mourning they beſtow largely to redeem Creatures appointed to Die, to excuſe Oxen and Buffola's from Labour, feeding them at their own Charges, beſides purchaſing Milch Kine, and giving them to poor People, inviting them to Funeral Feaſts, with other Largeſſes to the Brachmins.

Letter III.

The Poſtures and Severities of the Heathen Fakiers.

Here are out-acted all the boaſted Auſterities I ever heard of; I ſaw a Fakier of the Gentus, whoſe Nails by neglect were grown as long as my Fingers, ſome piercing through the Fleſh. Another grave Old Man had a Turbat of his own Hair (which they all Covet) Sun-burnt towards the ends, Grey nearer the roots, Plaited like the Polonian Plica, but not ſo diſeaſed, above Four Yards in Length.

Others with their Arms Diſlocated ſo, that the διάρθρωσις of the Joints is Inverted, and the head of the Bone lies in the pit or valley of the Arm; in which Caſe they are defrauded of their Nouriſhment, and hang as uſeleſs Appendices to the Body; that unleſs relieved by Charity, they are helpleſs in all Offices to themſelves.

Others Fixing their Eyes upon Heaven, their Heads hanging over their Shoulders, are uncapable of removing it from the Poſture they are in, being accuſtomed to that uninterrupted Reſt, having contracted and ſtiffned the Tendons of the Muſcles and Ligaments of the Neck, that both thoſe belonging to the Gullet, or the motion of the Head, are unſerviceable; inſomuch that no Aliment, not Liquid, can paſs, and that too with much difficulty.

Others by continual Abſtinence bring themſelves into a ſtrange Emaciated habit of Body, that they ſeem only walking Skelitons.

All of them go Naked (ſome plump young luſty Fellows) except their Privities, and bedawb themſelves over with Aſhes; who with their pleited Hair about their Heads, look like ſo many Mægara's; theſe wait on the others. The Ancienteſt of them addict themſelves to Reading, they live Six or Eight together, as they pleaſe; lie upon the Ground or a Matt, ſome of them in all Seaſons abide the open Air.

Panuch Augy, or the Penance of Five Fires.

At another time a Gentu Fakier was enjoined for Forty days to endure the Purgatory of five Fires; there being a great reſort by reaſon of a Feſtivity ſolemnized all that while; when I came early in the Morning (invited by the novelty and incredibility of the thing) he was Seated on a four-ſquare Stage or Altar, with three Aſcents, ſome Two Feet high, and as many Feet ſquare, ready to ſhew: While he was in a muſing poſture, other Fakiers (whoſe Duty it is daily to ſalute the Sun at his Height, Riſing, and Setting, with their Muſick of long hollow Canes) blew them for an hour, or Ghong; after which he fell to his Mattins, which he continued till the Sun began to be warm; then riſing he Bleſſed himſelf with Holy Water, and threw himſelf along on the loweſt ſquare, ſtill muttering to himſelf on his Knees, he at length, with one Leg bowed upright between his Thighs, riſes on the other, telling his Beads (which both Moormen and Gentus wear) which he had in his hands a quarter longer, and ſtands, like a Gooſe, unmoved all the time; then caſting himſelf down, he exerciſed himſelf, as Wraſtlers do here, very briskly, but guarding the poſition of his Leg, which he kept ſo fixed as if it had grown in that nature, as well when he roſe as grovelled on the ground; acting thus a quarter more, it had the ſame operation as the Stork's Bill uſed for a Suppoſitory, for it brought brought him to a Stool; he taking his Purifying-pot in his hand, marched on one ſide, where he tarried not long before he returning took up his Beads he had left; and in this Interim four Fires being kindled (any of them able to roaſt an Ox) at each Corner of the upper and leaſt Square, he having finiſhed ſome Fopperies with his Pot, Scævola-like with his own hands he increaſed the Flames by adding combuſtible Stuff as Incenſe to it; when removing from his Neck a Collar of great Wooden Beads, he made a Coronet of them for his Head; then bowing his Head in the middle of the Flames, as it were to worſhip, holding the other Beads in his hands, with his Head encircled between his Arms, his Face oppoſite to the Sun, which is the fifth Fire, he mounted his Body with his Feet bolt upright, and ſo continued ſtanding on his Head the ſpace of three hours very ſteddily, that is, from Nine till Twelve; after which he ſeats himſelf on his Breech croſs-legg'd after their way of ſitting, and remains ſo without either eating or drinking all the reſt of the Day, the Fires ſtill nouriſhed, and he ſweating (being one of a good Athletick Habit, and of a Middle Age) as if baſted in his own Greaſe.

Whether it be an Impoſture.

This is imagined to be an Impoſture; but if it be, it would make a Man disbelieve his own Eyes: Others more rationally impute the Heat from the Fires to be allayed by that overpowering one of the Sun; which I cannot wholly incline to, ſince we daily when abroad roaſt our Meat by Fires made in a clear Day without any ſhelter: But I rather conceive Cuſtom has inured his Body to it; for the very Mountebank Tricks declare it a Practice; and the other I think as feaſible as to eat Fire, tread on Hot Irons, (which is here uſed), or for Cooks to thruſt their hands into ſcalding Water without Injury.

A Devote that had not ſat down in ſixteen years.

Another Devote had made a Vow not to lye down in Sixteen Years, but to keep on his Feet all that while; this came accompanied with two others under the ſame Oath, the one had paſſed Five, the other Three Years; all Three of them had their Legs ſwoln as big as their Bodies, with filthy running Ulcers, expoſed to view for the greater Applauſe: Standing, they leaned on Pillows hung in a String from the Banyan Tree, and had a Pompous Attendance of ſuch ragged Fakiers their Admirers, with Muſick, Flags, and Mirchals: The Eldeſt having undergone the compleat Term, to crown all, was intombed in the ſame ſtanding Poſture Nine Days without any ſort of Food; and leſt any Pretext of that kind might leſſen his Undertaking, he cauſed a Bank of Earth to be heaped on the Mouth of his Cave, whereon was to be ſown a certain Grain which ears in Nine Days, which accordingly being done, eared before his being taken thence. I ſaw him preſently after his Reſurrection, in great State raiſed on a Throne under a Canopy, before which was a Fire made in the Pit he had been, where he put his Hands, being anointed with Oyl, untouch'd by the Flames: Which whether this may diſcover the Cheat of both this and the other, that ſuch an Unction may be to reſiſt Fire, Naturaliſts have not agreed in; and therefore I judge this rather a Deluſion, I having not been preſent at this Experiment: But that this is none I am aſſured, That the Banyans gave him Divine Honours, and ſaluted him proſtrate, offering before him Rice, and throwing Incenſe into the Fire: He had a Red Trident in his Letter III. his hand, and is enrolled one of the Heroes or Demi-Gods in their Superſtitious Kalender.

From this place of Pulparra to Surat, a Row of Trees on each hand ſhade the way, it being conſtantly filled with all ſorts of people either for Worſhip or Pleaſure.

A great Tank. The only thing of Grandeur extant of the Devotion of the Ancient Heathens, is a great Tank without the Walls of Surat, a Mile in Circumference, walled all about with deſcending Stone Steps: In the middle an High Place of the Heathens: Many ſumptuous Mauſoleums are erected near its Brink, with Aqueducts to convey Water, with which were it filled, the beſt Ship that ſwims in the Sea might ride in it: It looks now more like a Circus or Gymnaſeum, able enough to contain as many as ſuch Spectacles would delight. In their great Solemnities it is uſual for them to ſet it around, with Lamps to the Number of two or three Lecgues, which is ſo many Hundred thouſand in our Account.

Gardens. The Citizens by the King's Favour have good ſtore of Gardens neighbouring Surat; the biggeſt of all is the Queen's, though ſome Private Men have neater, where we often go to take the Air, and feaſt in pleaſant Choultries or Summer-Houſes, ſpread after the Moors manner with Carpets, refreſhed with various Figures of the Riſing Water, out of ſeveral Spouts from ſquare Tanks Pargetted. All the time of our durance here Water is ſprinkled, to mitigate the Fierineſs of the Sun.

Grottoes. Here are Grottoes deſcending alſo under Ground by huge Arches and Stone Steps ſhaded by Trees on each hand, till it come to the deep Well at bottom, from whence by Leathern Bags drawn upon Wheels by Oxen, the Water is carried up, and in Gutters ſtreams about the Gardens.

The Cotton-Tree. In theſe by the help of a Brachmin skilled in Simples, I have found the Silk-Cotton-tree, diſtinguiſhed by us from the Vulgar beneficial one, by its being a Tree, the other a Shrub; it is moſt like a Maple in Leaf and Branch, only the Bark is not furrowed; it brings forth between three Leaves, firſt a Bud or Button, then a white Flower, laſt of all Seed about which the Cotton grows, in three diſtinct Cells anſwering the three Leaves.

Bang. As alſo the Plant of which Bang is made; it grows as our Hemp, the Juice of whoſe Seed ground in a Bowl like Muſtard-ſeed, and mixed with any other Liquor, is that they equivocate with their Prophet inſtead of the Grape; and that which follows agrees to what Mr. Ray notes out of LOB in Ado: Lacuſtris aqua cui cannabis intabuerit tantopere viro nocet, ut epotaſit præſentiſſimo ſitientibus veneno; this with Dutry (as has been ſaid) is the inebriating Confection of the Poſt.

Alluh. Here he diſcovered to me his beloved Alluh, the Bark of a Tree, the preſent remedy againſt all manner of Fluxes.

No great Variety of Flowers. Though theſe People delight much in Gardens, yet are they but rude, compared to ours of Europe; they make a noble Entrance, a Banquetting-houſe in the middle eying the four Quarters of the Garden, beſet with Trees like Wilderneſſes in every Quarter, or elſe planted with Potatoes, Tawms, Berenjaws, both hot Plants, and their Coolers, Coolers, as Pompkins, Cucumbers, Gourds, and ſuch like; they are only divided by Gravelly Walks and Water-courſes; not curiouſly adorned with Flowers; Biſmalvas and ſome Wall-flowers or Stock-Gillyflowers being the height of what they aim at: Only the Culga, ſo famed for the Silk, in imitation of its Paint, I take it for our Amarillis; and Δενδρομαλάχη, or the Tree Mallow, which is red as Scarlet in the Morning, and at Noon faints into a pale Colour, and towards the Evening is pure white; ſome few Lyſimachias, which beſides their ſeveral ſorts of Jeſſamins, is all the choice: Roſes would grow here if they would but cultivate them. Chap. II.

A Mile from the City grows the humble Senſitive Plant, common in the Fields; Eaſtward of Surat, two Courſes, i. e. a League, we pitched our Tent under a Tree, that beſides its Leafs, the Branches bear its own Roots, therefore called by the Portugals, Arbor de Rais: For the Adoration the Banyans pay it, the Banyan Tree (by whom it is held as ſacred as the Oak to our Old Druids); who paint it daily, and make Offerings of Rice, and pray to it: It has Leafs like an Ivy, and is the ſame with that at Johanna, only that was incorporated into one Body, and this by often taking Root is capable of overſpreading a whole Field, ſo that it is ſaid there are of them able to ſhade an Army of 30000 Horſe and Men ſingly; however it is poſſible to be ſo contrived, if it be lookt after, to make a Wood alone of it ſelf. The Senſible Plant and Arbor de Rais.

The Hedges and Lanes are chiefly ſet with two ſorts of Buſhes, called by us Milk-Trees, becauſe of a ſucculent Juice like Spurge, white, and of the conſiſtency of the beſt Milk; but if it comes near the Skin or Eyes it is not ſo benign, according to the Experience of the Famous Verulam, [Nat. Hiſt. Cent. 7. Exp. 39. Omnem ſuccum lacti ſimilem ex plantis inciſis acrem eſſe,] and my Obſervation here; for if by chance it ſtick upon any part of the Body, it frets like an Eſcarotick; and I have ſeen an unruly Horſe, ruſhing through it, both blind himſelf and Rider, both their Heads being ſwoln to an extraordinary bigneſs. I believe it to be a kind of Tithymal, quod tenerum lac non ſecus ac Manna effundit; the firſt ſort of which has broader and jucier Leafs, and has four or five together; not jagged, but ſomewhat oval, a Finger's length, and half as broad; one only thick Stalk ariſes from the Root, and ſeveral Branches proceed from thence; they are all Green and Tender, ſpringing up a Man's height, full of Prickles as our Carduus, of whoſe Milk inſpiſſated is made Euphorbium. The other grows up into the Body of a Tree, and is Woody; above which it ſends forth ſeveral tender ſmooth Stalks, which ſprout out into Boughs ſeeming almoſt naked, becauſe its Leafs are ſmall, and come out at its Joints, ſometimes ſingly; it is moſt like a Privet, very quick of Growth, and each of them make good Fences. The Goats deſpiſe it not, feeding, though very cautiouſly, on the Leafs and Branches of the latter, when the Heats have parched up the Graſs and other Plants. Milk Buſhes.

Before we leave the pleaſant Fields for the duſty ſtinking Town, Sugar-Canes and Tobacco would deſerve our Remark, which are both plentifully thriving here; had not theſe been already the Subject of other Pens. Sugar-Canes and Tobacco.

Letter III.

The River commodious for their Ships.

The next diverting Proſpect muſt be that of the River; it glides by the Town in ſwift Tides, and at Spring-Tides (which it would always do, were they induſtrious to keep it in its Banks) it bears Ships of 1000 Tun Burthen up to Surat Walls; but they unlade firſt, becauſe of the Sands, occaſioned by their Sloth. They lye very thick a Mile together, and ſcattering down to the River's Mouth, reckoning more than an Hundred Sail of good Ships, beſides ſmall Veſſels: For all which they were beholden to the Poverty of ſome Engliſh Shipwrights, the firſt of whom received the deſerved Reward of his Officiouſneſs (being Scutica dignus) from the Moors, who apprehending him ſtealing Cuſtoms, Chawbucked him handſomly.

The Dutch teach the Natives nothing.

The Dutch never permit the Natives to be taught any Eminent Art whereby they may become their Competitors: Nor is it, I think, better Policy to inſtruct them in any beneficial Science, as that of Navigation, no more than one would an Adverſary how to uſe his Weapons; which theſe, had they equal Courage to their other Advantages of Strength and Nature, might eaſily thereby turn the Points of their Weapons upon us.

Their Navy.

But for all theſe great Preparations, as yet they dare not venture out without Europe Paſſes, or Pilots; though ſome of their Ships carry 30 or 40 Pieces of Cannon, more for Shew than Service. Beſides theſe Merchant-Men, here are Three or Four Men of War as big as Third Rate Ships: The other are Frigats fit to Row or Sail, made with Prows inſtead of Beaks, more uſeful in Rivers and Creeks, than in the Main. The Emperor alſo has four great Ships in Pay always, to carry Pilgrims to Mæcha on free Coſt, and bring them back from Hodge, where they prove a Crew of ſanctified Varlets.

The young King of Bantam.

The Heir of Bantam is now here to take his Paſſage thither in one of them, with his Retinue, which are ſome of the Pengrims or Lords of the Country, his Unkle and others, which were about Twenty, with their Wives: He was firſt at Bombaim, where he was entertained like a Prince, for the Obligation the Company have to their Trade there, he having been diſobedient to the King his Father, and has not yet ſhewed any kindneſs to the Engliſh, ſiding rather with the Dutch Intereſt to undermine the Old King, and ſettle them in the Pepper-trade, which afterwards will not be in his Power to redeem out of their hands: Here little notice is taken of him, they all being in miſerable poor Habits, and he of little Credit, being a Giddyhead, were it not for the Engliſh Captain that brought him, a Confident of the Old King's, who furniſhes him with Money but ſparingly, he being indiſcreet in his Expences. He is of the Java Extraction, ſhort of Stature, broad-fac'd, little Eyes, and leſs Beard, a mere Boy; the reſt wear their Beards like the Chineſes, which is comparatively like a Cat's; their Heads ſhaved, covered only with Skull-Caps of Knit-Work, their Upper-Garments looſe like a Frock: When they appear before him, they proſtrate themſelves along, then riſing up with Reſpect, ſit crouching on their Heels: Their Women were covered with dark Blue Sheets.

His Story.

The Old King had retired from the Cares of Government, and committed all to this his Son; but the Pengrims ſoon tired with his exorbitant Sway, made Interceſſion for the Old King's reaſſuming his Authority; thority; whereupon this Voyage was framed as an Expedient to ſettle his Mad Temper, being intruſted to the ſober Conduct of the King's Brother. Chap. III.

Theſe Veſſels that are for this Voyage are huge unſhapen things, and bear both the Name and Model of their old Junks: They return uſually very Rich, and are at their Arrival adorned moſt abundantly with Streamers. Their way of Salutes are with Even, as ours with Odd Guns. Their Junks, and

The Seamen and Soldiers differ only in a Vowel, the one being pronounced with an u, the other with an a; as Luſcar is a Soldier; Laſcar, a Seaman. The Captain is called Nucquedah, the Boatſwain Tindal. Seamen.

CHAP. III.

Of their Solemnities, Sports and Paſtimes; their Marriages; of the Parſeys, their Strength by Land and Sea, their abundant Wealth, and Fitneſs for Trade.

AND now having entertained you thus far, I ſhall continue to you the Circumſtantial or Accidental Shews, together with their Sports and Exerciſes.

The firſt depends on the New Moon, when, all Malice apart, the Moors embrace one another, and at the ſight thereof make a Jubilee, by firing of Guns, blowing of Trumpets, Feaſting and Praying very devoutly. Their New Moons.

The next is the Day of the Week obſerved for the Great Mogul's Advancement to the Throne; which is not ſo generally kept, only by the Soldiers and Officers.

But that which affects them all, is at the end of their Ramazan or Lent, which is always the firſt New Moon in November; which as it is obſerved with the greateſt Strictneſs, not ſwallowing their Spittle all the Day of its Continuance, ſo is it celebrated when it concludes, with the higheſt Expreſſion of Joy and Solemnity. Ramazan or Lent.

The Governor goes in Proceſſion, and beſtows his Largeſs in his Paſſage to the Chief Place of Devotion, liberally ſcattering Rupees as Kings do Medals at their Coronations, waited on by all the Gallants of the Town: His Son firſt leading a Body of Horſe of the Cavalry of the City; himſelf beginning the firſt File on the Left-hand, the place of higheſt Honour, it was as deep as the Street would admit, obſerving no Rank: After whom followed the Cazy, with Green Banners, with a Band of Foot of 100 Men; then the Cuſtomer with his Men and Colours, both carried in Palenkeens; whom followed the Mullahs and Merchants, without any diſtinction, ſome in Coaches, others in Palenkeens, with their large Troops of Servitors: Then five Elephants in Armour, with Banners ſupported by thoſe that were in their Seats, capable of a dozen Sitters; they manage them by one Rider ſitting near his Neck, with an Iron Inſtru- Grandeur of their Governor and Great Men.

Letter III. ment a Cubit in length, the Point bended downwards as long as a Finger, aſcribed by Livy to the Invention of that famous Leader's Brother Aſdrubal, who ſeeing theſe Creatures of great Terror to the Enemy, but if taking an heedleſs Courſe were as liable to damage Friend as Foe, found out this Remedy; delivering a Graver to their Maſters with an Hammer, ordered them to ſtrike it with their main ſtrength on the Juncture where their Head was faſtned to their Neck, if they were unruly, whereby the great Bulk fell to the Ground. Magiſter fabrile ſcalprum, cum malleo inter aures poſitum, ipsâ in compage quâ jungitur capiti cervix, quanto maximo poterat ictu adigebat, But afterwards they learned by ſtriking on the Vertebra's of the Neck, to rule them; which Cuſtom I ſee here maintained. After theſe came a Dozen Leopards on State-Hackeries with their Keepers, who train them up to hunting. At convenient diſtances the Trumpets ſounded, and Camels of War with Patereroes on their Saddles, marched with a Pace laborious to the Guiders, giving them a Diſeaſe not much different from a Gonorrhea. Here nothing was ſeen but Banners and Streamers, nor heard but Kettle-Drums and Trumpets; after which followed the Governor in the middle of a Troop of Soldiers, all in Coats of Mail and Headpieces, armed at all Points, both themſelves and Horſes; himſelf mounted on a little She-Elephant, with all the Trappings and Accoutrements of State. Et ad morem antiquum quo puberes filii & jam in virili togâ, comitabantur triumphantem patrem, quod etiam ex Livio appareat de Paulo loquente. Two or three Striplings (his own Children) rode ſmiling with him, who were very White reſpectively; the Governor himſelf being a Mogul, which is as much as Suffet in Arabic, from whence the Perſian Emperor is called Suffee, and this, Mogul, as being derived from the ſame Parent; as alſo are all thoſe deſcended from them. In this State he rode to a Place ſet apart for this Day's Solemnity, out of the Walls, to the Queen's Garden-Gate, before which it ſtands, where after Prayers he receives the Compliments of the Grandees, and returns to Feaſt.

At this time the Walls of the City, and Towers of the Caſtle, wanted not their Adornments, being beſtuck with bloody Enſigns, and ſmoking with Guns of Jubilee, as well as tooting with their Trumpets, and beating with their Drums; as the Jews on their Sabbaths, or their ſolemn Feaſt days were wont.

The Moors Æde. The New Moon before the New Year (which commences at the Vernal Equinox) is the Moors Æde, when the Governor in no leſs Pomp than before, goes to ſacrifice a Ram or He-Goat, in remembrance of that offered for Iſaac (by them called Iſhauh); the like does every one in his own Houſe, that is able to purchaſe one, and ſprinkle their Blood on the ſides of their Doors.

The Mourning for Hoſſeen Goſſeen. About this time the Moors ſolemnize the Exequies of Hoſſeen Goſſeen, a time of ten days Mourning for two Unfortunate Champions of theirs, who periſhed by Thirſt in the Deſerts, fighting againſt the Chriſtians: Wherefore every Corner of the Street is ſupplied with Jars of Water; and they run up and down like Furies in queſt of theſe two Brethren, laying about with Swords, Clubs, and Staves, crying with that earneſtneſs upon their Names, and dancing in in ſuch Antick Dances as reſemble the Pyrrhical Saltation. Hæc Celebratio non omnino diſſimilis ei generi exerceri ſolita à juvenibus armatis Lacedemoniæ cum Patris Achillis rogum celebraret; that a ſober Man could make no other judgment on them, than that they were diſtracted. This is done through the Streets, where if two Companies encounter, they ſeldom part without bloody Noſes; which Occaſion being given like Eſau's Intentions on the Day of his Father's Lamentation, to revenge himſelf on his Brother Jacob, has been the Cauſe why the Mogul has reſtrained it for the prevention of Outrages; but yet his Mandate is not ſo valid to make them forſake it here: After Sun-ſet they eat, and fall to ſinging the Pſalms of Doud, or David, in the moſt conſonant Tone I have heard. Chap. III.

The laſt Day they prepare a couple of Coffins, and have a Man or two on Horſeback all beſtuck like our Man in the Almanack, with Arrows; theſe ride reeling, and ready to drop off their Horſes for Faintneſs, till they come to the River, where they put the Coffins afloat with a loud Cry, and then returning, repeat with great Veneration their Names, and after this trim their Beards, waſh and ſhift their Cloaths, (all this while worn negligently, as Mourners) and return to their more beaſtly Vomit of Luxury, than this of more than Manly Fury.

The Emperor a great Zealot for his Religion.

This Religious Bigot of an Emperor Auren Zeeb, ſeeks not to ſuppreſs it utterly, but to reduce the Celebration, to preſerve their Memories by a pious Reſpect, ſuitable to the Gravity of the Moors: For, ſays he, hereby Opportunity is offered to the Cophers (Unbelievers) to think Muſſlemen favour the Lewd Worſhip of the Heathens; which is not only a Scandal to the Mahometan Religion, but an Encouragement to the Enemies thereof to perſiſt in their own, whilſt ſuch Licentiouſneſs is connived at in that which ſhould be ſet as a Pattern for them to imitate: For even at this inſtant he is on a Project to bring them all over to his Faith, and has already begun by two ſeveral Taxes or Polls, very ſevere ones, eſpecially upon the Brachmins, making them pay a Gold Rupee an Head, and the inferior Tribes proportionable; which has made ſome Rajahs revolt, and here they begin to fly to the Portugal Countries, and Bombaim; though ſhould they make a joint Reſiſtance they are a thouſand to one more than the Moguls can with an unanimous Contrivance fairly muſter.

How they behave themſelves in Eclipſes.

On an Eclipſe of the Sun or Moon, the Moors are in a lamentable Plight, making a great Noiſe with Pots and Pans, and other noiſy Inſtruments; not omitting their Prayers, fancying them prevalent to deliver them from their Travel. When the Heathens, inſtructed by their Brachmins, by a better Philoſophy, declare to them the Day before the two great Luminaries are obſcured by the Interpoſition of the Moon's, or Earth's Globe, that they may Faſt, Waſh, and Purify themſelves for Twenty four Hours before the Eclipſe happens, and all the time of its laſting; after which is paſt, they feaſt and beſtow their Benevolence freely on the Brachmins, holding them for this their profound Knowledge, in mighty Admiration.

And though the Jollity and Pomp of the Heathens is much allayed by the Puritaniſm and unlimited Power of the Moors, inſomuch that they are wholly forbidden to Burn their Wives with the Huſ-

Letter III.

Husbands; yet muſt not the Indians be totally denied their Feaſts, and chiefly that of their publick Nuptials, which comes in twice a Year; as the Atticks in their γαμηλιῶν in January and October, ſo theſe in the Months Fulgannau and Puxu, in January and March; to enjoy which times of Feſtivity, the Governor expects large Gratuities, which they collect as every one can afford; All which times they make Proceſſions, and appear, (eſpecially the Children and young Folks) in rich Dreſſes of Gold and Silver, Mitres on their Heads, and weighty Saſhes about their Middles, bedawbed and ſtained all over with Saffron Colour; the Married Folks riding on Horſeback, Palenkeens, and Coaches, ſplendidly adorned, drawn by Oxen, Goats, and Elks, Painted over with Saffron, their Horns tipped with Silver; Muſick, Streamers, and Banners going before them, the Women Singing Epithalamiums, the Men following, and a great Attendance with Pageants, Mirchals, and Kitſols, giving Pawn and Coco-Nuts frankly, as they paſs.

Ceremonies in Marriage.

The Ceremonies after Waſhing and Cleanſing, conclude by their Sitting Two Hours Tied by the Neck, while the Prieſt Prays, the Woman being then Manacled with Gold or Silver Shackles about her Wriſts and Ankles, a white Sheet being held over them Unvailed, a Coco-Nut exchanged to confirm the Bargain, and Corn ſcattered upon them; all Emblems of the Matrimonial Bands, Chaſtity and a firm reſolution to comply with one anothers Fortunes; and then diſmiſſes them, by ſprinkling Water on the Married Couple, that they may Increaſe and Multiply. The Women are never Married more than once, the Men are under no ſuch Obligation.

Dually of the Heathen.

The firſt New Moon in October, is the Banyans Dually, a great Day of Celebration to their Pagan Deities, when they are very kind-hearted, preſenting their Maſters with Gifts, as knowing they ſhall be no Loſers, and Entertain one another with mutual Mirth and Banquetting.

The Women have a time of Freedom.

The next Moon their Women flock to the Sacred Wells; where, they ſay, it is not difficult to perſuade them to be kind, ſuppoſing their Pollutions not to remain after their Waſhing in theſe Holy Waters.

Feaſt of Flies.

March begins with a Licentious Week of Sports and Rejoycing, wherein they are not wanting for Laſcivious Diſcourſe, nor are they to be offended at any Jeſt or Waggery. And to ſhew their Beneficence at the beginning of the Rains, they Treat the Ants and Flies with Sweatmeats and Wafers, ſtudiouſly ſetting Hony, Syrups, or any thing that may entice them to their own death, out of their way; allowing them Sugar, or any other dried Confects for their Repaſt, inſtead of them.

Hoſpitable to Dogs.

They are conſtant Benefactors to the Dogs, which are many, the Bitches littering in the Streets; but avoid touching them, as they would an Holencore, whom if their Garments chance to bruſh, they hie them home, Shift, and Waſh.

Their Exerciſes, or Recreations.

And now we enter upon the Agonalia, firſt of the Moors: They love to outdo one another in Feats of Activity, as Riding full ſpeed, and to ſtop with a Jerk, or motion of the Body, their Horſes being well managed; Tilting and Gereeding, that is, Caſting of Darts,

P. m.

Darts, both for Utility and Recreation; Shooting with Bows and Arrows, which is near at hand, not far off, as we at Rovers; Running on Foot, which belongs to the Pattamars, the only Foot-posts of this Country, who Run so many Courses every Morning, or else Dance so many hours to a Tune called the Patamars Tune, when they labour as much as a Lancashire Man does at Roger of Coverly, or the Tarantula of their Hornpipe; these wear Feathers in their Turbats. Chap. III.

The Wrestlers Anoint with Oil, and are Naked, only a Belt about their Wastes, in which they weary one another only by pure Strength and Luctation, not by Skill or Circumvention; these two last use Opium to make them perform things beyond their strength; and it is incredible to think how far these will Travel before the virtue of it be worked off. Wrestling.

Hunting of Tigers is sometimes a Pastime, at others a Tragy-Comedy; for besetting a Wood where Tigers lurk, with Men and Horses, and putting a Set of their loud Musick to strike up in the middle of it; they rouze at the unaccustomed Noize, and rushing forth seize the first in their way, if not Shot or Launced, to prevent them: Wild Bulls and Buffola's are as dangerous, nor is the Boar less fierce than any of them. Hunting.

Antilopes are set upon by Leopards on this wise; they carry the Leopards on Hackeries, both for less suspicion, and to give them the advantage of their Spring; which if they lose, they follow not their Prey, being for a surprize; wherefore the Hackeries wheel about at a distance, till they come near enough to apprehend them, they feeding fearless of the Hackeries; then with three or four Leaps, after a small Chace, seize them, and easily become their Masters.

The Great Men have Persian Greyhounds, which they Cloathe in Cold Weather, and some few Hawks; a Colum may be Hunted with a Greyhound, as we do Bustards, being a great Fowl and long in Rising.

Buffola's animated by their Keepers, fight with great fury; their Horns, being reversed, are useless; but they knock Foreheads with a force adequate to such great Engines, till they are all of a gore, and follow their blow with such vigour, that the strength of their Backs exert themselves into their Natural Parts, which they brandish as if stimulated to Venery; the stronger will hardly permit the weaker to go back to return with his force, but pressing on him, endeavours to bear him down; thus foiling one another, they are a long time before they will yield. Buffola's and Rams set to Fight.

Persian Rams set together in this manner, are not parted without a bloody Catastrophe, which are kept on purpose for the sport of their Great Men; as likewise are Elephants, who engage at the Will of their Masters.

Here are no Gladiators, but at Cudgels they will play as at Backsword, till they warm one another.

The chief Pleasure of the Gentiles, or Banyans, is to Cheat one another, conceiving therein the highest Felicity, though it be Cuckolding, which they are expert at. They will play at Chess, or Tables; but their utmost Fewds are determined by the dint of the Tongue, to scold lustily, and to pull one anothers Puc- The Masterpiece of the Banyans.

keries or Turbats off, being proverbially termed a Banyan Fight.

Nevertheleſs they are implacable till a ſecret and ſure Revenge fall upon their Adverſary, either by maliciouſly plotting againſt their Life, by clancular Dealings, or Eſtate, by unlawful and unjuſt Extortions: Then you ſhall have them with this Prayer in their Mouths,

——— ——— Pulchra Laverna
Da mihi fallere, da juſtum ſanctumque videri;
Noctem peccatis & fraudibus adjice nubem.

Education of Youth.

Example is more than Precept, and the Youth have no other Education beſides their Parents, more than ſome mean Pedagogue's, who teaches the Children firſt their Letters or Cyphers on the Ground, by writing on the Duſt with their Fingers, which is their Primer; where when they are perfect, they are allowed a Board plaſtered over, which with Cotton they wipe out, when full, as we do from Slates or Table-Books; when they arrive to Paper, they are preſumed to be their Crafts-maſters, and to earn it.

The ſloth of the Moors a whet to the Banyans.

The Moors, who are by Nature ſlothful, will not take pains; being proud, ſcorn to be taught; and jealous of the Baſeneſs of Mankind, dare not truſt their Children under tuition, for fear of Sodomy; whereby few of their Great Men or Merchants can read, but keep a Scrivan of the Gentues: On which account it is the Banyans make all Bargains, and tranſact all Money-buſineſs; and though you hear, ſee, and underſtand them, yet you ſhall be chouſed, they looking you in the face; for as a piece of Superſtition, they muſt put their Hands under a Ramerin, or Mantle, when by their Fingers they inſtruct one another, and by that ſlight often contradict their Tongues: Such a ſubtile Generation is this, and ſo fitly ſquared a Place is Surat to exerciſe their Genius in.

All the World brings Treaſure to India.

In February the Buſſorah Ships, and in Auguſt the Juddah Fleet from the Red Sea, each of which, beſide our Europe Ships, export vaſt quantities of Indico, Cotton, Cotton-Yarn, and Silks; and vend them to the Caphalay, waiting on them over-land; ſo that returning, they are forced to ballaſt their Ships with Dates, Perſian and Arabian Drugs; and freight with Horſes from each Place: But the main is brought back in Gold, Silver and Pearl, which does in a manner center here: For though it circulates all the World over, yet here it is hoorded, Regis ad exemplum, both by King and People, he having Tanks thereof unſealed for many Ages, and the Gentiles hide it for Eternity. So that though it be not of the growth of this Country, yet the innate Thrift of the Gentiles, and the ſmall occaſion of Foreign Expences, and this humour of laying up their Talent in a Napkin, buries the greateſt part of the Treaſure of the World in India: There being a far greater urgency for Cloathing, than that of Superfluity; which is the Spice-Trade of the South Seas, which only pays for what it carries off here, all the reſt loading their Beaſts without the Money returned in their Sacks Mouths; and for all that the Hollanders return Money from hence, yet it is ſwallowed up again by by the Trade of the Bay, and a great deal more conſumed there for their fine Cloath.

The Baſſa of Buſſorah.

This Year the Buſſorah Fleet brought the Baſſa of that Place hither, who is now encamped on a pleaſant Green by the River's ſide; the Great Mogul condeſcending to have the Title of Sanctuary to the Diſtreſſed inſerted among his other Aiery ones, as King of the World where-ever the Sun ſhines, being the Inſcription on his Rupees in Perſian Characters (the Court Langague.)

For which ſake he diſpatched Five hundred Horſemen, and Three hundred Camels, to receive the Baſſa, his Family and Retinue, aſhore; who being Governor in Meſopotamia for the Grand Seignior, grew powerful, and was therefore ſuſpected; which drew the Forces of the Sultan his Maſter upon him; but knowing the Sea open, he ſues to the Mogul for Protection, who promiſed not only to receive him, but imploy him honourably; and as a Teſtimony of his ſincere Intentions, has ſent theſe to attend him to Court.

Their Jewellers may be improved.

The Trade of Jewellers is no ſmall addition to the Profit of this Town, which I ſhall not now ſpecify, intending to treat of them apart, both for yours and my own ſatisfaction, together with a general Collection of Coins and Weights, as time and opportunity ſhall make me better acquainted: In the mean time, telling you what I ſaw at the Houſe of an Hindu that wrought in Coral, where was to be wondred the Tools he worked with, more than his Art, becauſe we ſee it ſurpaſſed in Europe; but with far more invention of Inſtruments: Here Hands and Feet being all the Vice; and the other Tools unſhapen bits of Iron: From whence I went the ſame day to a Moorman that cuts all ſorts of Stones, except Diamonds, with a certain Wheel made of Lacre and Stone ground and incorporated, only to be had at Cochin, and there the Name is known.

They cut Diamonds with a Mill turned by Men, the String reaching, in manner of our Cutlers Wheels, to leſſer that are in a flat Preſs, where under Steel-wheels the Diamonds are faſtned; and with its own Bort are worn into what Cut the Artiſt pleaſes: Theſe are ſold moſt in the Country, they coming ſhort of the Fringies in Fancy; wherefore they are ſent rough into Europe, where they are both ſet and cut to more advantage.

A Banyan that ſeemingly is not worth a Gosbeek (the loweſt Coin they have) ſhall pull out of his Puckery ſome thouſand Poundſworth of theſe for ſale; when all the Warineſs in the World is required, and ſo I diſmiſs them.

The City kept naſtily.

This City is very naſty by their want of Privies, and their making every Door a Dunghill; yet never had they any Plague, the Heats evaporating, and the Rains waſhing this Filth away.

The Diſeaſes.

The Diſeaſes reign according to the Seaſons; the North blowing, Bodies are rendered firm, ſolid and active by exhauſting the Serous Humours, *ad Hyp.*17. Aph. Lib. 3. for which cauſe Dry Weather is more healthy than Moiſt, it haſtening Digeſtion, and facilitating Excretion, when no Fevers that are treacherous root themſelves in a deep Putrefaction. About the Variable Months they are miſerably afflicted with Coughs and Catarrhs, Tumors of the Mouth and Throat, Rheumatiſms, and intermitting Fevers; Alſo Small Pox invades the Youth, as in all India, ſo here: In the extreme Heats, Cholera Morbus, Inflammations of the Eyes by Duſt and the fiery Temper of the Air: In the Rains, Fluxes, Apoplexies, and all Diſtempers of the Brain, as well as Stomach; to correct which, the Natives eat Hing, a ſort of liquid Aſſa Fœtida, whereby they ſmell odiouſly. For all Lethargick Fits they uſe Garlick and Ginger, given in Oyl or Butter.

Remedies outward and inward.

To Cup they uſe Ventoſoes, without Scarifications. They have good Eſcaroticks and Veſicatories, made by a certain Nut, the ſame they chop or mark their Calicuts black with inſtead of Ink.

They apply Cauteries moſt unmercifully in a Mordiſheen, called ſo by the Portugals, being a Vomiting with a Looſneſs; the like is done in a Calenture.

Phyſick here is now as in former days, open to all Pretenders; here being no Bars of Authority, or formal Graduation, Examination or Proof of their Proficiency; but every one ventures, and every one ſuffers; and thoſe that are moſt skilled, have it by Tradition, or former Experience deſcending in their Families; not conſidering either alteration of Tempers or Seaſons, but what ſucceeded well to one, they apply to all.

In Fevers their Method is to preſcribe Coolers, till they have extinguiſhed the Vital Heat; and if the Patients are ſo robuſt to conquer the Remedies uſed to quench the Flame of the Acute Diſeaſe, yet are they left labouring under Chronical ones, as Dropſy, Jaundice, and Ill Habits, a long while before they recover their Priſtine Heat.

They are unskill'd in Anatomy, even thoſe of the Moors who follow the Arabians, thinking it unlawful to diſſect Human Bodies; whereupon Phlebotomy is not underſtood, they being ignorant how the Veins lye; but they will worry themſelves Martyrs to death by Leeches, clapping on an hundred at once, which they know not how to pull off, till they have filled themſelves, and drop of their own accord.

Chirurgery is in as bad a plight, Amputation being an horrid thing: Yet I confeſs it is ſtrange to ſee, that what Nature will effect on ſuch Bodies, Intemperance has not debauch'd.

Pharmacy is in no better condition; Apothecaries here being no more than Perfumers or Druggiſts, at beſt; for he that has the boldneſs to practiſe, makes up his own Medicines, which are generally ſuch Draughts, that if their own Energy work not, yet the very Weight muſt force an Operation.

They pretend to underſtand the Pulſe, but the Urine they will not look on.

I have ſeen a Barber undertake the Cure of a Bloody Flux, by pretending the Guts were diſplaced, and laying the Patient on his Back, and gently tickling his Reins, thruſt on each ſide the Abdo- men with all his ſtrength; then placing a Pot filled with dried Earth, like that of Samos, upon his Navel, he made it faſt by a Ligature; and on ſome Bodies thus treated he had gained Credit, but this died. Proſper Alpinus mentions ſomething like this among the Egyptians.

Here they will ſubmit to Spells and Charms, and the Advice of Old Women.

Here is a Brachmin Doctor who has raiſed a good Fortune; they pretend to no Fees, but make them pay in their Phyſick; and think it Honour enough if you favour them with the Title of your Phyſician only.

The Country Phyſician.

This Brachmin comes every day, and feels every Man's Pulſe in the Factory, and is often made uſe of for a Powder for Agues, which works as infallibly as the Peruvian Bark; it is a Preparation of Natural Cinnaber. Midwifry is in eſteem among the Rich and Lazy only; the Poorer, while they are labouring or planting, go aſide as if to do their Needs, deliver themſelves, waſh the Child, and lay it in a Clout or Hammock, and return to work again.

The ſeveral Tribes how known.

The Mixture of Caſts or Tribes of all India are diſtinguiſhed by the different Modes of their binding their Turbats; which cannot be found out preſently, there being ſuch variety of Obſervation.

The Engliſh have the Reſpect of their Ombrahs.

Amidſt which it is time to return, to ſee what Grace we are in among this divided Multitude: Our Uſage by the Pharmaund (or Charter) granted ſucceſſively from their Emperors, is kind enough, but the better, becauſe our Naval Power curbs them; otherwiſe they being prone to be imperious, would ſubjugate us, as they do all others that are harneſs'd with the Apron-ſtrings of Trade: Suppoſing us then to bear the Face of Miniſters of State, as well as the ſly Viſage of Mechanicks, they depoſe ſomething of their Ferity, and treat with us in a more favourable Stile; giving us the Preference before others here reſident, and look on us with the ſame Aſpect as they do on their great Ombrahs.

In Town there are many private Merchants that bear a Port equal to our Europe Companies, being only Vockeels or Factors for money'd Men up the Country, that drive as great a Trade as the Company, yet dare not aſſume that Liberty allowed us: We fortify our Houſes, have Bundeos or Docks for our Veſſels, to which belong Yards for Seamen, Soldiers, and Stores: To that which belongs to the Dutch is a ſweet Garden, ſhor'd up with Timber from the incroaching River, with Arbors and Beds after the Europe Mode.

What Rarities in the Engliſh Houſe.

Among the Rarities of our own Houſe I ſaw an Unicorn's Horn, not that of the Rhinoceros, of which Cups are made and profered for Sale here, and are relied on to diſcover Poyſon, if poured into them.

Letter III. with a dark Grey upon a White Ground, upon the Back direct, in other Parts waving towards their length: As alſo Pigeons tumbling in the Air, attributed to the Indiſpoſition of their Brain; but to me it appears a voluntary Action, they not falling at all upon it, but after three or four Turns would fly, and repeat it as often as they liſted, without any interruption in their Courſe, and when they ſeemed to direct themſelves to any place, without any Inclination to it, as an Irregularity, but rather out of Affectation; which notwithſtanding cannot be taught any, but only thoſe of this kind; no more than any other beſides Carriers, (which were here with blubber'd Noſes, and of a Brown Colour) to carry Letters: Others walked on the Ground, with their Breaſts bearing out, and the Feathers of their Tails ſpreading like Turkies, bridling their Heads ſo that they were even with their Rumps; this alſo is a peculiar Species, and not Artificial; they propagate their own kind, and are of a pied Colour.

From Siam are brought hither little Champore Cocks with ruffed Feet, well armed with Spurs, which have a ſtrutting Gate with them, the trueſt mettled in the World; they are generally White, with an Eye of Yellow. Here were Milk-White Turtles from Buſſorah, Cockatooas and Newries from Bantam, as alſo a Caſſawar that digeſts Iron.

From Amidavad ſmall Birds, who, beſides that they are ſpotted with White and Red no bigger than Meaſles, the principal Choriſter beginning, the reſt in Conſort, Fifty in a Cage, make an admirable Chorus.

And alſo for Vermin, the ſtrongeſt huge Rats, as big as our Pigs, which burrow under the Houſes, and are bold enough to venture on Poultry, and make them their Prey: A Mongooſe is a-kin to a Ferret: Spuirrels delicately ſtreaked White and Black, run about the Houſe, and on top of Terraſſes. Musk-Rats of the ſame Colour, ſhort-feeted, but a Span in length, their Bodies no thicker than a Mouſe; they infeſt the Houſes and Water-Jars with their Scent; from which laſt all Care is taken to preſerve them. Guiana, a Creature like a Crocodile, which Robbers uſe to lay hold on by their Tails when they clamber Houſes.

Venomous Creatures. For Inſects, Centipedes, Scorpions, and vaſt Spiders; theſe lye perdue, and often ſet upon People unawares; for the Venom of the two former, they have Oyl made of each; the firſt is the worſt, and often deadly; the other works off after a burning Fit of Four and twenty hours. Abroad in the Fields and Rivers are poyſonous Snakes; and here was lately a Woman, as ſhe went to fetch Water at the River, devoured by an Aligator or Crocodile, though the Brachmins pretend to Charm them that they ſhall do no Miſchief in this their Sacred River; and this was given out to be a Judgment not otherwiſe to be expiated.

The Surat Governor forced to comply with the Dutch. And now the Dutch Fleet being arrived at the River's Mouth (after having demoliſhed the City St. Thomas, near Fort St. George, the French yielding on Diſcretion), they reſtored us the Priſoners taken in the Engagement, having treated them very civilly: And the Governor was forced to go from Surat to Swally (to the Dutch Commo-Commodore, removed thither) to intreat an Agreement; the Clamours of the Merchants being inſtant, the Buſſorah Fleet was in jeopardy, which they threatned to ſeize; but on his Appearance, and Aſſurance of Satisfaction, all was ſalved. Leſt therefore this ſhould be judged too mean a Compliance, he paid a Viſit with all his Pomp to our Deputy-Preſident, ſtill at Swally, though the Europe Ships were gone, others from the South-Seas being expected. Chap. III.

Thus repaſſing the River after this Great Man, in order to repair aboard Ship, I beheld whole Droves of all Sexes and Ages coming to waſh in the River, which is done twice a day; and the Fineſt Dames of the Gentues diſdained not to carry Water on their heads, with ſometimes two or three Earthen Pots over one another for Houſhold ſervice; the like do all the Women of the Gentiles.

The Parſeys. On this ſide the Water are People of another Off-ſpring than thoſe we have yet mentioned; theſe be called Parſeys, who were made free Denizens by the Indians before the Moors were Maſters, and have continued to Inhabit where they firſt ſet Footing, not being known above Forty Miles along the Sea-coaſt, nor above Twenty Mile Inland. It is likely theſe upon the overflow of the Scythians, and their Irruption into Perſia, were driven from thence as Fugitives to ſeek freſh Habitations; which, thoſe furniſhed with Boats from the Perſian Gulf, might eaſily eſcape thither; where they complying with ſome Propoſitions, as not to Kill any Beaſts or living Creatures, and Conform to many of the Gentue Ceremonies, were Entertained and allowed to live among them.

Since the Moors have Subdued the Country, they think themſelves not obliged by the former Capitulation, they Feeding on both Fiſh and Fleſh; and for that reaſon were in hopes of exemption from the preſent Poll, pretending their Law agreeable to the Moors, but that would not free them from the Tax. Theſe drink Wine, and are of the Race of the Ancient Perſians.

Worſhip the Sun. They Worſhip the Sun, and keep at Nunſarry, a Delubrium, where is always a Fire (firſt kindled by the Sun) kept alive as the Holy Veſtal Nuns were wont; they Adore all the Elements, and if at any time they go a Voyage, will not exonerate in the Sea, or on the Water, but have Jarrs on purpoſe; if their Houſes be on fire, they quench them not with Water, rather chuſing to load them with Duſt or Sand.

They expoſe their Dead to Ravenous Fowls. Theſe Bury not their Dead, but expoſe them in round Tombs made on purpoſe, (open on top, and walled high around, in diſtinct Apartitions) to the Vultures and ravenous Fowls to Entomb them; and to that end, in the middle of this Encloſure is a Well for the Filth to drain away; the next of Kin, after the Body is put in, Watch aloof, to know what Part theſe Birds of Prey lay hold on, and from thence make their report of the future Bliſs, or ill State of the Deceaſed.

Their manner of Living. Theſe are ſomewhat Whiter, and, I think, Naſtier than the Gentues; and Live, as they do, all of a Family together; as if the Father be Living, then all the Sons that are Married, and Men grown, with their Wives and Children, houſe it with the Father, and have a Portion of his Stock; if he die, or be abſent, the Eldeſt Brother has Letter III. has the Reſpect of the Father ſhewn, and ſo ſucceſſively; they all Riſing up at his Appearance, and Sit not till he be Seated.

Theſe are rather Husbandmen than Merchants, not caring to ſtir abroad; they ſupply the Marine with Carts drawn by Oxen, the Ships with Wood and Water; the latter of which is excellent, drawn out of a Well at old Swally; where, and at others, the Women put me in mind of Jacob's Well, and the Cuſtom of old for them to draw Water, which though here it is fetch'd up by Oxen, yet elſewhere the Women draw in Jarrs, or Earthen Pots. The Moors have it brought on Buffola's Backs, or elſe on Oxen; which here alſo they uſe, as all over India, inſtead of Pack-horſes, their greateſt Caphala's conſiſting of them, Horſes being only for War or Pleaſure, and the beſt of them Foreigners, and of great Prices; ſo that 300 l. is but an eaſy Rate for a good Perſian or Arab.

Large Milk-White Oxen.

Here are brought up large gallant Milk-White Oxen with Circling Horns, artificially Modelled in Caſes, which they Tip with Silver, Gold, or Braſs, and make them ſhine like Jet; putting a Rope through their Noſtrils, and an Headſtal on them of London Cloath, ſurrounding their Necks with Collars for Bells, Feeding them delicately as their Horſes; and one of theſe fitted for a Coach, will Sell for 30 or 40 l. The other Oxen are Little, but all have a Bunch on their Neck; and how they become Oxen is on this manner; Their Religion not allowing them to Caſtrate them, they Bruiſe their Teſticles, not Geld them by Cutting them off when Young; which anſwers the intention as fully as the other. This kind of reſtraint upon Nature is exerciſed on no Brutes but theſe, they never offering to deprive their Horſes of their Stones or Tails, which they always ſuffer to grow; a Bobtailed Nag, or Gelding, being as rare here, as a Crop-eared Horſe, which never was ſeen.

A Buffola.

A Buffola is of a Dun Colour, and are all as big as their largeſt Oxen; they love to wallow in the Mire like an Hog; there are of them Wild, which are very Fierce and Miſchievous, Trampling a Man to Death, or Moiling him to Pieces with their Foreheads; their Horns are careleſly turned with Knobs around, being uſually ſo ordered, or rather diſordered (for they retain no certain Form) that they lie too much over their Heads to do any harm with them. Their Fleſh is reckon'd Hotter and Courſer than Beef, which is the moſt common Suſtinence of the Moors; as their Milk and boiled Butter is of the Gentues; for did they not boil their Butter, it would be Rank, but after it has paſſed the Fire, they keep it in Duppers the year round: On which D^r N. G. in his Account of the Rarities of the Royal Society, has ſufficiently enlarged.

The Marſhes breed Cattle.

Here in the Marſhes are brought up great ſtore of Cattle of all ſorts; and though there lie ſtore of Aligators to and again, they are ſeldome known to Prey either on them or their Young; ſo that what ſtir they make of Charming them, is but a pious Fraud of the Brachmins, they being a lazy ſort of Amphibious Creature, feeding on Graſs as well as Fiſh, and I queſtion whether ever their Appetite ſtand towards Fleſh.

The Mutton here is not much inferior to the Mutton of England, for the Pallat, though as to its Wool, there is no compare. Cows

Butter

Butter ſometimes will be hard in the Cold Seaſon, and look yellow, but they arrive not to the making of Cheeſe, unleſs it be ſoft Cheeſe, which pickled, our Seamen keep a good while, as they do their Achars. Chap. III.

The Growth of this Place.

Here grow Carrots, Turnips, Rhadiſhes; Cabbage rarely, though Coleworts frequently; Melons of all ſorts, and Betes: Wheat as good as the world affords; Rice, Barley, Millet, and Nuchanny; Peaſe and Beans; Oyl-Trees, and Rape for Lamp Oyl; (only Wax-Candles for the Rich, by reaſon of the warmth being to be uſed).

Herbs for Salading are Purſlain, Sorrel, Lettice, Parſley, Tarentine, Mint, and Sog, a ſort of Spinach.

Here Aſparagus flouriſh, as do Limes, Pomegranates, Genitins; Grapes in abundance; but the Moors ſuffer no Wine to be made.

The Columbine.

Fiſh, Oiſters, Soles, and Indian Mackerel, the River yields very good, and the Pools and Lakes ſtore of Wild Fowl; peculiarly Brand-Geeſe, Colum, and Seraſs, a Species of the former; in the Cold Weather they ſhunning the Northern rigid Blaſts, come yearly hither from Mount Caucaſus; what is worth taking notice of, is their Aſpera Arteria, wound up in a Caſe on both ſides their Breaſt-bone in manner of a Trumpet, ſuch as our Waits uſe; when it is ſingle it is a Seraſs, when double a Colum, making a greater Noiſe than a Bittern, being heard a great while before they can be ſeen, flying in Armies in the Air.

Wine and Strumpets ſet the Soldiers and Seamen together by the Ears.

As we came nearer Swally, Groves of Brabb-Trees preſent themſelves; from whence the Parſeys draw Wine a-kin to Toddy, which after the Sun is up, contracts an Eagerneſs with an heady Quality; ſo that theſe places are ſeldom free from Soldiers and Seamen of the Moors, which ſometimes meeting with ours, there happen bloody Frays, eſpecially if the Quarrel be about Strumpets, who here ply for their Fares: The like diſputes are ſometimes among the Europeans themſelves, and then they make ſport for the Parſeys upon the Trees, who have the diverſion of the Combatants; as Boxing among the Engliſh; Snicker-Sneeing among the Dutch; ripping one anothers Bellies open with ſhort Knives; Duelling with Rapiers among the French; Sword and Dagger among the Portugals.

Four Arab Ships.

Coming to the Marine, beſide the Dutch Fleet and Engliſh Ships, were Four Arabs with Red Colours, like Streamers, Riding in the Hole. Theſe are true Rovers both by Sea and Land; they are conſtantly upon the Plunder with the Portugals, but care not to engage where nothing is to be gotten but Blows, waſting thoſe Places that lie moſt open on the Sea-coaſt and Unguarded.

Theſe have lately fitted themſelves with good ſtout Ships at Surat, their own Country ſupplying them with no Materials for Building; the non-payment whereof, according to the Contract with the Governor, at preſent has put a ſtop to their increaſe that way in Shipping; and has kindled matter for farther alarming the Merchants: For the Governor, for his ſecurity, has ſeiſed the Imaum's Vockeel, nor intends he to enlarge him till the uttermoſt Gosbeek be paid.

On

Letter III.

On this Pretence they begin to interrupt the Merchants on the Seas, ſeiſing their Veſſels, and furniſhing themſelves at cheaper Rates.

Nor does their late Enterprize over the Portugals make them leſs formidable; ſo that if they be not checked by theſe Knights of Lisboa, they will infect this Ocean, no leſs than the Moors of Algiers, Tunis and Tripoly, do the Narrow Seas in the Mediterranean, eſpecially the Gulf of Perſia, in whoſe Mouth they are conveniently ſeated, and villainouſly inclined; in which it concerns them to omit no Diligence.

Having ſtaid here ſince the cloſe of the Rains, all the Cold Seaſon, and beginning of the variable Winds, which are ſent hither to qualify the Heats before the fall of the Rains (they blowing very high) I left the moſt frequented Port in India, and the only one on this Coaſt the Mogul has.

It is a Corporation exempt from any Juriſdiction but the Emperor's; though it be but the ſecond City of the Province, and within this laſt Century, by the concourſe of the Europeans, advanced from a Fiſhing Town to be ſo great an Empory.

Ro Neal, a Mile beyond it on Swally ſide, was once before it, now abandoned to Seamen and Waſhermen: The Cuſtomers then paid half to the Portugals, who once a-year came with their Provoes and received their Levies; ſince this is become of more note, it is better looked after by the Mogul, than that was by the Emperor of Cambaia.

It has for its Maintainance the Incomes of Thirty ſix Villages; over which the Governor ſometimes preſides, ſometimes not, being in the Jaggea or Dioceſs of another; who fail not once a-year to ſend to reap the Profit, which is received by the Hands of the Deſie or Farmer, who ſqueezes the Countryman, as much as the Governor does the Citizen: Corn being diſtributed among them for ſo much Earth as they Till, which at the time of Harveſt is not carried home, before the Deſie hath taken Three parts, leaving no more for their pains, and to ſow the Land again, than One.

The Buſineſs of the Cuſtoms, as we have already ſaid, is ordered by the Chief Cuſtomer, who has Chockies in all Inland Parts to receive Toll, and is reſponſible to none, only the Emperor.

Mahmud Emir Caun, Son of Emir Jemla, Governor of the Province.

To govern the Province, Mahmud Emir Caun is entruſted, the Son of Emir Jemla, who eſtabliſhed Aurenzeeb in his Throne.

His Metropolis is at Amidavad, the Chief City of Guzerat: Who notwithſtanding he has vaſt Forces, Wealth and Territories, is not able to quell the Coolies from pilfring, Seva Gi from plundring, and the Outlawed Raſpoots from diſpoiling, where-ever they pleaſe to deſcend in Companies from the Mountains, or Troops out of the Deſart of Sinda: Though none of theſe, nor all joined together, can cope with him in a pitched Field, but only by Thievery and Surprize: Wherefore when any Caphala or Treaſure paſſes, they hire Soldiers to guard it, otherwiſe they are liable to be made a Prey.

Were theſe Difficulties removed, Surat, as if Nature had deſigned her both by Sea and Land the Seat of Traffick, would have nothing to hinder her from being the compleateſt Miſtreſs thereof in the whole whole World: If the Diſpoſition of the People be conſidered, what Maſters they are of this Faculty, of Buying at ſmall, and Vending at great Rates, both Native and Exotick Wares! The ſordid Penury of the Banyans that live poorly and meanly, yet worth a King's Exchequer; and notwithſtanding the Governor often finds occaſion to fleece them, yet by the quickneſs of Merchandiſe paſſing thorough this City, they recruit on a ſuddain. Chap. IV.

The commodiouſneſs of the River ſerving to bring Goods in from Europe, Aſia, Africa and America; the long continued Current from the Inland parts through the vaſt Wilderneſſes of huge Woods and Foreſts, wafts great Rafts of Timber for Shipping, and Building; and Damar for Pitch, the fineſt ſented Bitumen (if it be not a Gum or Roſin) I ever met with.

And if the King's Fleet be but ordinary, conſidering ſo great a Monarch and theſe Advantages, it is becauſe he minds it not; he contenting himſelf in the enjoyment of the Continent, and ſtyles the Chriſtians Lions of the Sea; ſaying that God has allotted that Unſtable Element for their Rule.

They have not only Cair-Yarn made of the Cocoe for Cordage, but good Flax and Hemp; and Iron from the Mountains of the South: So that it may be concluded, for the Benefit of an Harbour, for the Diſpoſitions of the Natives, for a convenient Supply (or more truly Abundance) of all things, for a due imployment of them; but above all, for the Commodities Exported, and the Riches Imported, Surat cannot be fellowed in India.

CHAP. IV.

Brings me with a New Deputy-Governor from Surat to Bombaim, and ſends me to the Mogul's General at Jeneah.

THE Fourth of April 1675. arriving at Bombaim with Mr. Gyfford, he was reinſtated Deputy-Governor of that Iſland; Captain Shaxton in this interim having his Sword demanded from him by the Governor, and had been under Confinement; being bound to anſwer an Indictment, wherein he was accuſed of Abetting the Mutinous Soldiers.

Captain Shaxton ſent home.

For whoſe Trial, after a long endeavour to bring him to acknowledgment, was erected a ſelect Court of Judicature, and an Attorny ordered to impeach him, who with ſome borrowed Rhetorick endeavoured to make him appear a Second Catiline; but he cleared himſelf ſo handſomely of all Objections (being ſick at that time the Stirs were, and having no reference to him, their Complaints being of another nature, as the taking Money for more than could be paſſed current again, and other like pretended Exactions) that they had no more to anſwer, than that it ſhould be referred to the Company; before whom he muſt perſonally appear, and therefore was ordered home, but was prevented by Death at the end of his Voyage: Otherwiſe he would have made it plain, Envy had underhand worked, what ſhe durſt not attempt boldly on a Man of Honour; and for no other Reaſon, than that he underſtood himſelf as a Soldier, and in that point would be known.

Letter III.

By this Man's Misfortune might have been ſeen the diſlike that the Company's Servants bear towards any of equal poiſe with themſelves, and not of that Rank; for thereby they count they are injured, having others put over their heads, as 'tis termed; but if by chance they convince them of their Folly, it becomes a Crime unpardonable: The firſt ground of this Quarrel being upon unneceſſary Appendices to the Fort, as Palliſadoes in Mud, ſo contrived, that they were rather a means to take than defend it, which afterwards were all waſhed away by the Rains; to theſe ſome Deſpight being added (he being a Man ſharp in his Jeſts, and blunt in Counſel) it never ended, till it proved as fatal as Remus's leaping over his Brother Romulus his Ditch, caſt for a Trench about Old Rome.

A Sea-Tortoiſe taken.

Few days had been ſpent afore a Sea-Tortoiſe was brought to the Fort, in Length Six Feet, the content of his Hut near two Buſhels, reckoning only that part with which his Back is ſhielded, being an huge Shell of a brown Colour; never to be made tranſparent as thoſe come from the South-Seas are, nor eaſily to be crackt by any weight; for Experiment, I and two more got upon it, and the Tortoiſe unconcerned carried us: Its Head is loricated with Scales, the Neck reaching as far as the Hut, ſoft and undefenſible; the Fins are four, placed inſtead of Legs, by which it crawls as well as ſwims; the Belly is covered with a Breaſt-plate called the Callapee, ſoft and whitiſh in reſpect of the Back-piece or Callipet; its Tail is ſhort and wreathed like a Serpent's; altogether it is as lovely as a Toad: It ſighs like a Woman, and weeps like a Child; being taken and turned on its back, it is ſhiftleſs.

The Fable of its having three Hearts confuted.

I cauſed it to be opened, and examined its Heart, which (contrary to the Opinion of the Vulgar) is but One, they affirming it to be Three, grounded on this Miſtake; the Auricles being larger than in other Creatures, equalling almoſt the Ventricles and whole Body of the Heart, which is bigger in proportion than belongs to ſuch an Animal, being as large as an Ox's; which might be the reaſon of its Puſillanimity: The Veins and Arteries were filled with Currents of cold black Blood: It participates more of Fleſh than Fiſh, of a viviparous than oviparous Offspring, yet lays imperfect Eggs without a Cruſt (only covered with a Membrane, being moſt Yolk) buried by it in the Sands, to receive from the Sun's heat the perfection of their Hatching (as the Eggs of Egypt from Furnaces, or others from Dunghills): It ſpawns them as Fiſh do, in huge quantities, as much at one time as will more than fill a Seaman's Bonnet (every one being as big as an Hen's Egg) By them aboard Ship they are ordered like buttered Eggs of a Fowl, though nearer akin to a Serpent's, hanging together as thoſe do.

For this end they come aſhore, and when purſued, caſt up with their Claws a Cloud of Sand to blind their Enemies; when overtaken ſome are ſo big, four men can hardly turn them.

It

Letter III.

It is ſuppoſed they feed on the Graſs or Oaz on Land, or at the bottom of the Ocean; and from the Fable of the Three Hearts, ſprings the Conceit of its Tripartite Community, of Fiſh, and Fleſh, and Fowl; the outward Covering being Shelly, the inner Meat Carnous, its way of preſerving its kind being by Eggs, as the Feathered Fowl do: To me it ſeems (though the Fleſh be highly extolled for the taſte and colour of Veal) neither Fiſh, nor Fleſh, nor good Red Herring.

The Fleſh reſtorative.

It bears the Vogue for altering the Blood; wherefore good in Scurvies got by bad Air and Diet in long Voyages, and for the Running of the Reins by impure Copulation; for which 'tis uſed as an undoubted Cure, purging by the Genitals an Oily viſcous Matter of a Yellow hew, if fed upon conſtantly for thirty days; reſtoring the decayed Vigour of the Body, and giving it a grace and luſtre as elegant, as Viper Wine does Conſumptive Perſons, or worn-out Proſtitutes.

About this time the Preſident put in execution a Project for the advancing the Iſland Bombaim; wherefore an Envoy was ſent to explore the Paſſage through Seva Gi's Country into the Confines of Duccan; but returned with a fruitleſs Account, only making farther work for me.

One of the Mogul's Generals over Seventeen thouſand Horſe, and Three thouſand Foot, and Governor of Jeneah (the Chief City of that Kingdom) having occaſion for one of my Function, on St. George's Day I was commanded by the Honourable Gerald Aungier, with only Oral Inſtructions, to embarque on a Bombaim Boat of Twelve Oars and a Steer's-man, waited on by two of the Governor's Servants, four Moor Peons, a Portuguez, my own Servants, a Brachmin for Linguiſt, an Horſe-keeper, eight Coolies to my Palenkeen, a dozen Fraſſes for Lumber, and one Horſe.

Take Boat for Duccan.

Thus equipped, I left Bombaim about Three in the Afternoon, and the ſame Night about Nine Anchored on this ſide Tanaw, where in our paſſage were viſible a great way off, on the tops of the Mountains, ſeveral Fortreſſes of Seva Gi's, only defenſible by Nature, needing no other Artillery but Stones, which they tumble down upon their Foes, carrying as certain deſtruction with them as Bullets where they alight: The next Morning, with only ſending my Servant aſhore to acquaint the Rendero, I quitted the Paſs; and a Mile beyond the City deſerted Baçein River on the left, and took our Courſe up a ſpacious Navigable River, which makes the Iſland of Baçein, the Banks of which are low and fruitful; on both ſides are placed ſtately Aldeas, and Dwellings of the Portugal Fidalgos; till on the Right, within a Mile or more of Gullean, they yield poſſeſſion to the Neigbouring Seva Gi, at which City (the Key this way into that Rebels Country) Wind and Tide favouring us, we landed at about Nine in the Morning, and were civilly treated by the Cuſtomer in his Choultry, till the Havaldar could be acquainted of my arrival; who immediatly ordered me a great Moſch for my reception, whence I ſent the Brachmin to complement him, and deliver the Preſidents Letter.

Letter III.

Landing and Reception at Gullean.

Who underſtanding my Buſineſs, deſired the favour of me to viſit him, and there ſhould attend on me ſome of his Friends that were diſeaſed; I eaſily condeſcended, thinking to procure my Diſpatch with more ſpeed; which ſucceeded alike, I receiving his Chitty or Paſs, with two Guides to direct us through the Country.

Early therefore the next Morning I left the moſt Glorious Ruins the Mahometans in Duccan ever had occaſion to deplore: For this City, once the chief Empory, excelled not only in Trade, but the general conſequent, Sumptuouſneſs, if the Reliques of the Stately Fabricks may add Credit to ſuch a belief; which Reliques, notwithſtanding the Fury of the Portugals, afterward of the Mogul, ſince of Seva Gi, and now lately again of the Mogul, (whoſe Flames were hardly extinguiſhed at my being here, and the Governor and People on that ſcore being prepared more for Flight than Defence at preſent) are ſtill the extant Marks of its priſtine Height: The remaining Buildings having many Stories of ſquare facing Stones, and the Moſques, which are numerous, of the ſame, abating little of their ancient Luſtre, being all watered with delicate Tanks; about which are coſtly Tombs with their diſtinct Chappels or Moſques, where formerly the Mullahs had fat Penſions to pray for the departed Souls, which is maintained by them as efficacious; wherefore they covet Funerals in the moſt conſpicuous Places, which the Pleaſant Summer-houſes hanging over here, cauſe theſe Places to be; the unemploy'd People of the Town daily waſting their time in theſe inviting Varieties; which is the only thing pleads for their continuance, Seva Gi as a Gentu being otherwiſe inclinable to raze them; yet purpoſely to pervert them from the uſe of the Donors, and Intention of the Founders, orders them to be converted into Granaries, eſpecially thoſe within the City.

The Houſes the preſent Inhabitants kennel in are mean, the People beggarly, by reaſon of theſe Hoſtile Incurſions.

Set forward to Intwally, the Country all burnt and deſtroyed.

By Twelve at Noon having journey'd over Rocky, Barren, and Parched Ways, I came to Intwally, Three Courſe, or Seven Mile and an half; the Seaſon of the Year (the Heats being now moſt violent) as well as the Time of the Day not permitting us any longer to endure their Extremity, I never ſtaid for Licenſe, but ſhaded my ſelf under a Wooden Moſque, the only Structure ſtanding in the Town, it ſuffering the ſame Fate with Gullean, and was then reaking in its Aſhes, the Moguls Army laying waſte all in their Road, both Villages, Fodder, and Corn; and for their Cattel they drive them along with them, and take them, their Wives and Children for Slaves; ſo that none eſcape, except thoſe that can fly faſteſt, or hide themſelves in the Woods, which they alſo ſet on fire, to leave them deſtitute of thoſe Receſſes. This Gom or Town ſtood in a large Grove of Mangoes, on the Bank of a deep Creek, which though at this time fordable, yet I believe the Rains may ſwell into a Torrent.

Thence to Moorbar.

Having refreſhed my ſelf and Coolies, I hired an Ox, they complaining they had too much Burthen, travelling more adviſedly by Moonſhine, (through a better Soil, and more exchange, as Arable Ground, Heaths, Foreſts, and Woods, ſome of which were on Fire two or three Miles together) from Six till Twelve, when we took up our Reſt at a poor Village called Moorbar, ſix Courſe from Intwally:

Chap. IV.

Intwally: This place was not able to afford us an Houſe or Shed, but we were forced to creep into one of their Cottages, half finiſhed, they thatching it with Bents ſhelving from the Ridge down to the Bottom on both ſides, no bigger than a Man might carry.

Force to keep watch.

I kept the Coolies to their Watch, notwithſtanding their hard Days labour, as well to keep Tigres and Wild Beaſts from us, as Thieves and Robbers: The day following I ſtaid here till Four in the Afternoon to avoid the Soultrineſs of the Weather, which I could hardly do where I was lodged, there being no Air; which cauſed me to remove out of the Town at Sun riſe to the left of two pitiful Tanks belonging thereto; they being all here ignorant Idolaters, and Husbandmen, every one chuſing his own God; no Family being without ſome Pan Dæmon, or Incubus; which they paint with hideous Forms, bedaub with ſtinking Oil, and offer the Fruits of the Earth to: Moſt Abominably Superſtitious, that an ill Augury ſhall detain them idle a whole day, though they and their Houſhold muſt ſtarve, if they work not; ſuch as an Hare croſſing the Way, or a Crow on the Left hand. They have no publick Pagod, or Place of Worſhip, beſides theſe Tanks, where they waſh and burn their Dead, giving me a Noſegay of one of their Carkaſes, before I got my Breakfaſt, as I lay to repoſe under a Tree; which made me range for Game, and diſperſe my Servants for Provant, being otherwiſe likely to go without; they living upon Batty, or Seeds of Graſs, eating neither Fiſh nor Fleſh, neither indeed have they any, unleſs by chance; for after my Purveyors had made diligent ſearch, with much ado they purchaſed one Hen, tho ſeveral Villages were in ſight, and all of them greedy enough to take Money, had they had Proviſions. It is all Plowed Land hereabouts, but Seva Gi commonly reaps the Harveſt, leaving hardly ſo much to the Tillers as will keep Life and Soul together.

The Guides lead us about.

And now going to ſet out, I began by the murmurings of the Coolies to underſtand that the Guides, being jealous of falling into the Enemy's hands, had a deſign to lead us about; (but every one beſides the Cauns Peons being Strangers, and they fearful to diſcover themſelves, we were perſuaded to reſign our ſelves to their Conduct) over Hilly, but none of the worſt Ways; two or three Miles together they are all burnt, bearing nothing but withered Benty-Graſs, which burning afore the Rains, benefits the Ground much; and are now out of diſtruſt the Moguls ſhould Forrage their Army here.

Below this, we paſſed over a fine Meadow checquered with Purling Brooks, and three Villages, much about an equal diſtance one from another: And now the broken Ribs of theſe lofty Mountains ſeen ſo far off at Sea all along from Cape Comory, as if founded for an Aſcent unto the Skies, begin to be diſcovered by our near approach; when Night interpoſing her black Vail between our Eyes and them, they became veſted with a more benighted Darkneſs than hung over us; which ſerved as a ſable Cloud to direct us to Dehir, by Eleven a Clock at Night, nine Courſe from our laſt Stage, ſeated at the end of a large Plain, at the foot of that Chain of Hills ſuppoſed to croſs the Taurus, trending through the Continent North and South, as that does does Eaſt and Weſt; it is by moſt Geographers concluded to be Mount Sephir, here called the Gaot.

Letter III.

Come to Debir, a Gariſon'd Town of Seva Gi's, at the foot of the Gaot.

We found them all in Arms, not ſuffering their Women to ſtir out of the Town Unguarded to fetch Water, being accuſtomed to continual Alarms; which cautiouſneſs obliged them to uſher me into the Market-place, by a ſmall Party which lighted on me in their Rounds; when I ſent my Gulleon Peon, one of our Guides, with his Maſters Chitty, or Paſs, to the Governor, who received it kindly, and gave me leave to be my own Quartermaſter (little Complements being expected from Soldiers).

Awakes a Fakier Drunk with Bang.

My Company, as well as my ſelf, being Tired, and now ſtiff with a little Reſt allowed them till the return of the Peon, we were not willing to be at more pains to ſeek for a better Inn, than what a Fakier had taken up before us; but we rouzed a Lion, who had juſt been lain aſleep with Bang, who opened with ſuch a Clamour, that I was afraid it would have brought all the Watch about us, had they not been in the ſame tune, calling on one another, as Children when the Light is out, do for fear; beating their Drums, and ſounding their Trumpets (Shriller than the Moors, and more Tuneable) all Night long; by which means, and my Quarrelſome Inmate, I could compoſe my ſelf to no Quiet; though for the latter, at length I thought of an Expedient, plying him with Arack till his Tongue reſolved its ſelf in Silence, which was much more grateful than his Bawling.

The next Morning when Day had cleared our Eyeſight, I ſaw the Idol, this Drunken Prieſt Adored, hard by me; it was thick and ſhort, Carved in Stone, of a Monſtrous Viſage, whisking his Tail over his Head; the upper Parts to the Waſte, were Painted with Red; it inſulted over another ugly Creature it trod on; it was of a Sooty Colour, and Swam in ſtreams of Oil; yet it called in a great many Devotes, who came to pay their Salams.

The Advantage taken of a Diſcompoſed Countenance, ſhewn anon. p. 127.

I ſent to the Havaldar, to know when he would Paſs us up the Gaot; word was brought he was not awake, having been up all Night; in the interim therefore, I Walked about the Town, which is Crowded with People, but miſerably Poor, and of no Note, were it not that Seva Gi Stables his choiceſt Horſes here, for the conveniency of this Plain to ſupply them with Hay and Corn, which cauſes them to have the greater Force, and makes it the Reſidence of an Havaldar, who is a kind of petty General: Changing the Town for the open Fields, I was led to a Grove of Mangoes and Thamarinds, at the end of which, was a Moſque, and a great many Tombs of excellent Stone, Demoliſhed; one of which they remember with Reſpect, by the Name of Melech-Bury, a great Warrior; however, that which pleaſed me moſt of all, was a ſudden ſurprize, when they brought me to the wrong ſide of a pretty Square Tank, or Well, with a Wall of Stone, Breaſt high; where expecting to find it covered with Water, looking down five Fathom deep, I ſaw a clutter of Women, very Handſome, waiting the diſtilling of the Water from its dewy ſides; which they catch in Jarrs, and conſtantly carrying it away, leave it only weeping: It is cut out of a firm Black Marble Rock up almoſt to the Top, with broad Steps to go down.

Seva Gi's Horſes kept here.

Now

Chap. IV.

Seva Gi's Forts all about.

Now we could not only ſee their Forts, but hear alſo the Watchmen from their Gariſons aloft, ſome Five hundred, ſome more, ſome fewer Men, to and again among the Hills, the main ſtrength of this Prince conſiſting in theſe; coming back I found my troubleſome Comrade very Merry, and packing up his Houſholdſtuff, his Bang-bowl, and Hubble Bubble, to go along with me, before I had gotten leave from the Havaldar, who had newly ſent word he was ready to receive me.

I made him not tarry long, following the Meſſenger, who brought me into the middle of a ragged Regiment, diſtinguiſhable from the Mogul's on that ſcore, but more peculiarly by their Hair appearing on both Ears under their Puckeries; their Weapons are much alike, though to me they give more cauſe of Laughter, than Terror (conſidering the awkwardneſs of their wearing them) notwithſtanding they are the Inſtruments of Death.

State of the Havaldar.

When I came before the Governor, I found him in State, though under an Hovel; where were many Brachmins with Accompt-Books, writing at ſome diſtance; nearer, his Privy-Council, with whom he ſeemed to Adviſe: I was placed on his Left hand, and deſired my Interpreter to acquaint him my Errand, withal intreating his Favour for my ſecure paſſing the Hill: He made it a piece of difficulty, and told me I muſt return to Bimly for Orders, to whoſe Havaldar he was accountable, not to him of Gulleon; which was within half a days Journy from whence I ſet forth. Hearing this I bore my ſelf as ſedately as I could, having been informed of the advantage they take of a diſturbed Countenance; and ſweetned him with his own Authority being ſufficient, telling him of his Maſter's Kindneſs to the Engliſh, and their Friendſhip towards him; which worked him to a yielding Temper; yet he ſcrupled my Caniſter, or Trunk, might be lined with Pearl, my Horſe ſold to the Enemy, hoping to ſuck ſomewhat out of me; I replying, What I had brought were at his liberty to ſearch, and that I went only on an amicable account to Cure a Sick Perſon, and ſhould be as ready to ſerve him, if required, his Fury was quite pawled; but perceiving an hungry look to hang on them all, and ſuſpecting leſt they ſhould ſerve me ſome Dog-trick, I made a ſmall Preſent, and he ſigning the Paſs, diſmiſſed me with a Bundle of Pawn, the uſual Ceremony at Parting.

Got clear of Dehir.

Being clear, I could not ſo readily ſhake off my Fakier, he would march with me; when we were not gone above two Courſe, or three Miles, the Liquor working out by his Walking, he began to grow weary, and called out for the Horſe, which I had cauſed the Portugueze to Mount, which he took in ſuch dudging, ſeeing himſelf on Foot, and him on Horſeback, that he turned Tail, and went back again to his Vomit, without bidding adieu.

A troubleſome paſſage over the Gaut.

And now our mighty Task began to try our Feet, as well as weary our Eyes: I not caring to hazard my ſelf longer in my Palenkeen, alighted, and though I thought it a work impoſſible to conquer, I put the beſt face on it I could, tarrying till they were all together, the better to chear them. The Coolies providing themſelves with Staves, diſtruſted not only their own Legs, but the Ground they went on, it having forſaken many a tall Tree around us; ſome holding by the mouldring Earth with half their Roots bare, others half buried in Pits they never grew in, lay expecting their quondam Neighbours downfal.

it

The Monkies afrighted.

The buſy Apes, the Forlorn hope of theſe declining Woods, deeming no place ſafe where they beheld us, made ſtrange Levaltoes with their hanging Brats from one Bough to another, Chattering an Invaſion; but theſe ſaw us preſently exalted beyond their Bowers, and feared us from above, as much as we to ſalute them below: Thus far was paſſable enough, when the Sun levelled himſelf unto our Steps, and we looked for Day beneath us. Here I made a ſecond pauſe, and promiſed them Nectar in the Skies; this proved but a faint Cordial to the Fraſſes, who failed afore they got a quarter up; for whom after I had provided (the Moon aſſiſting us with a leſs parching Light) I found my Hands as neceſſary to Clamber as my Feet, Travelling on all Four; the Stones were laid ſtep by ſtep, but in little order; and now ſo ſteep, that it differed little from Perpendicular, only by the winding of the Mountain; and ſo Narrow, that Two Men could not paſs abreaſt; where chiefly were laid Trees and Timber to make work for the Army, ſhould they attempt this Way; which ſorely increaſed our trouble, being the firſt Adventurers, beſide the danger we incurred of being Aſſaulted from above, they not yet knowing who we were. To look down made my Brains turn round; over my Head pendulous Rocks threatned to Entomb me.

Flurries from the Hills carry Men and Oxen down the Precipice

We had not gone long thus, before the Cry came, the Ox was fallen; 'twas well he choſe not the place where I was in, for the leaſt lapſe had irrecoverably whirled him to the bottom: Arguments were too weak to perſuade the Coolies to go back to him to help him; I therefore proceeded to Threats, which made Two of them return to his Aid: I confeſs the ſenſe of their hard Labour urged me to pity; the Anguiſh of which extorted Tears from ſome, unſeaſonable at this time to take notice of to them; we had only this Comfort, the Even was Calm and Serene, and we were mounted beyond the humble Miſts, which we could diſcern fluctuating againſt the impenetrable Promontories; which may be the reaſon ſometimes (they ſay) Men and Oxen are hurled down the Precipice by ſudden Guſts, when they are exalted to the Clouds, and they break with too great an Impetuoſity: For all this Light we ſeemed Obſcured, the ſplendour of the Moon being ſhaded by the ſides of the Mountains, which appeared here all Marble.

The Horſe (being a Turky one) made the beſt ſhift of all, and was more forward than convenient, pelting us with great Stones his Hoofs had removed, which cauſed us to retard his haſte, and leave him to come laſt.

About Nine a Clock at Night the Moon ſhone over our Heads, more joyful at her preſence, than her feignedly beloved Endimion: An hour after we came tired to the Brow, through a narrow Cavern cut out of the main Rock; here being no Guard, the noiſe of the Army being over, I was the ſecond Man Trampled on the Top, half an hour after the Palenkeen came, and all the reſt within two hours more: Here I was as good as my word, and diſtributed Arack among them, which which made them, for all their tedious Tug, run amain to the next Town Oppagaot; where early in the Morning I crowded under an Old Shed.

The heighth of the Mountain.

This Gur or Hill is reckoned four Courſe up (every Courſe being a Mile and half): From whence is beheld the World beneath all furled with Clouds, the Cærulean Ocean terminating the Horizon, the adjacent Iſlands bordering on the Main, the Mountains fenced with horrible Gulphs, till ſtrange Vertigoes prejudicate Fancy, not daring longer to be made a Spectator: The bandying Eccho ſtill perſecutes with terrible repeated Sounds, meeting freſh Objects to reundulate it, though at the greater diſtance, being yet encloſed with Mountains, which they maintain as Fortreſſes; and I can give no reaſon why they do not this Entry alſo, unleſs becauſe it is ſo contrived that Ten Men may keep down Ten thouſand.

Alteration of Air on the Hills.

Here is a ſenſible alteration of the Air: The Dawn of the Morning, and latter part of the Night, 'twas ſharp, cold, and piercing; ſo that all I gathered about me would ſcarce keep me warm; and all the Day there were fine cool Briezes, though below we were almoſt choaked with ſoultry Heats: The Reaſon whereof I judge to be, becauſe the High Mountains reverberate the flowing Particles of the Atmoſphere; as we ſee the Rocks do Water more ſtrongly, by how much more force the Waves aſſail them; ſo here the Air (which is thicker below) driven againſt theſe Hills breaks off in Flurries, which ſeeking to retire into their own Ocean, mitigate the violence of the Heat in their paſſage, by fanning as it were the Air; by which means, and the Sun's rarifying the Miſty Vapours, they are left pure, and fall at Night in more limpid Dews to cool and refreſh the Earth: To which Senſe ſings Lucan,

Fulminibus proprior terræ ſuccenditur aër,
Imaque telluris ventos tractuſque coruſcos
Flammarum accipiunt: Nubes excedit Olympus.

Moreover, Bogs and Fens are rarely found to ſoil the Air, or pen in the Heat for want of ventilation.

Oppagaot a ſtarveling Town.

This is a ſad Starvling Town; to it belongs a Subidar, or Cuſtomer; who blown up with the confidence of half a dozen Bill-men, thought to have compell'd me to ſtay till the Governor of the Caſtle ſhould examine my Cocket, which he had ſent him by the Havaldar: I ordered him to ſend it with one of the Gulean Peons; but he made Anſwer, the Governor having been up all Night, was not then at leiſure. While we were talking, a Drove of Combies (Hinds) paſſed with Proviſions on their Heads for the Caſtle; and I having ſtaid till Three in the Afternoon, not getting any other Anſwer, I commanded the Coolies to march, though the Subidar prohibited and kept them from following them with my Men and Arms, as Carbines and Blunderbuſſes; and the Governor not coming as he told my Peons they would, by Four, I diſmiſſed the Gulean Peons, they daring to go no farther; and if there were farther occaſion for a Paſs, to bring it after me; thereby fruſtrating their Intention which was to retard me, whereby to make their Booty of me.

Letter III.

We force our way.

They durſt no more than curſe, for all I departed without leave, taking my Courſe into a deep Valley, which winded and turned like a River, and I believe is one in the Rains: Half way we met another Caphala of Oxen laden with Proviſions, hardly eſcaping the Mogul's Army, which they told us was not far afore us: My Coolies more jealous of the Villany of Seva Gi's People than my ſelf, made haſte, and by Ten at Night arrived at Aumbegaum, Ten Courſe.

Our eſcape to Aumbegaum, and hardſhip of the Coolies.

From whence Mucklis Caun's Men had driven all away with a Party of his Horſe, only one Fakier, who had ſet up his Standard in a Shop in the Buzzar, next to whom I ſhrowded my ſelf under one of the ſame Stalls: Before Five in the Morning, for fear of farther Interruption, I poſted hence, up Hill and down Hill, not having Rice for my People to eat (all being fled) we came to a neat Stone Well of good Water; hard by which was an excellent Fig-tree, on whoſe Fruit, yet Green, my Indians fed heartily, and trouped by three or four wretched Towns, up another Mountain, not altogether ſo bad as the firſt, yet on the account of their wanting their wonted Food, it went hard with the Coolies to foot it to Beelſeer, two Courſe ſhort of Jeneah, where we baited; it being high time, they having gone near Fifty Miles without eating more than a few ſquaſhy Figs: They unloaded at Noon under a Row of ſpreading Mangos, on the ſide of a Brook; and provided themſelves with Victuals in an adjacent Village, liable to continual pillaging on both ſides; but being reduced to the Condition of having little or nothing to loſe, it is the better born.

Our entrance into the City of Jeneah.

Hence it is plain to Jeneah, the Hills keeping their diſtance from its Invincible Gur: The length of whoſe Bottom fills moſt of the ſpace from this Place to the City, which is the Frontier of the Mogul's Territory this way; and has been for many Years the Seat of War to the South, which is the ſignification of Duccan.

I ſent the Governor's Peon to acquaint him of my approach (I not arriving till Sun-ſet) when he met me with others that were appointed at a Garden ſhort of the Town, with the Governor's Complement; and conducted me to a Palace in a Compleat Garden, adorned with Cypreſs Trees (not uſual in India) Hummums, Tanks, Choultries and Walks, with Water-Courſes: When I was aſleep, the Nabob or Governor ſent me a Service in Plate covered with Embroidered Velvet over Noble Surpooſes or Covers, uſhered with two Silver Staves, and a Trumpet ſounding afore it; which Courſe was obſerved as long as I remained there.

The laſt day of April, being Friday, and the next after my arrival, he ſent to excuſe himſelf, becauſe it was his day of Devotion; when after a Princely manner he rides on an Elephant to the Moſque; and thence divertiſes himſelf in ſome place of Delight within his Seraglio till high Night.

Introduces me into the Nabob*'s preſence; my Buſineſs with him; a Proſpect of the* Gur (Seva Gi*'s Birth-place*); the Army and Country of Duccan: Of the Paſs of Tanaw, and benefit thereof, were it in the hands of the Engliſh.

IT was the firſt of May therefore before I waited on him; when he ordered a Guard of Horſe to attend me to the Caſtle, which was large, but rude, and the Wall of raw Brick; ſerving as well to ſecure Cattle as Men from the Enemy.

His own Apartments in the middle encompaſſed a verdent Quadrangle of Trees and Plants; in whoſe chief Choultry were aſſembled all his Great Men on his Right hand, he being encloſed in a Seat of State, boulſtered up with Embroidered Cuſhions, ſmoaking out of a Silver Hubble bubble; afore whom lay a rich Sword and Buckler, with a Creſcent Moon inſtead of Boſſes, his Page bearing his Bow and Arrows, much after the Turkiſh manner, as Busbequius reports of the Grand Segnior, Sedebat in Solio humili inſtrato; juxta autem arcus & ſagittæ. All the Floor was ſpread with a ſoft Bed, over all a fine white Calicut; the Pedeſtals were Maſſy Silver, where I put off my Shooes, and after Reſpect paid, delivered the Preſident's Letter, and was received immediatly next to him on his Left hand, all that ſide being kept void for my entertainment: The reſult of this Viſit was, after he had acquainted me who were to be my Patients, to tell me I muſt be patient till a good day preſented, and then I ſhould be called again; it remaining a Cuſtom ſtill in the Eaſt to defer important Affairs till a Lucky Day, totis hærentia faſtis. I only intreated he would be mindful the Rains were at hand, falling earlier here than in the Low Countries.

The Caun receives me publickly.

Our Diſcourſe being ended, a Couple of Singing-men began their Songs of Praiſe, which they pride themſelves in, not being content with moderate Flattery; a thing odious to a generous Spirit, accounting thoſe that do it, ſervile; and thoſe that admit it, imprudent to be deluded by Fawning Knaves: But here are not only thoſe that profeſs it for Lucre, but it is the general ſtrife who may impoſe moſt obſequiouſly. Adulandi certamen eſt, & unum amicorum omnium officium, quis blandiſſimè fallat; as Seneca obſerves in the corruption of his Age, *de Benef. Sycophants encouraged.

Such as appear before him make a Salam or Bow before they aſcend the Choultry, when if he allows them Conference, leaving their Slippers below, they mount the Buchanna, where they bow, by firſt putting their Hands to their Heads, then to their Feet, which Salute they call Pervenau, uſed to Cauns or Dukes. Above their Head, croſs their Breaſt to the Foot is Pharmau, only for Kings; the moſt familiar is a Bow with the Head: If they are permitted to ſit in his Preſence, thoſe only of Conſular Dignity have liberty to ſit (as they call it at eaſe) croſs Legged; but an European, before he is accuſtomed, will not be reconciled to that Term: Others of inferior Rank kneel, ſitting on their Heels, to which Poſture, though I was not tied, I was thankful when he ſent me a Bundle of Pawn, and had leave to make uſe of my Legs; being led out, as I was conducted in, by Two Virgers, and a large Train following, with a Maſter of Ceremonies accompanying.

The Caſtle no ſtrong place.

In my paſſage through the Caſtle they ſeemed rather Encamped than Fortified; wherefore if Seva Gi brings any Power, they betake themſelves to ſpeedy Flight, or retire to the Body of the Army under Badur Caun, Generaliſſimo in theſe Marches; being ill provided to endure a Siege, and more able to defend themſelves, joined to an Hoſt of Forty thouſand Horſe always at Pergom, three Days Journy hence.

Curioſity invited many Spectators, and Courteſy ſome of Quality to be my Harbingers at my Lodgings; which at my return I found peſtered, as I had the Streets all the way I came: They were very Civil, making no Intruſion before they had requeſted leave; and then interrogating the State of Europe, the Government, Policy, and Learning; nodding a ſatisfaction in the account I gave them: Nor were they leſs communicative in their Relations, of thoſe Occurrences which wheeled in their Sphere, being highly concerned to ſhew they had Book-men as well as Sword-men.

A good Day conſulted, when I had a private Invitation to the Caun.

A good Day coming, the Governor ſent for me to Viſit his Lady in the Haram, which was oppoſite to a Chamber he ſate in, Accompanied only with one pretty Wanton Boy, his Only Son by this Woman; upon which account he had the greater kindneſs for her: An Old Gentlewoman with a Tiffany Vail, made many trips, being, I ſuppoſe, the Governant of the Womens Quarters; at laſt I was called and admitted with my Linguiſt.

Admitted the Womens Quarters.

At our being ready to enter, ſhe Clapped with her Hands to give Notice; when we were led through a long dark Entry, with Dormitories on both ſides, the Doors of which Creeked in our paſſage (but I was cautious of being too Circumſpect) till we came to an aiery Choultry; where was placed a Bed hung with Silk Curtains; to which being brought, I was Commanded to place my ſelf cloſe by it, from whence I might conveniently Diſcourſe and Feel her Pulſe, putting my Hand under the Curtains. It was agreed among them to impoſe upon me; wherefore at firſt they gave me a Slaves Hand, whom I declared to be Sound and Free from any Diſeaſe, nothing contradicting the true Tenor and Rythme of Pulſation; when they began to be more ingenuous, telling me, it was done to try me: Then was given me another Hand, which demonſtrated a weak languid Conſtitution; and collecting the Signs and Symptoms, I feared not to give Sentence; which met with their Approbation, and ſo I was ſent back the ſame way I came.

The Caun had been acquainted with what had paſſed, and ſeemed pleaſed; whereupon I muſt viſit the Haram again the next day to Bleed another of his Wives, he being tolerated Four, though he keeps more than Three hundred Concubines.

What happened while I was in the Haram.

And now the Curtain was extended athwart the Choultry, and an Arm held forth at an hole; but this was a ſlight fence for ſuch Animals, who leaning too hard as they peeped, pulled it down, and diſcovered vered the whole Bevy, fluttering like ſo many Birds when a Net is caſt over them; yet none of them ſought to eſcape, but feigning a ſhamefacedneſs, continued looking through the wide Lattice of their Fingers: The Lady I had by the Arm was a Plump Ruſſet Dame, ſummoning the remainder of her Blood to enliven her Cheeks (for among the darkeſt Blacks, the Paſſions of Fear, Anger, or Joy, are diſcernible enough in the Face) and ſhe bearing a command, cauſed it to be hung up again; pouring upon her extravaſated Blood a Golden ſhower of Pagods, which I made my Man fiſh for.

Scandal thrown upon the Women.

In this Interview they appeared to me not altogether unimployed, there lying pared Mangoes, and other Fruits for Confection, and Achars, or Pickles; ſome Samplers of good Houſewifry in Needle-works; and no indecent decorum in managing their Cloyſtered way of living, making it agreeable to the choice of Cuſtom rather than Reſtraint: But here are foulmouthed Homers that Stigmatize them, how deſervedly I dare not ſay.

And a Man would gueſs no leſs, to ſee the number of Spies upon them, of Toothleſs Old Women, and Beardleſs Eunuchs, that they are incontinent in their Deſires, for which reaſon they debar them the ſight of any thing Male, but their Lord; they Waiting, as well to hand them Neceſſaries, as Wood, Water, Meat, and the like, taking them at the Door, as to prevent unlawful Intruders.

And are Cloathed like the Men, only they go in their Hair within, and abroad with Vails.

A Conference about the Affairs of the Engliſh.

Gaining by theſe ſteps a nearer intimacy with the Nabob, he cut me new Buſineſs out every day; he adviſed me of the intention of the Governor of the Caſtle on the Hill, to commit his Brother to my Care; and I in a private Conference, according to my Inſtructions, propounded the Commodity might ariſe from an intercourſe of Commerce between this place and Bombaim, from thence to Buſſorah, Perſia, and Mæcha, for to provide the Army with Horſes; in return of whom might be exchang'd the ſame Goods procurable at Surat and better Cheap, ſhould they ſucceed in their Conqueſts over the Low Countries; which is not a matter of ſuch impoſſibility ſhould they earneſtly ſet upon it, conſidering the Avenues are open: But by that proceeding, it would take away a powerful obſtacle to the maintaining ſo vaſt an Army as is always in Duccan, whereby a main Body of the Soldiery would be out of pay; which is abſolutely againſt the Generals intereſt, and therefore he would never conſent: This I ſoon ſaw was the main Argument, though he coloured it with pretext, that 'twas a work of more pains to reduce

Seva,

Letter III.

Seva, than was repreſented, in reſpect of his Situation, being impowered not only to make Excurſions, but to bid them Defiance.

Whereupon I told him, If the latter was not feaſible, it was in vain to propoſe any thing in relation to the former, for that all Acceſs was ſtopped if the Low Lands were not cleared; the Havaldars being unconſcionable in their Cuſtoms, and without doubt would interrupt what might be ſerviceable to their Enemies, or bring prejudice to their Prince; whereas were the Ways free, it would enrich his Jageah beyond the Bunder at Surat, and tie the Engliſh to a perpetual Truce, who were known in theſe Parts addicted to Traffick, and Friends to Peace: He asked further, How far we deſired to extend this Liberty? I replied, beyond the Portugal Dominions, which would front the Iſland of Bombaim about Tull; otherwiſe we muſt be at the charge of double Cuſtom, to them as well as the Mogul. He ſaid all this had been moved to Badur Caun, but thoſe to whoſe hands the Preſents for him had been entruſted, had defrauded him of them, on whom nothing was to be wrought without liberal Piſcaſhes, he bearing it as high as the King himſelf, and at this juncture he was an unfit Mediator to him, having lately had ſome jarrs with him (the Governor of Jeneah undervaluing his Authority in an Expedition, not long enough ago to be thoroughly forgot); however did the Preſident immediately apply himſelf to him, he was inclinable enough to let him Settle Factories; which I gave him to underſtand, without a mutual Benefit on both ſides, was not the preſent Deſign; but for the eſteem we bore to Men of Honour, and that made account of their Word, it was wiſhed the Moguls were poſſeſſed of thoſe Parts; which was never to be cultivated, either with good Manners, or Profit, whilſt Perfidy reigned there.

This being the ſubſtance of our Diſcourſe, after he had related the Buſineſs to his Council (he replied) he would intimate what might be effected in it, to the Preſident, in anſwer to his Letter.

Miſchief done by Thunder.

At Night it was diſmally Tempeſtuous, Killing Two of the Watch on Duty, and carrying a Tower of the Hill at one Clap; below, it brake one Man's Arm, the Prologue to the Rains.

The Governor's Brother of the Hill deſcends for Cure.

A Strumpet's Benefaction.

The Day after the Nabob's Brother, of the Caſtle, was received kindly here, bringing a noble Train, and Piſcaſh to beſpeak his Welcome; he was Lodged in a Palace adjoining that where I was.

The Eleventh of May I went abroad to a Garden left by a common Strumpet, in which was a noble Tomb built in remembrance of her, with a Well belonging to a lovely Spring, which by Aqueducts ſupplied the City with Water.

Hence we went to a ruined Palace, where Auren Zeeb, the preſent Emperor, was hoſpitably received in his Father's Reign, and lived a pretended Fakier.

brands conſuming them; which made us bethink of retiring, they deſcending ſometimes in Parties to Prey on Straglers, that often Troopers are ſent home diſrobed and diſmounted, to be laught at for their Misfortune.

Dungeneſs another Heathen Fane.

Having tarried now till the Rains had made their firſt onſet Fourteen days together, with horrid Thunder; at the end thereof I ſet apart a day to take notice of the adjacent Rarities; among which is a City called Dungeneſs, of like Antiquity and Workmanſhip, as Canorein, cut out of a Mountanous Rock, with a Temple and other ſpacious Halls, by no means inferior to it both for Water and other Refreſhments, and much more entire; Time having not dealt ſo cruelly with it, but the Lines of its ruined Beauty are ſtill legible, though in old Characters; however it is left a deſolate Habitation for Batts and Waſps; to diſturb which it is dangerous, being overgrown and deſperately revengeful, following their Aggreſſors till they have Whealed them into Contrition for their unadviſed Provocation: To be out of the Noiſe of theſe buzzing Hornets, and to ſecure our ſelves from the ſurprize of any diſturbed Idolater, who might bellow the report of our being here, we haſted to the ſafer Plain, and ended the reſt of the day in a pleaſant Garden, on the brink of the River which glides hence to Surat.

The Requeſt of the Governour of the Hill for my Aſcent.

The Governor of the Gur hearing I was preparing for to return to Bombaim, requeſted before my departue to accept of my choice, either to aſcend the Gur, or elſe to meet him at his Garden below, being the preſcribed Limits of his Walk: I ſignified my readineſs to comply with the former, wherefore he ſent Four Palenkeens, his Kinſman, an Ingenuous Mogul, and his Brother to attend me.

The Suburbs a ſhelter to the Caſtle.

We Travelled Two Miles before we came to the Foot of it, where is a Gariſon, or Fortified Town, walled with ſtrong Chockies, or Watches, and a Troop of Five hundred Horſe, and as many Camels of War; here are great Stacks of Hay and Corn, all their Droves of Beaſts being ſheltered here anights. Seva Gi has diſtreſſed this often, and put them to the rout; but that, whoſe Top we are endeavouring to gain, is inacceſſible, unleſs by Seven winding Gates, which are very ſtrong, and able to clear one another as they riſe, the Way being lined with Murtherers, and they themſelves defended with good Pieces of Ordnance: The laſt is a Piece of excellent Work and Strength, and the place filled with Soldiers.

The Hill inacceſſible but by Seven Gates.

Hence it is painful Riding, and requires a ſtrong Back to keep State in a Palenkeen, it being carried almoſt bolt upright, over ſlippery Marble ſteps, cut out of the ſhining Rock, as ſmooth as Glaſs, and reflecting the Sun-beams as much: After we had mounted near an Hundred Stairs, we were received into the Neck of the Caſtle, which is collared about with a Wall, rather to keep them from falling down, than needful to prevent Aſſailants; from whence an eaſy Aſcent leads to a Level, which is the Circus to train the Infantry; where are conſpicuous Tombs of their former Kings, being firmly Built, and a Moſque of poliſhed Marble, which on Feſtivals only they repair unto: No Houſes here are able to reſiſt the Storms of Wind, or the Sun's Heat, for which conveniency they have made the Eaſtern ſide of the Hill moſt Inhabited, it ſerving inſtead

Letter III. of a Bank; where they live in little low Huts, the Governor's not exceeding in height, (though a pretty neat Dwelling, fenced with Trees, no where elſe to be found) who had expected me Two whole Hours; but being impatient of delay, and the Sun growing too hot, he betook himſelf to his Haram, having ordered his Kinſman (whoſe Civil Deportment met with his Commands) to Entertain me; he is but Poor (ſo that he threatens the Nabob to turn Fakier) yet Generous, of a free open Temper, neither Jealous nor Lazy, as the Moors moſt are; but applying himſelf to ſeveral Handicrafts, which he has learned of the Europeans; he is learned too in the Perſian and Arabick Languages, though not to Vain-glory; being ſo Humble, Facetious, and Merry, that nothing but Spight and Envy can diſagree with him: His Name is Niſhambeak; ſuch another I have not met with, ſo general a lover of Franks; which he ſpecified in an eſpecial manner to me, receiving me in an Airy Banquetting-houſe, Embelliſhed and Adorned on purpoſe; and notwithſtanding the Governor's Son was to pay his Compliments, would not ſuffer me to give him Place, but diverted me with ſeveral Interludes of Moriſco Dancing. That which took moſt with them I perceived, was a Jeſter, or Mimick, the Ancient Salt at publick Banquets, as we may gather from Statius:

Non ego Mercatus Pharià de puppe Loquaces
Delicias, doctumque ſui convicia Nili
Infantem, Linguâque ſimul ſalibusque protervum.

And from Lucan to Piſo:

Sed Miſerum (clientem) parvâ ſtipe numerat
——ut pudibundas
Exercere ſales inter convivia poſſit.

Feaſted by the Governor's Order.

Having feaſted the Fancy, he contends to cloy the Stomach, with loads of Viands ſtowed in Plate, ſerving me with his own Hands, his Friends and he being content to feed on the deſire they had to ſatisfy me, not being to be courted to fall to till I had done; they ſerved me with variety of Stews and Baked Meats, but offered me Sherbet only for Drink; I had provided againſt this chance by filling my Metarrah with Beveridge, which paſſed for Water, being drunk out of a Leather Bottle Tipped with Silver, for Travel.

None appear before Great Men without a Preſent.

After Dinner they made their loud Muſick proclaim my going to the Governor (whereat flocked all the Gur) and after formal Salutes, preſent him with a Glaſs of Chymical Spirits. As the Parthians were wont not to receive Viſits without a Gift; Et exempla in Oriente plura ſunt, interea & Magorum in ſacris qui Chriſtum adoraturi, munera attulerunt. So here the like Cuſtom prevails.

How ſtrange our Arms and Apparel ſeem to them.

I was placed cloſe by him, he like an Hermit, having the Court brought to him, admired the Splendour as well as the Novelty of our Europe Dreſs; asking my Servant if I lay in them, becauſe it is their faſhion not to undreſs to go to Bed, but lye in the ſame Clothes they wear in the day; he made me declare the uſe of my Rapier, at first not apprehending it so serviceable as their Broad Two-handed Swords; 'twas a Question out of my road, yet I made him understand our Custom in War was to appear all armed Cap-a-pee, where their Broad Swords would find a rebate; whereas these Sharp-pointed Weapons would pierce the Junctures of the Harness, or the Pleats of a Coat of Mail (they denying a Stab to be more mortal than a Slash). He was very inquisitive about our Military Discipline; and heard it with pleasure. He called all his Male Children about him, who sate at his Feet, and gave me an History of their Maladies; as most here did that durst speak, there being an infinite number of Captains and Grave Fellows: The Old Men mended their Eyes with Spectacles, the young marred theirs with staring.

Permitted the freedom of the Castle.

The Choultry was hung with Green and Red Velvet checkered; his Pawn Boxes were large, and of Massy Gold; his Retinue grave, his Carriage affable; he gave me a Bow-Ring off his Thumb, of Cashmire (of equal value as Vertue, being a Charm against Thunder) and the liberty to take a Round about the Castle, never before granted any not listed in his Service: A Portuguez Mestizo, Chief Gunner of the Castle, was very officious, though I was entrusted to the charge of his prime Eunuch.

A bold Attempt of Seva Gi's Men.

The first Object busied me, was a Place Seva Gi's Men had attempted to scale, by me esteemed a desperate Design, and very improbable; yet two Men got up, and a Stone casually tumbling, deterred their Accomplices, leaving them a Sacrifice to the Governor and Women, who being left alone to the defence of the Castle (all the Men deserting on the approach of a vast Army of Seva Gi's) hurled them down the Mountain for their rash Adventure; confirming to me by a great Stone let fall, the unavoidableness of their destruction; it running with that force where-ever it came, that it beat all a-fore, till it rested in the middle of the Valley.

Granaries for Stores now, formerly Religious Cells.

It is stored with Granaries hewed out of Stone, I suppose for Religion's sake at first, being too delicately engraved for the present use; though there be several Tanks filled with Butter of 400 years standing, prized by the Gentiles as high as Gold, prevalent in Old Aches, and Sore Eyes, one of which was opened for my sake, and a Present made me of its black stinking and viscous Balsom: There are other Tanks or Cisterns for Water, which look nastily, Green, Yellow, and Red, being distilled in the Rains, and in the Heats evaporated to a Consistency; in some of these Gurs the Water is so bad, that they use Onions to correct its unsavorines. (Garlick indeed with us is called the Countryman's Treacle).

A Rajah slain the occasion of a Barbarous Funeral.

They have Provisions for a Seven Years Siege for a Thousand Families, but no other Ammunition than Stones, excepting two unshapen Sakers of Two and twenty Foot long, with a narrow Bore of Brass of Gentu Mould, at each end one, on huge winding Carriages; one of which at random killed a Rajah some four Months ago, when Seva was encamped about Jeneah slinging a Bullet two Course off; which Shot caused a Bonfire of a couple of his Ladies, beside other Domesticks, one of each sort to attend him in another World, as his Chief Physician, Barber, Washerman, Horse-keeper, and the like, to the number of Twenty odd; a thing as customary at the death of any great Rajah, as'tis for the Wife of every Gentue of note at the death of her Husband.

Letter III.

By this fatal Inſtrument of Mortality ſtood the remaining part of the Tower the Thunder had cleft in twain: Near where a Dutch Apoſtate has a wretched Dwelling, enjoying a Pair of Wives, the miſerable Tools who induced him to this lamentable Condition, that he is deſpiſed and ſlighted by them all; few of thoſe that endure Circumciſion meeting with better fortune.

Took leave of the Governor.

Having taken my full view, and returning to give the Governor Thanks for this freedom, I met him as he came from Prayers through a Lane of Soldiers, followed by a Crowd of his Domeſticks, when taking my leave, he ordered my releaſe, being uſhered with the ſame State down as I came up, leaving him Priſoner in his ſtrong Hold.

Hence might be beheld many Dens and Caverns, fondly believed to be carved and cut out of the Rocks by ſome Divine Power; having no account of their original. Indeed they are miraculous; And I am apt to judge, the pious Zeal of former Ages, when undiſturbed in their Tranquility, thinking the greateſt labour too little to expreſs their love to a Deity, ſet them upon ſuch imployments, more than that they could promiſe to themſelves any ſecurity from theſe Places; which though the Paſſages to them be difficult, yet they are generally unprovided of Human Neceſſaries; This Hill being only independent, whereby it ſtands out againſt all the oppoſite Forts of Seva Gi, many of whom in a ſtill Night may be heard by Voice, but more by Trumpets.

This Gur puts a ſtop to Seva Gi this way.

Here are a Thouſand Sword-men in pay, no Horſe or Elephant being able to climb it: It was never fairly taken, the Governor is one of approved Fidelity; the Mogul having not the like Fort in all his Kingdoms, and is of main concern to the Frontiers; putting a ſtop to Seva Gi's progreſs, otherwiſe likely to overrun Duccan. His name is Hagieſs Caun, originally a Brachmin, now a ſtrict Muſleman; ſome years paſt Governor of the City, when oppreſſing the Poor, their Cries reaching the King's Ears, he was tranſlated hither, in conſideration of his good Service; where he receives a liberal Penſion, and is at no Expence, which agrees well enough with his covetous Humour; which Humour of his Seva Gi being informed of, left no means unattempted to gain the Surrender of his Truſt; promiſing Mountains of Gold in exchange of this, which he ſcrupled not to receive; appointing a day for the delivery of it to Seva Gi, if he ſent 7000 to take poſſeſſion; who keeping touch, met with the ſame meaſure he had meated to others, they being all ſurpriſed by an Ambuſcado from Badur Caun, whom the Governor had advertiſed of all the Tranſactions.

Jeneah Gur the Birth-place of Seva Gi.

That which makes Seva Gi ſo intent on this more than the forementioned Advantages, is, becauſe it was his Birth-place; to whom that of Virgil is applicable,

Non tibi diva parens generis, nec Dardanus author
Perfide: Sed duris genuit te cautibus ingens
Jenneah; Duccanæque admôrunt ubera tigres.

What

Chap. V.

What makes it more famous, it was anciently the Seat Royal of the Duccan Kings, under whom Seva Gi's Father was Keeper; but Aurenzeeb in his Conqueſt of this Kingdom (after he had fled hither for protection) had it ſurrendred unto him: It is reckoned two Courſe and an half in height; is ſurrounded, though a good way off, with Hills, all but towards the North, where it ſeems to ſtand Captain of the Mountains.

The Moors touch't with the Superſtition of the Gentues.

The Moguls I perceive are inclinable to the like Credulity the Gentues are, pointing out a Mount where undoubtedly Solomon gave Audit to the two Women claiming the ſame Child, and pronounced Judgment in favour of the true Mother; and it ſtill bears the name of Tocta Schelimon, Solomon's Throne; I brought Night with me to Jeneah, being too well guarded to ſuſpect any Attempt; though notable enough by the multitudes of Oily Flambeaus.

This Day gave me occaſion to take notice of the ſneaking Officiouſneſs of the Banyans, who preſſed on my Heels, and where-ever I went, waited like Lacquies, which put me in mind of that Diſtich of Martial's,

Lectícam ſellamque ſequor, nec ferre recuſo
Per medium properans, ſed prior ire tutum.

Of the Luſcarry or Army.

The New Moon brought the Soldiers to their ſeveral Standards, againſt the Governor's Houſe, by their Salam to refreſh his Memory of their Pay, being Fourteen Months behind-hand. Pay, ſays Tacitus, is the Cauſe of Soldiers, and Money is the Cauſe of Pay; which is not wanting to the Muſter-maſters, who abuſe the common Troopers in retarding it; to the end, that having run into debt, they might compound for half their Wages in ready Money; for all which they leave not often their Side, for they are ſure of ſomething with eaſe, whereas Seva Gi is a kind of Free-booter, whoſe Maxim is, No Plunder, no Pay; which comes with pain and hazard: Yet it is common for him to have Moors in his Army; for the Liberty of their Country is not ſtood ſo much upon, as Whoſe Salt they eat (their own Phraſe); ſo that you may ſee Gentues in the Mogul's Army, as well as Moguls among the Gentues: For the moſt part of the Body of the Cavalry conſiſts of Moguls, the Infantry of Gentues, with Match-Lock Muskets.

Its Appearance.

In order to this Convention every Petty Officer brings the number of his Men and Horſe along with him, who firſt ſalute him, and he the Governor, owning none elſe for their Commander, though they fall off under ſuch an Enſign as they are ordered to march with: They are taught little more than the Grand Paw, and to make a Salam: They ride in wide Saddles as our War Saddles, but hold with the Calves of their Legs, not faſten themſelves to their Saddles by their Thighs, as we do; by which ſlight they raiſe themſelves to mow down their Enemies, and will caſt a Spear, and take it up from the Ground on full ſpeed: They ſtop with a jerk, not taking their Horſes up by degrees, which they laugh at us for, as well as our riding with our Feet at length: They have no Spurs to their Heels, but in their

Letter III.

Bridle-bit is one to ſtop the moſt untamed Horſe, or bore his Mouth through, pointing out of a Circle upon their Tongues.

They have other excellent Qualities; as he that runs faſteſt, is the beſt Soldier: Beſides, their Arms are kept ſo bright, they are afraid to handle them for fear of ſoiling them: Their Leaders are good Carpet-Knights, loving their Buchannos better than the Field.

The Diſcipline.

The old Roman Diſcipline takes place, viz. Commanders of Tens, ſo of Hundreds, thence to Legions; and accordingly receive their Salary, making their own Terms with thoſe under them: The Governor diſtributing to the Officers, and they to the Soldiers, every one having their Snips; that never was more truly verified that Proverb, Half the King's Cheeſe goes away in Parings.

The Commanders richly accoutred.

The Grandees of the Army appear with their Furniture of Silver and Gold, on Perſian, Arab, or Turkiſh Steeds; the reſt rarely get any other than the Race of the Country, which are Fiery and Mettleſome, but very Flaſhy, probably becauſe they pinch Their Bellies to put into their Own.

I take my leave of the Caun.

And now the Rains began to urge me to take my Leave of the Caun of Jeneah, which I did in a full Aſſembly convocated for the purpoſe; where I was informed Two hundred of Seva Gi's Men had purſued me almoſt to Ambegaum, with a reſolution to have carried me back, but durſt come no further, for the Report of the Army being in Motion; wherefore the Naibob adviſed me to take another way, and a ſelect Guard of his ſhould attend me to the utmoſt Extent of his Territories; after which he diſmiſſed me very honourably, with a Letter to the Preſident, which is not ſealed on the Paper, but in a Neat Bag of Cloath of Gold or Silver.

This Naibob Mucklis Caun lives not in that Splendor the Governor of Surat does, though he have ten times the Salary, being liable to the daily Aſſaults of Seva Gi; but he exceeds in Command, being Abſolute, without any Dependance on the General; which cauſes an Emulation on either ſide, and the more, becauſe the Mogul has lately heaped new Honours on Badur Caun, doubling his Stipend, and giving him the Title of Foſter-Brother, his Mother nurſing the King: But this Governor, to equalize him in Wealth, keeps but half the alotted Number in Pay, and lives ſparingly, which makes him take Sanctuary with regret ſometimes under Badur Caun, he being always upon the Forlorn Hope.

Falſe Muſters the Practice of India.

This Cheat is practiſed all over the Realm, notwithſtanding here are Publick Notaries placed immediately by the Mogul, to give Notice of all Tranſactions; which they are ſure to repreſent in favour of the Governors where they reſide, being Fee'd by them, as well as Paid by the Emperor; ſo that if a Defeat happen, it is extenuated; if a Victory, it is magnified to the height: Thoſe in this Office are called Vocanoveces.

The Government and Commodities.

The Government of this Place is as in all other Cities of the Moguls. The Walls are broken down, but the Gates are ſtill remaining: With the City's Safeguard Trade is fled, though it be commodiouſly ſeated, and furniſhed with courſe Chints, fine Lawn, and plenty of Cotton-Grounds; but the Plowmen and Weavers have followed the Merchants, a Rich one not being to be heard of in ſeven or eight days Journy from hence.

The

Chap. V.

The Buzzars therefore conſiſt chiefly of Proviſions, which they compel the Country to bring in, and ſometimes take them by Force, by reaſon of the general Poverty reigning among them.

Returned by Nunny Gaot, or the little Hill.

Wherefore the 22d of May I left them, and took my Way by Nunny Gaot, or the Little Hill in reſpect of the other, which we ſaw mounted a prodigious height above us: Hither I came by twelve a Clock at Noon, a far ſhorter and eaſier Way than the other: It is ten Courſe from Jeneah, wherein we travelled between a Couple of Seva Gi's Caſtles; and overlooking the Gaot, is a third very like Jeneah Gur, which hailed us; I ſent one to anſwer them, but kept on my Courſe till I came to the Gaot, where I was conſtrained to beſtow more time than I was willing, 300 Oxen laden with Salt (which is ſo precious up the Country, as to be proverbially preferred to Bread, they ſaying, Whoſe Salt they eat, as we, Whoſe Bread,) ſtopping the Gap; but with a little Intreaty, after an hour's ſtanding ſtill in the Sun, I got them, by ſending my Peons, to deſiſt below, till we had widen'd the Paſs above; after which it is feaſible, being ſupplied at fit diſtances with charitable Ciſterns of good Water, and towards the bottom adorned with beautiful Woods, delighting as well as refreſhing us with the Shade: By Sunſet I was in the Plain, where an honeſt Subidar that took off his Liquor, let me paſs without trouble, being more like a Scout than a Set-Watch.

No Army likely to paſs this way.

Nor do I believe the Mogul's Army dare venture to advance between theſe Streights, which are ſo well maintain'd; but farther North the Hills ſeem to ſtoop more to the Plain, and it may be that Way they may paſs; though this Way be tolerable for Caphala's and Merchants who have their Paſsports.

We reckon to have meaſured this Day Fifteen Courſe, moſt in the Heat of the Day, to the ſide of a poor Village called Weſnure, where we reſted under a Tree, the Coolies being unprovided for; nor could they purchaſe any thing here, the Inhabitants being hared out of their Wits, miſtruſting even their own Countrymen as well as Strangers, living as it were wildly, betaking themſelves to the Thickets and Wilderneſſes among the Hills, upon the approach of any new Face; for my Horſe by chance breaking looſe, ſet a whole Gom or Town upon the hoof, they thinking Auren Zeeb's Luſcarry at hand; thus unhappily live theſe, a Prey to every one.

The Clouds had ſpread themſelves over the Tops of the Hills, that they ſeemed to make a Ne plus ultra, or the World's-End.

Gliſtering Flies about a Tree, ſcare the Coolies.

The next Day at Twelve a Clock at Noon we ſtruck into our old Road at Moorbar, from whence before we were miſguided; we packed hence by Five in the Afternoon, and left our Burnt Wood on the Right-hand, but entred another made us better Sport, deluding us with falſe Flaſhes, that you would have thought the Trees on a Flame, and preſently, as if untouch'd by Fire, they retained their wonted Verdure. The Coolies beheld the Sight with Horror and Amazement, and were conſulting to ſet me down, and ſhift for themſelves; whereof being informed, I cut two or three with my Sword, and by breathing a Vein, let Shitan (the Devil) out, who was crept into their Fancies, and led them as they do a ſtartling Jade, to ſmell to what their Wall-Eyes repreſented amiſs; where we found an Hoſt of

Letter III.

of Flies, the Subject both of our Fear and Wonder, which the ſultry Heat and Moiſture had generated into Being, the certain Prodromus of the enſuing Rain, which follow'd us from the Hills.

This gave my Thoughts the Contemplation of that Miraculous Buſh crowned with Innocent Flames, that gave to Moſes ſo pleaſant and awful a Proſpect; the Fire that conſumes every thing, ſeeming rather to dreſs than offend it.

Forc'd to keep Watch againſt the Wild Beaſts.

Thus we came to Barſta, a deſpicable Country Town, Seven Courſe more; it is in poſſeſſion of the Combies, who are not ſtrong enough to aid their Herds againſt the devouring Jaws of the Wild Beaſts, a young Buffola being ſeized the Night before, out of the Tabernacle they lodged me in; wherefore they cautioned me to keep Fires all Night, leſt the Horſe might loſe one of his Quarters, or our Oxen might ſerve them for a Supper; I added to the Fires a ſtrict Watch, whoſe mutual anſwering each other in an high Tone, was deafen'd by the Roarings of Tigres, Cries of Jackals, and Yellings of Baloos, or over-grown Wolves: At Cock-crow (the Lions Charm) we parted hence, and obſerved the Sheds here were round, thatch'd, and lined with broad Leaves of Teke (the Timber Ships are built with), in faſhion of a Bee-hive: Theſe Combies are the Wood-men. About Seven we overtook our deep Creek, and being ſomewhat ſwelled by the Rains, we followed its Current till we found it paſſable; about Eleven we returned to Gullean.

The Coolies Reflections on the Miſeries of theſe People.

The Hardſhip theſe poor Combies undergo was obvious to the ſenſe of the very Coolies, who often in this Journy would reflect on their own Happineſs under the Engliſh Government; thoſe being all ſo haraſs'd, that they dare not Till the Ground, never expecting to reap what they ſow, or remain in their Houſes, but ſeek lurking-Places in Deſerts and Caverns, being naked to the Violence of the Plunderer, and therefore both unſafe and uncomfortable Journeying for Travellers. I took up my Station where I was before, and ſent my Man to the Havaldar to complain of the Treachery of the Guides; he profeſſed he was aſham'd, but a new Governor being ſince put over his Head, with the Command of a Party of Horſe, he was incapable of puniſhing them; yet for what further Courteſy he was able to do he was ready, and to that end ſent to the Subidar for his Licenſe for a Boat, which now are all pluck'd up and houſed aſhore, the Rains more than approaching, ſo that it was troubleſome procuring one; but by their joint Power it was at laſt atchieved; which a croſs-grain'd Brachmin, ſupported by an outlaw'd Portugal, contradicted in deſpight of both, ſeizing it by Force with Three Files of Soldadoes.

Prodigious great Frogs.

For which cauſe I was tied to the Conſort of croaking Frogs, making ſo hideous a Noiſe, that I took little Reſt this Night: When Day broke I could hardly believe my Eyes, for Bulk, or Ears, for Sound, exceeding ours incredibly; and to raiſe the Wonder, this Night was the firſt of the Rains, before which none were heard: Wherein Pliny may be truſted, better than in ſome other Reports; for ſpeaking de Ranis, he ſays, Mirum ſemeſtri vitâ reſolvuntur in limum, nullo cernente, & rurſus vernis aquis renaſcuntur, quæ fuere natæ, proinde occultâ ratione cum omnibus annis id eveniat. Et Ariſtot. de Gen. Sic Ovidius.
Semina limus habet virides generantia ranas.

Who all conſent to the poſſibility of the thing, the prolifick Virtue lying hid in the ſlimy Matter, till a conjunction of fit Cauſes diſpoſe it for ſuddain Action.

The Nure-Tree.

Walking the Quarters of my Lodgings, a more delightful, and as unuſual a Proſpect attracted my Animadverſion; a great Tree full of ſtringy red Flowers, ſet in open Calices upon a long Stalk, like budding Grapes; which before the Sun had collected much force, I ſaw begin to fall in ſhowers upon the Ground; deſiring to handle one Bough, I obſerved them fixed; ſtill they upon the Tree dropped till all was ſhedded, and the Ground ſtrewed with them, which a Brachmin carefully gathered up to reſerve for a Phyſical uſe; but more truly out of Superſtition, paying Rent for the Privilege: This Wonder is renewed daily, they Bloſſoming in the Night, and contrary almoſt to all other Plants, are diſguſted with the Sun-beams, drooping in the day; which is like the Arbor Triſtis at St. Thomas his Mount, only the Flowers of that are White and Sweet, and this Red and indifferently Scented; the Leaves of the Tree reſemble thoſe of a Walnut; in the Country Nomenclature it is called Nure; of what Virtue I cannot learn.

Cruelty to their Beaſts.

Diſcharging here my Oxen, which I hired of a Gentue, who though they will not Kill their Neat, make no Conſcience to Work them to Death, allowing them hardly Food to keep them alive.

Inhumanity to their Sick.

Neither are they leſs Inhuman toward their Sick, a Woman being brought to die among the Tombs in my ſight; pretended to be done to avoid the Governor's troubling the Family (where ſhe lived a Dancing Wench) for Money; they making themſelves Heirs to their Eſtates when they die: Non ad eundem finem quem Herodotus ait, uti Antiquiores Ægyptii ægrotos ſuos non ad medicos, ſed in compita, & publicas vias deferebant, populum prætereuntem pro morborum curatione conſulturi: Not for that purpoſe, as Herodotus preſumes; the Egyptians brought not their Sick to Phyſicians, but laid them in the Streets and publick Paſſages, that the People paſſing by might be conſulted for their Cure.

The Moor-men Prieſts follow Trades.

Every Third Hour I had the din of a Man of God of the Moors, permitted to come hither to call them to Prayers; as he cried aloud he ſtopped his Ears with his Fingers, that he might emit his Voice with the more ſtrength, and leſs diſturbance to himſelf; experience thereby directing us to hear our own Sounds the better; and ſome Anatomiſts tell us, Nature has framed a Cartilaginous paſſage from the hollow of the Drum of the Ear, to the proceſs of the outward part of the cuneal Bone reaching to the Palat, which being open may poſſibly divert the Noiſe; but whether this do help, or is underſtood by them, yet this they do Practiſe; and this Afternoon their Sanctum Sanctorum was open, the Prieſt entring in Barefoot and Proſtrating himſelf on the Mats ſpread on the Floor, whither I muſt not not have gone, could his Authority have kept me out; the Walls were white and clean, but plain, only the Commandments, wrote in Arabick in the Weſt-end, were hung on a Table over an Arched Place, where the Prieſt Expounds on an Aſcent of Seven Steps, railed at top with Stone very handſomely: It is ſupported within with Four ſubſtantial Pillars of Timber well carved, the Roof all Wood, with a ſquare Hole over the Pulpit: Underneath are fine cool Vaults, and Stone Stairs to deſcend to a deep Tank, where this Prieſt was following the Occupation of making ſuch Paper as they uſe; which after he had ſteeped Cotton Rags in Water, he by beating brought it into the form of Paper; and cutting them, or ſlicing the Maſs into Sheets, was paſting them up on the Stone-ſides of the Moſque, next the Sun, to dry; after which they are poliſhed and glazed, and ſo made fit for their uſe.

Letter III.

A Pragmatical Portugal hindred me Embarking.

In the Evening I ſaw the reaſon of our ſtay this day; a Pragmatical Portugal fled to this Place, for deſigning the death of a Fidalgo in the front of 40 Men marching to the Governor's; his Name Pedro Sylvio, a Rich Lout, no Gentleman: Beſides theſe he keeps as a Guard to his Body, he has a Bloudy Leaſh of Cofferies imployed to be revenged on his Antagoniſt at Baçein; here he acts without Controle, and is about to accept of Pay under Seva Gi, he being courted thereto, becauſe he is a bold deſperate Fellow, the fitter Inſtrument to ruin his Nation.

A Bombaim Shebar carries me to Bombaim.

In the mean time here arriving a Bombaim Boat, ſhe was preſently disburthened of her Lading, and I Embarqued, and the 26th of May came abreaſt of Tanaw, the Paſs here being another main Impediment to the intended Trade up the Country with the Moors; which, had we in our poſſeſſion, according to the Contract with Portugal, we might the eaſier make Seva Gi comply; and more than that, find Lordſhips for Engliſhmen, where they might live contentedly, and not be beholden to Foreign Supplies for Proviſions: By Three the next Morning I Anchored againſt the Bunder at Bombaim, and Landed preſently after Travally-Beat, delivering my Letter from the Caun to the Preſident.

What Europe Ships I found in the Road.

Here rode an Europe Ship called the Fleece; which loſt her Paſſage laſt Year, coming too late out of England; and about Noon the Rainbow arrived, they being both forced to put in at Bombaſs, an Iſland of the Portugals on the Coaſt of Melinda, which produces excellent Ivory, and other Miracles, from whence they ſailed together; till juſt on this Shore a Storm ſeparated them, the Fleece gaining this Port; the Rainbow fell firſt in with Surat, and to Day came to an Anchor here.

The Concluſion.

Thus if I have been too prolix in this Narrative, I muſt beg your pardon for endeavouring to ſatisfy you on two Scores, which none but one of my Profeſſion muſt pretend to; the one relating to the Women, and the other to their Fortified Gurs or Caſtles; and if it find your Acceptance, it is all the Aim I have, and my Pains is thereby ſufficiently rewarded.

LETTER IV.

CHAP. I.

Concerning our Shipping for Carwar; of the Factory there; the Unsetled Condition of the Place; and our coming to Goa.

SIR,

THE Pleasure you express on the Receipt of Mine, makes me continue your Invited Trouble, as truly not enjoying any thing till I know your Sentiments; and therefore is it, next the quieting your Concern for my Life in so unhealthy a Place, I let you know Bombaim is my Station no longer than the President resides there: From whence you may perceive I have had Opportunities to expatiate. Chap. I.

The President goes to Surat,

And now the Rains are over, and Friendship concluded as well between particular Factions, as the Dutch; the President esteemed no Enemies so formidable as still to exact his Presence on this Island; wherefore constituting Mr. Philip Gyffard in his Place, he took Shipping in the Fleece, for Surat, accompanied by the Rainbow, New London, and East-India Merchant, English Ships, the Bombaim Merchant, and other Country Ships.

I to Carwar. Seva Gi's Naval Power.

After some time, Curiosity more than Business tempted me to go with the Chief of Carwar, that I might see Goa. In our Passage at Serapatan, to the South of Dan de Rajapore, a Strong Castle of Seva Gi's defended a deep Bay, where rode his Navy, consisting of 30 Small Ships and Vessels, the Admiral wearing a White Flag aloft.

Letter IV.

Arriving at Carwar, and the Chief going aſhore, he was met on the River by the Governor with two Barges; and landing, was welcomed by the Ordnance of the Engliſh Houſe.

His Arms have Conquer'd all round Carwar.

Carwar, what remains of it, is under the New Conqueſt of Seva Gi, being lately, with Anchola, Pundit, Cuderah and Semiſſar, brought under (though all of them very Strong Places): At which time the Engliſh were moulding a Fortification, or Houſe of Defence, for their own ſafety, when by the Aſſiſtance of a Small Pink they defended themſelves from all Hoſtile Miſchances; and though their Town was wholly laid in Aſhes, yet they built this their ſtately Manſion Four-ſquare, guarded by Two Bulwarks at the Commanding Corners of the Houſe: In the mean while Seva Gi made himſelf Maſter of Carwar Caſtle, together with the reſt, the Inhabitants flying to the Woods and Hills for ſhelter: Thus it continues not without daily diſturbance from theſe Sylvans and Mountaineers, the commiſerated Subjects of Viſiapour, who often make an Head and fall upon them; by which means the Government is unſetled, and the Governors ſhift from Place to Place.

The Ground our Houſe ſtands on granted by the King.

Our Houſe ſtands on a delicate Mead (on the Ground of * * * * Cutteen Eſq; a Corniſh Gentleman, who had it by grant from the King of Viſiapour, being impowered by a Claim of his Countrymen to the Right of Trading to the Eaſt-Indies, but long ſince left off) Seated on an Arm of the River, ſurveying a pleaſant Iſland ſtored with Game: The Caſtle is nearer the Hills, and higher up the Streams; about a League off the Sea the Hills guard the Plain till they make a Bank againſt the Ocean.

Seva governs by Brachmins.

Seva in his Government imitates the Moors in this, appointing a diſtinct Governor here for Town and Caſtle, and over all theſe a Commander with a Flying Army, who is Superintendent: Into Places of Truſt and Authority he puts only Brachmins, or their Subſtitutes, viz. Pundits, (a mean caſt) for Phyſicians; Sfoſdars or Centurions, Subidars, Havaldars, Civil Governors, Generals or Fighting Biſhops; of whom truly may be ſaid, Privata cuique ſtimulatio vile decus publicum. They are neither for Publick Good or Common Honeſty, but their own private Intereſt only: They refuſe no Baſe Offices for their own Commodity, inviting Merchants to come and trade among them, and then rob them, or elſe turmoil them on account of Cuſtoms; always in a Corner getting more for themſelves than their Maſter, yet openly muſt ſeem mighty zealous for their Maſter's Dues: So that Trade is unlikely to ſettle where he hath any thing to do; notwithſtanding his Country lies all along on the Sea-ſhore, and no Goods can be tranſported without his Permiſſion; unleſs they go a great way about, as we are forced to do.

The hard Uſage of Seva Gi's Subjects.

It is a General Calamity, and much to be deplored, to hear the Complaints of the poor People that remain, or are rather compelled to endure the Slavery of Seva Gi: The Deſies have Land impoſed upon them at double the former Rates, and if they refuſe to accept it on theſe hard Conditions (if Monied Men) they are carried to Priſon, there they are famiſhed almoſt to death; racked and tortured moſt inhumanly till they confeſs where it is: They have now in Limbo ſeveral Brachmins, whoſe Fleſh they tear with Pincers heated Red-

Red-hot, drub them on the Shoulders to extreme Anguiſh, (though according to their Law it is forbidden to ſtrike a Brachmin.) This is the accuſtomed Sawce all India over, the Princes doing the ſame by the Governors, when removed from their Offices, to ſqueeze their ill-got Eſtates out of them; which when they have done, it may be they may be employ'd again: And after this faſhion the Deſies deal with the Combies; ſo that the Great Fiſh prey on the Little, as well by Land as by Sea, bringing not only them, but their Families into Eternal Bondage.

Diſtractions of the Kingdom of Viſiapour.

However, under the King of Viſiapour the Taxations were much milder, and they lived with far greater comfort; but ſince the Death of the late King, his Son being in Minority, and the Kingdom left to a Protector, the Nobles, who held their Provinces as Feudatories or rather Vaſſals of him, begin to withdraw their Duty; Bullul Caun, General under the Protector Cowis Caun, an Hobſy, or Arabian Coffery (they being preferred here to Chief Employments, which they enter on by the Name of Siddies) having but the other day ſet upon the Protector and aſſaſſinated him; who was ſo terrible to Seva Gi's Men, that to render him the more dreadful, they ſpeak of his Hobſies after this manner, That with their Swords they are able to cut down Man and Horſe: That greater Commotions than yet have happened, are to be expected in this Kingdom; not only Seva Gi, but the Mogul at this time bidding for the Kingdom.

Bullul Caun is a good Soldier, and a Patan; yet as much envied by the Duccan Princes, as Cowis Caun was by him; whereupon it behoves him to be watchful of their Motions, to which Vigilancy adding Expedition, he yet keeps them from joining Forces: Where leaving him on his Guard, I will preſent you with a ſmall Taſte of the Condition of the People about us, which fell out the Day before I ſet out for Goa, being deſirous to be preſent at the Natal.

Miſerable Condition of the Inhabitants, betwixt the Deſy and Seva Gi.

Early in the Morning came Delvi's Men, 500 in Company; whereupon Seva Gi's Men being but 100 Foot, and 25 Horſe, retired into the Caſtle; miſerable Souls for Soldiers on both ſides; they look'd like our old Britains, half naked, and as fierce, where all lies open before them: They had a loud Noiſe of Muſick, and a tumultuous Throng of People, and thus they marched on without any Order, till they encamped near our Houſe: Their Leader was a Man of a good Preſence, but a Rogue, an Hindu by Birth, a Soldier by Education; making this his Maxim, Ibi Fas ubi maxima Merces: There is the greateſt Right where is the beſt Pay.

At Noon, by the Hurly-burly of all Ranks of Men, Women, and Children, with what little Subſtance they had, flying under our Guns for Succour, we were given to underſtand Seva Gi's Men were in Motion (whom they dread more than the other); but on appearance of the Deſy's Grob they retreated again: This Deſy is one that was Rendero of all this Country, under the King of Viſiapour, and had 1000 Men under him (of whom Delvi was Chief); but being entrapped by his Subtilties, whom he leaſt ſuſpected (being raiſed by him), he was forced to ſubſcribe to the Power of Seva; of whom Delvi not having his Ends, he turns about, and does promiſe to ſet his former Maſter in Poſſeſſion once more. At Night we Letter IV. had Letters (for you muſt know both Parties Salam to us, being in ſo ſtrong an Houſe, elſe we ſhould be liable to their Fury), That Seva Gi's Party of Horſe, whilſt Delvi had paſſed the River, ſeized his Baggage, which was left guarded by 60 Men, whereof he having Notice, ſoon overtakes them, and cauſes them to ſurrender their Booty, driving them to the Caſtle, with the loſs of two of their Horſes, and one Cavaleiro ſlain: Under theſe Circumſtances theſe Folks are left to ſtruggle, without hope of Relief from Viſiapour, they being all to pieces there.

Take Barge for Goa; where we found the Paſſes well guarded.

The next Morning, in the Company's Baloon of 16 Oars, with ſeven Peons, two Engliſh Soldiers, two Factors, and my ſelf, having a Competency of Arms and Ammunition, with a ſmall Piece a-head, we ſet Sail for Goa. We had not gone far down the River, before we met two Boats full of Men for a Supply to Seva Gi. Near Sun-ſet we reached an Oyſter-Rock, on which we landed, and fed plentifully, being in their prime this cold Seaſon; our Bargemen would frequently dive 9 or 10 Minutes, and riſe with great Lumps of Oyſters clodded together, as big as a Man could well carry. The next Morn we put into the River Sal, half way to Goa: At Three in the Afternoon we entred the Mouth of Goa River, where in convenient Places ſtand four Forts and a Block-houſe, not only impaſſable by Water, but impregnable by Land; as the Dutch proved them twelve Years together, having a Fleet riding conſtantly before them, and for that time, while the Monſoons permitted, making continual Aſſaults, but with little Succeſs: On the left, ſtored with Braſs Pieces, ſtands the Agoada, or the King's Aquaduct, running from the Top of the higheſt Hill to the Water-ſide, where for a conſierable Space is a Platform of their chiefeſt Ordnance; facing this is the Fort and Monaſtery of Nos Signior de Cabo, a pleaſant as well as ſtrong Citadel: Beyond this, in a wide but dangerous Bay (ſo that what Boats come in muſt paſs the Channel under the Muzzles of the Guns) ſtands Marmagoun, defending that Iſland and Bay: By the Bar is Roys Magi on the Left, and Gaſper de Dios on the Right: Before Sun-ſet we came to Captain Gary's Houſe at Pangeim, over the Bar a Mile; a Seat by reaſon of the Healthineſs of the Air choſen by the Fidalgoes, who have beautified it with their Summer-houſes; the Viceroy having a Palace here, where he retires in the Heats and time of Shipping: Betu on the other ſide enjoys the ſame good Fortune.

The Gallantry of the Portugals, and neglect of their Carracks.

The Eve to the Eve of the Natal, or Chriſtmas, we came up the River, adorned all along with ſtately Churches and Palaces; the Water circling with its Stream ſeveral Iſlets, and half-way up to the City paſſes under a Bridge of 36 Arches of Stone; and from thence runs a Cauſeway of Stone two Miles in length, admitting the Flood only by two Sluces, into Wears or Dams made for Fiſh and Salt, and ends with three Arches more: A little beyond which is depainted on a Church, a Story of a Ship brought from Cape Bon Eſperanzo, hither in one Night, and fixed where the Church is now built, and by that means helping them with Timber for the Roof, and two Croſſes ſet up as far off as the Ship was in length; whether true or falſe, I ask no queſtions, for fear of the Inquiſition, which here is a terrible Tribunal. At Noon we came in view of Goa, not without the the ſight of a many Baloons paſſing to and again very ſwiftly, it being the greateſt Paſtime they have to Row againſt one another; more bewitched with ſuch outward Gallantry, than prompted on to more Benficial Charges; their Europe Ships lying here neglected till they rot for want of Cargo, Three great Carracks being ready to drop in Pieces; notwithſtanding they have ſmall Trading Ships in the River, and againſt the City, beſide a Carrack under the Agoada, which they ſend home this Year. Chap. II.

CHAP. II.

Takes a View of Goa; makes a Voyage to Vingula; Engages with the Malabars, and returns us to Carwar.

THE City of Goa looks well at a ſmall diſtance, not being to be ſeen far by reaſon of the adjacent Hills and windings of the River; it is Ten Miles up the River, ſtands upon Seven Hills; every where Colleges, Churches, and glorious Structures; it has Gates to it, and a Wall; it is Modelled but rudely, many Houſes diſgracing it with their Ruins, the Streets interfereing moſt confuſedly: We were directed to a Tavern againſt the See, the Habitation of the Archbiſhop of the Order of St. Bernard; which the Clergy here mightily ſtomach, eſpecially the Jeſuits, who bend not to his Authority, having a Provoſt of their own, going in as great State as the Archbiſhop; he appears abroad in a Sedan, and has Eight Clerico's on Foot Bareheaded, walking on each ſide, beſide other Attendance: The Cathedral is not often excelled by ours at home for the bigneſs of the Pile; the Architecture but Plain, though very Neat; the Altar and ſide Chappels filled with Images of delicate Sculpture of our Bleſſed Saviour and the Virgin Mother, Gilded all over with Gold.

The Archbiſhop's See, and Provoſt of the Jeſuits.

From thence we were brought to the College of the Dominicans, the Seat of the Inquiſidor, who is always one of this Order; a magnificent Front to the Street, aſcending by many ſteps, being a huge Fabrick; the Church ſurpaſſed the Cathedral, the Pillars from top to bottom being overlaid with a Golden Waſh, and on the Walls the Martyrology of their Order: In the Sacriſtan were Maſſy Silver Candleſticks, and other Veſſels very Rich; the Dormitories elegantly contrived in upper and lower Walks, and the whole without Compare to others that fell in our Ken: Eraſm. Vincit opibus Parathalaſſium tot candelabra argentea, tot ſtatuæ aureæ, Baptiſteria, &c. The Habit is a white Veſture with a Crotchet under a black Gown, or Cowl, like Nuns. Their College was well repleniſhed with Devotes, and commanded a bleſſed Proſpect.

The College of the Dominicans the Seat of the Inquiſitor.

The Pauliſtines enjoy the biggeſt of all the Monaſteries at St. Roch; in it is a Library, an Hoſpital, and an Apothecary's Shop well furniſhed with Medicines, where Gaſper Antonio, a Florentine, a Lay-Brother of the Order, the Author of the Goa Stones, brings them

St. Roch.

Letter IV. them in 50000 Xerephins, by that invention Annually; he is an Old Man, and almoſt Blind, being of great Eſteem for his long practice in Phyſick, and therefore applied to by the moſt Eminent of all Ranks and Orders in this City; it is Built like a Croſs, and ſhews like a Seraglio on the Water.

Domo of Bon Jeſu.

We paid a Viſit to the Domo of Bon Jeſu, the Church an admirable Piece, the Repoſitory of St. Xaverius, the Indian Apoſtle, where is a famous Tomb in Honour of him, who firſt ſpread the Goſpel as far as China, and ſealed it with his Martyrdom, near Two hundred Years ago, leaving his Body a Miraculous Relick of his better part, it ſtill retaining its vivid Colour and Freſhneſs, and therefore expoſed once a Year to publick view, on the Veſpers of his Feſtival.

Why the Jeſuits are called Pauliſtins.

St. Paul's was the firſt Monaſtery of the Jeſuits in Goa, from whence they receive the Name of Pauliſtins; it is the Seat therefore of their Provoſt, who is Independent, and Rules ſuo Jure.

The Jeſuits are Clad in Black Gowns with a Collar and Rings, with high round Caps flat at top, Shoes but no Stockins, as few indeed, either Clergy or Laity have here: (Por Amor de Friſco).

Of all Orders when they die they are Inhumed in the Habit of the Order they belong to, without Coffins.

The Policy, as well as the Trade, of this place, is moſtly devolved from private Perſons on the Pauliſtins, wherefore this ſaying is in every Body's Mouth;

A Franſiſcano guardo minha mulier;
A Pauliſtino guardo minha denier.

The Convent of St. Auſtin.

We went to the Convent of St. Auſtin's, Inhabited by that Order, who when they go out, wear Black Gowns (girt about with a Leathern Girdle) like our Bachelors of Arts, with Black Hoods; within doors White, of the ſame Faſhion with a Scapulary.

Several Seminaries.

We ſaw ſeveral Seminaries, or Schools, where the Students diſpute in long Cloaks, or Veſts.

The Franciſcans.

We ſaw the Convent, or Church, of the Franciſcans, or Grey Friars, with Cords inſtead of Girdles about their Middles, Sandals inſtead of Shoes; they wear Grey Broad brimmed Hats, as Countrymen do, as well as Cowls abroad, their Habit being borrowed of the Ruſticks; they touch not Money, but carry one with them that will, and are Mendicants.

The Carmelites.

The College of Carmelites is on an high Mount, proſpecting the whole City, it is a fine Building; theſe are Begging Friars too, Eat only Fiſh, except in Sickneſs, Cloathed with a courſe Ruſſet Tippet Coat and Veſt, girt about with a Cord: In their Hall where they Repaſt, at the upper end on the Table is placed a Death's Head; over their Cells, Sentences denoting each Virtue, which were Wrote in Capital Letters of Gold over the Doors, as Fortitude, Patience, and the like: Here we left many Devout Old Men on their Knees, Praying Fervently, and Living Piouſly.

We deſcended from this lovely ſpectacle to the Spittle, where we found the Poor faring well from their Benefactors.

The Spittle.

The forepart of their Veſpers to the Natal, I ſpent at the King's Hoſpital; where their Care for the Sick is commendable, an handſome Apothecary's Shop furniſhing them with Medicines: The Phyſicians ſicians here are great Bleeders, inſomuch that they exceed often Galen's Advice, ad deliquium, in Fevers; hardly leaving enough to feed the Currents for Circulation; of which Cruelty ſome complain invidiouſly after Recovery.

St. Monacha a Nunnery.

In our return we ſaw a Nunnery, and the Nuns at their Devotion, a Confeſſor through the Grates Reading Maſs, and performing the Ceremonies to a Couple with Maiden-Crowns on their Heads, ready to be admitted into the Virgin Society:

——— Innuptæque æmula Phebos
Vitta coercebat poſitos ſine lege capillos.

They had good Faces and excellent Voices; the Nunnery was called St. Monacha; here is another of St. Clara's.

The Theatini in the Virge of the Palace.

Near the Palace is a Modern, but a compleat Convent of the Theatini, where Captain Gary ſtaid to ſhew us the Palace, not ſo Sumptuous as Convenient; paſſing the Guards we were uſher'd into a long Gallery, hung round with the Pictures at length of all the Vice-Roys that had been in Eaſt-India down to the preſent Vice-Roy: At the upper end was the Canopy Royal and Chair of State; upon information of our being there, we were introduced the Vice-Roys Preſence; he received us Standing, and after a little Conference, diſmiſſed us. A Proper Man, Courteous to Strangers, his Name Lewis Mendoſa de Albuquerque, newly created Marqueſs by the King; in this Room was another Canopy of State, with the Arms of Portugal. Coming into the Court-yard we ſaw ſome Men in Gowns, like our Aldermen, the Emburgadors, or Council of the City, going to attend the Vice-Roy to his Devotion at the Church of Miſericord, where was to be Preſented a Pious Comedy; but their Repreſentations being too tedious, and the generality making Religion the leaſt of their buſineſs, not reſpecting either God or the King, they made ſuch a rout among the Women, that we were glad to leave and Reimbark for our Lodgings.

At Night we were alarmed by a paultry Fellow that took our Houſe for his Sanctuary, being forced to it for his own Security; the Soldiers aſſuming great licenſe for want of Pay, and the Cofferies for want of Victuals, ſo that every one walks the City with his naked Sword in his Hand for his own defence at Evening; and now within Doors, and in a Private Houſe, we were forced to make our Arms our Pillows.

In our going to Vingula we Engage a Malabar Pirate.

The next day we paſſed the Bar for Vingula; half way we put aſhore to refreſh our Men, and at Ten in the Morn ſet out again; by Twelve we came cloſe up with a Malabar that had ſeiſed a Grob, but we ſoon made him yield his Prize to engage with us; which they did briskly for Two hours, ſtriving to board us, caſting Stink-pots among us, which broke without any Execution, but ſo frighted our Rowers, that we were forced to be ſevere to reſtrain them; they plied their Chambers and ſmall Shot, and flung Stones, flouriſhing their Targets and Darting Long Lances; they were well Manned in a Boat ten times as big as our Barge, and at leaſt Sixty fighting Men beſides Rowers; we had none to manage our ſmall Gun, the Gunner running running away at Goa after Sluts in Brothels: One of the Factors undertaking it, was blown up by a Cartrige of Power, and ſquenched his Cloaths a-flame in the Ocean, ſo that they were fully bent to board us; but they riſing to come in, we all this while having ſculked under their Targets, diſcharged our Blunderbuſſes, which made them ſheer off, never to come near us again; after which we chaſed them, they flying afore us.

Letter IV.

They careſs us aſhore at Vingula.

The Spectators of this Encounter were the Dutch Chief and Governor on the Shore, and a Ship of a dozen Guns in the Road; by Three we came a-ſhore with ſlight Hurts, but cried up mightily by the People, who are continually infeſted by theſe Pirats without any Reſiſtance: The Dutch receiv'd us at their Factory very kindly, whoſe Houſe is handſomely ſeated a Mile up a Shallow River, (except at Spring Tides, when luſty Ships may come up); it is built upon Arches Geometrically, by the preſent Chief, in the Figure of a Roman T, all of Solid Stone; it is Trenched with a Square Trench, and defended by a Platform of Two Great Guns on every ſide, and Two Great Bulwarks, bearing Smaller Guns at the Two Corners of the Houſe; the Front is Italian Faſhion, paſſing to it over a Draw-Bridge; at Night we walked into the Town, part of it lately deſtroyed by the Syddy; where was a Buzzar, and a neat Choultry of the Dutch's, and beyond a Garden watered by a Freſh Stream, where we bathed: After Supper they treated us with the Dancing Wenches, and good Soops of Brandy and Delf's Beer till it was late enough.

Monuments for Women burnt alive with their dead Huſbands.

We went next day to the Governor, who Complimented us highly; he is under the Tyrannical Government of Seva Gi, where all Barbarous Cuſtoms are exerciſed; and here it is permitted the Women not only to burn with their dead Husbands, but here are many Monuments raiſed in honour of them.

Et certamen habent læthi, quæ viva ſequatur
Conjugium; pudor eſt non licuiſſe mori.
Ardent victrices & flammæ pectora præbent,
Imponuntque ſuis ora peruſta viris.

A ſhame 'tis not to die; they therefore ſtrive,
Who may be fam'd to follow him alive.
The Victor burns, yields to the Flame her Breaſt,
And her burnt Face does on the Husband reſt.

Which Cuſtom, if we believe Tertullian, is as old as Dido, on a generous Account; not by conſtraint, as theſe are moſtly ſaid to be.

Dido profuga in alieno ſolo, ubi regis nuptias ultro aptaſſe debuerat, ne tamen ſecundas expeteretur, maluit è contrario uri quam nubere. The Famous Dido, driven a Stranger into another Country, was courted by the King, which one would have thought ſhe ſhould willingly have entertained, rather than to refuſe a Second Marriage on ſo hard Terms, as to burn her ſelf alive, for fear of polluting her ſelf thereby; which ſhews that Virgil in his Account of that Lady killing her ſelf for Æneas, was a Fiction more to his own Credit than hers.

At

At Hubly in this Kingdom are a Caſt called Linguits, who are buried upright, whoſe Wives when they have a mind to accompany their Husbands into another World, are ſet in the ſame Pit with them, covered up to the Shoulders with Mold; who after Ceremonies performed, have their Necks wrung round, and the Pit filled up with Earth immediatly.

Return from Vingula to Goa.

Our Factors having Concerns in the Cargo of the Ships in this Road, loaded two Grobs and departed; I leaving them to proſecute their Voyage, I put in at Goa again; and in Captain Gary's Baloon rowed round the Iſland over againſt Goa, where the Induſtry of the Portugueze Anceſtry is worthy of our commendation, in ſecuring their Land both from Water and their Enemies, by ſtrong Banks and neceſſary Block-Houſes; Seva Gi poſſeſſing all againſt it, called Norway, famous for Curtiſans.

The King's Yard viewed.

Hence I went to the King's Yard, where lay half a Score Galeons fitted for any Expedition; in theſe the Beſt Fidalgos think it no ſcorn to go Commanders, it being the only thing they can ſerve their Country in; theſe are they they ſend out with their Caphalas to convoy them, when they return with Corn either from the North or the South; when every Cabeſſo de Squadroon has Two or three Royal Galleys under him, that wear the Arms of Portugal in their Ancients only, and the Admirante, Vice Admirante and Captain-Major wear the King's Flag aloft as well as a Stern: The beſt of theſe carry no more than Eight or Ten Small Pieces, and the reſt fewer; over all theſe there is a Generaliſſimo both by Sea and Land, who is John Corea de Saw.

The Induſtry of the Portugal Anceſtry.

Incited daily by New Wonders, I intended to inviron the Iſland of Goa; which is circled by High and Strong Walls, with Flankiers on every winding of the River, beſides Four or Five luſty Block-Houſes, commanding the whole Work, a thing of vaſt Compaſs and Expence, ſtriking through the heart of the Iſland; which is altogether near Thirty Miles in Circumference, the Wall parting it in the half: We paſſed as far as to the Fort of St. Lawrence, which is placed conveniently to command the Mouth of the River from Marmagoun Bay; we endeavoured farther, but Wind and Tide prevented us; wherefore thinking it more facile to enterpriſe it on the other ſide, we deferred it till another day: All the Land about Goa is divided into Iſlets, it lying in the heart of them: Whereupon the next day that lay fair for our Deſign we came over the Bar, and ſailed with a favourable Wind into Marmagoun Bay; on the right part of it were many pretty Caves, or ſmall Bays, in one of whom rode near twenty Grobs, loaden with Cocoe-Nuts, Cair, Salt and Salt Fiſh: Beyond it half a League an Iſlet of Emanuel Lobos, fortified and maintained in deſpight of the State, till lately reconciled.

A well weighed choice of an Harbour.

From hence we parted to Old Goa on the main Iſland of Goa, which with its various Creeks and Bays makes up the left ſide or Cod of the Bay, pointing out in the middle of Nos Segnior de Cabo, it lying ſhort between Marmagoun and the Agoada, which makes the Mouth of the Bay to be reckoned from the Head-lands or Out-guards, ſome Three Leagues over, and Nos Segnior de Cabo a Commodious aſſiſtance to them both by its well-placed Ordnance, eaſily reaching them on either hand; but withal befriending Marmagoun, from which it is the wideſt, with huge Stakes of Rocks hid under Water, that Veſſels of Burthen muſt either ſeek out the Channel or Shipwreck themſelves, or elſe force themſelves on the Mouth of their Guns; a Fortunate and well weighed Choiſe of a Port and Harbour: In our Courſe we ſaw the bottom of the Bay meet with the River of St. Lawrence, and a Fleet of 30 Grobs more ready to receive their Lading; the Bay is two, if not three Leagues deep; the truly Noble Aldeas of the Fidalgos, the Temples and curiouſly wrought Croſſes of the Eccleſiaſticks, ſtriving on every open Strand and riſing Hill to outſhine one another, by their Whited Outſides, and Artificial and Delicate Adornments.

Old Goa.

At our Landing the Sea beſtowed a kind Murmur on the yielding Sand, and caſt us aſhore in a Place quadrated more for ſtill Retirement, than noiſy Commerce; there lying before its Banks Canooſes belonging to Fiſhermen, and Baloons of Pleaſure only; the Segnioros minding nothing leſs than Merchandizing, and the Pover imploying their Fiſh-hooks, and knitting-needles to get a Livelihood: So that I preſume Old Goa need not complain for the loſs of Trade, which ſhe never had; nor lament the deprivation of Coſtly and Spacious Buildings, which ſhe never wanted; but hath them rather as a Country Town (of whom ſhe is the Dame) than City, though ſhe might claim the Title of Miſtreſs; her Soil is Luxurious and Campaign, and abounds with Rich Inhabitants, whoſe Rural Palaces are immured with Groves and Hortos, refreſhed and cooled with Tanks and Rivulets; but always reſerve a graceful Front for the Street, which are broad and cleanly at this time of Feſtivity, celebrating with Triumphant Arches and moſt Pompous Pageants: Palenkeens paſs as commonly as at Goa it ſelf, the People as urbane, though leſs peſtered with Drunken Comrades, as Soldiers, Seamen and Ruffians; the Market-place is ſtored with Proviſions, and the Pariſh provided with a large Church; but nothing antiquated as I could diſcover, by which it is eaſy to judge Old Goa never was deſerted; but Now Goa hath ſtoln from hence for the ſake of Traffick, for that purpoſe the River is more ſuitable than this Bay; it may meaſure from one end to the other, two Miles.

Sancto Pilar the Seat of the Capuchins.

Abreaſt of it on an hanging Hill is a Sumptuous Structure of the Capuchins called Sancto Pilar, the Aſcent to it is by a winding Staircaſe cut out of the Rock, and Railed with Stone Baniſters; this Order is diſcalceated alſo, and conſanguineous to the Franciſcans, differing only in Superiority and Auſterity, their Hood is long and tapering, on their Scapular in faſhion of a Sugar-loaf; to both whom are annexed a Lap-Fraternity, which wear the Mantle and Tippet, but not the Veſt and Cord, neither are they ſhaved as the Fathers are: So that all Degrees of them in every Order are comprehended under theſe Three Claſſes, viz. Patres, Fathers; Fratres, Brothers; Juvenes, Young men: To theſe alſo belong the Siſterhood of Sancta Clara.

The Way betwixt Old Goa and New Goa.

Thus parted we from the comely Galatæa, and bent our Addreſſes toward the Courts of the ſtately Amarillis, whoſe Highways were full of Travellers, Country Manſions, Villages, Churches, ſhady Stands, Stands, and Places to eaſe the Brawny Shoulders of the wearied Slaves: Half Way is a School, where their Cofferies (which come moſt from Moſambique, or Bombaſs) are taught to ſound on Trumpets and Loud Muſick; a Gang of whom forced their Noiſe on us along the Fields. A Mile wide of the City we entred a Gate that was ſtrong, to which the Wall is contingent, that compaſſes the better Part of the Iſland together with the City. Chap. II.

From Old Goa it is three Miles: Within the Wall a fair Road leads to the City; a little out of the Way is erected an high-wall'd Well, and goes up Steps to a Pair of Gallows, whereon Malefactors are left hanging till they drop into the Well, or the Birds prey on them.

By Night we gained the Out-part of the City, boaſting in as large a Ruin of the Moors, as their own numerous ſtanding Fabricks; lying ſo in Obloquy of the hated Mahometans, who once made all ſtoop, where the Chriſtians have now advanced their Sacred Sign: We quartered our ſelves this Evening in a Tavern kept by a Chineſe, who are White, Platter-fac'd, and Little-eyed, tolerated on account of embracing Chriſtianity; our Baloon met us, and coming round by St. Lawrence was here before us.

Their Priſons and Executions.

Going the next Morning to the Palace-ſtairs, we ſaw their Seſſions-houſe, the bloody Priſon of the Inquiſition; and in a principal Market-place was raiſed an Engine a great height, at top like a Gibbet, with a Pulley, with ſteppings to go upon, as on a Flag-ſtaff, for the Strapado, which unhinges a Man's Joints; a cruel Torture. Over-againſt theſe Stairs is an Iſland, where they burn (after expoſing them to the Multitude) all thoſe condemned by the Inquiſitor, which are brought from the Sancto Officio dreſs'd up in moſt horrid Shapes of Imps and Devils, and ſo delivered to the Executioner. As we rowed by the Powder-Mills, we ſaw ſeveral the Holy Office had branded with the Names of Fetiſceroes, or Charmers, or in Engliſh, Wizards, releaſed thence to work here; known by a Yellow Cope, Weed, or Garment, like our City poor Penſioners, ſleeveleſs, with an Hole for their Neck only, having a Red Croſs before and behind. St. Iago, or St. James's Day, is the Day for the Aucto de Fie, when a general Gaol-Delivery is made of thoſe unhappily intrapp'd in the Inquiſition; at which time there is a great Cavalcade to the Cathedral, and every Fidalgo appearing there, is honoured with being a Patron to ſome of theſe poor Wretches; St. James being the Tutelar Saint of this City.

Seva Gi a bad Neighbour,

On whom Seva Gi minds them to invocate, having but juſt now wreſted Pundit, the chief Strength of Viſiapour from that King; on the ſurrender of which followed the Conqueſt of the Low Country beyond Carwar: And by this means the Diamond-Trade is intercepted, this being the greateſt Mart for ſmall Diamonds, before theſe Incurſions: And not only ſo, but they are ſtraitned for Butchers Meat, which uſed to come down plentifully that way; for theſe had rather kill a Man, than ſuffer a Beaſt to be led to the Stall; and not only for Meat but Firing, they being beholden to that Country for Fuel, as well as Timber for Building. Theſe Calamities, beſides the Approach of Seva Gi's Army, make no ſmall Diſtractions, especially having small Recruits of Europe-Men; so that the Padres must not only Pray but Fight, there being in the Convents more than in the Garisons.

G O A

The Power of the Viceroy and Archbishop.

Is the Metropolis of the Portugals in the East-Indies, and the Residence of a Viceroy, who gives Laws to all Seculars, though he cannot execute them on the Fidalgoes in Capital Crimes, the King reserving the Definitive Sentence in such Cases to himself; they are therefore sent home to be tried in Europe, by the established Courts of their Kingdom. The Archbishop is Supreme in Spirituals, or ought to be so.

The outward Port of the Fidalgoes.

The City is a Rome in India, both for Absoluteness and Fabricks, the chiefest consisting of Churches, and Convents, or Religious Houses; though the Laity have sumptuous ones all of Stone; their Streets are paved, and cleaner than the tops of their Houses, where they do all occasions, leaving their Excrements there. They live with a splendid Outside, vaunting in their number of Slaves, walking under a Street of their own Umbrelloes, bare-headed, to avoid giving Distaste in not removing their Hats: They being jealous of their Honour, pardon no Affront; wherefore to ogle a Lady in a Balcony (if a Person of Quality) it is revenged with a Bocca Mortis, or to pass by a Fidalgo without due Reverence, is severely chastised; they are carried mostly in Palenkeens, and sometimes on Horseback.

The Clergy how respected.

The Clergy affect little of outward State, going out only Frater cum Socio, in Couples; they salute a Father by first kissing the Hem of his Garment, then begging a Benediction.

The Mass of the People are Canorein, though Portuguezed in Speech and Manners; paying great Observance to a White Man, whom when they meet they must give him the Way with a Cringe and Civil Salute, for fear of a Stochado.

The Women and Children.

The Women, both White and Black, are kept recluse, vailed abroad; within doors, the Richer of any Quality are hung with Jewels, and Rosaries of Gold and Silver many times double; Moneloes of Gold about their Arms, Necklaces of Pearl about their Necks, Lockets of Diamonds in their Bodkins for their Hair, Pendants in their Ears; a thin Lungy, or Half-smock reaching to their Waste, shewing their Skin through it; over that, abroad, a close Doublet; over their Lower Parts a Pitticoat or Lungy, their Feet and Legs without Stockins, but very Rich Slippers. Amongst them some are extraordinarily featur'd and compleatly shap'd, though not of that coruscant Beauty our English Ladies are; and for Mien far beneath them, being nurtured up in a lowly Bashfulness, whereby they are render'd unfit for Conversation, applying themselves wholly to Devotion and the Care of the House: They sing, and play on the Lute, make Confections, pickle Achars, (the best Mongo Achars coming from them), and dress Meat exquisitely, not to put the Stomach to much trouble, but such as shall digest presently; Supoes, Pottages, and varieties of Stews, in little China Dishes or Plates, which they shift before you are cloy'd, and at a common Entertainment tainment alter half a dozen Modes: Their Reliſhing Bits have not the Fierineſs of ours, yet all the pleaſure you can deſire; and to ſpeak truly, I prefer their ordirnary way of ordering Victuals before any others. If a Stranger dine with the Husband, and he conſent to have the Wife come in and ſit at Table as our Women do, there is no means of perſuading her, but ſhe will be much offended if you taſte not of every thing they cook. The little Children run up and down the Houſe naked, till they begin to be old enough to be aſhamed. Chap. II.

The fineſt Manchet it may be in the World is made here, and the pureſt Virgins Wax for Tapers. At Nerule is made the beſt Arach or Nepa de Goa, with which the Engliſh on this Coaſt make that enervating Liquor called Paunch (which is Indoſtan for Five) from Five Ingredients; as the Phyſicians name their Compoſition Diapente; or from Four things, Diateſſeron. The fineſt Manchet, &c.

The way they give Notice from the Outguards of what Ships are ſeen off at Sea, is after they have ſpread the King's Standard, to elevate ſo many Baskets on Poles; which Sign the next appointed Watch receives, and ſo ſucceſſively till it arrive at the City. How the Outguards inform the City.

On New-Year's Day, Stilo Veteri, with Captain Gary in his Baloon of Ten Rowers, and Six Servants, we ſet ſail for Carwar, and had brought half Salſet behind us, when the Moon being two Hours high we diſcovered a Light, and immediately Three Sail making after us, and by the Shore another ſmall Sail intercepting us: Our Men that before would not handle an Oar, fell to it tightly, and two more purſuing us out at Sea, we ran fairly into Cola or Salſet, a Fiſhing Town, where lay ſeveral Boats to carry off Mountains of Fiſh ſalted on the Beach, the Scent whereof was very noyſom under a miſerable Shed we took for our Lodging: The next Morning we came early to the River Sal, where we found Eight Boats ſcared in for Protection againſt the Malabars; where we had this Advice, That Five were roving in ſight, and had vowed Revenge for the Injury we did them at Vingula, killing their Captain and three or four of their Chief Men, beſides as many more Soldiers, all which they buried at Anjediva: We ſtaid here therefore this Night, and lay in the open Air by the River's ſide, being ſufficiently ſoaked by the Dew. Return'd to Carwar.

Captain Gary therefore the next Morn, not willing to hazard himſelf on a Voyage undertaken only for Pleaſure, procured a Pilot Boat to go before us, and make Signs by a White Flag, if the Coaſts were clear at every Point; and ſo we got ſafe to Carwar River's Mouth, when the Chief having notice of our coming, came on Horſeback to welcome us, and accompanied us in the Baloon to the Houſe.

This Captain Gary is he that was the laſt Governor for the King on the Iſland Bombaim: He is a Perſon of a Mercurial Brain, a better Merchant than Soldier, is skill'd in moſt of the Languages of the Country, and is now writing a Piece in Arabick, which he dedicates to the Viceroy, with whom he is in great Eſteem. He lived at Achein, and was created a Noble by that Queen; was born a Venetian, but of Engliſh Parents, by which means he underſtands Italian, Portugueze, and Latin, perfectly, and is an accompliſhed Courtier.

CHAP. III.

A Pilgrimage to Gocurn, where was a great Gentile Solemnity. A curſory Diſcourſe of the Bordering Princes.

AS much to the Southward as Goa is to the North, lies Gocurn, whither I took a Pilgrimage, with one other of the Factors, Four Peons, and Two Biggereens, or Porters only; we ſet out all on Foot the Second of February, at the beginning of the Heats, at Ten in the Morning, and with wonderful toil clambered up Anchola Hill, a woody Mountain of an extraordinary height; where reſting a little while we made for the bottom; at which lies an Horſe of an Havaldar's Interred under an huge ſquare Stone, and his Effigies Dormant upon it Eſcuthceon, or Diamond-wiſe; not much farther, the Wood being on Fire, we were in danger not only of being Smothered but Roaſted (this place not long ſince the receptacle of Delvi and his Crew, and therefore I ſuppoſe purpoſely Burnt):

Et neque jam cineres ejectatamque favillam
Ferre poteſt, calidoque involvitur undique fumo.

But having conquered by our better Angels this lively portraicture of Hell, we were led into an happy Elyſium, or Plain, that was bounded by the immenſe Ocean; and had we been Shades, to have been ſatisfied with an Aierial Diet, we might have fared well, for nothing elſe could we purchaſe, the poor Inhabitants being Fiſhermen, were left by the iniquity of Delvi, without either Fiſh, Boats, Nets, or Rice; and upon that account unlikely to ſupply us. Night approaching we knew not where to better our ſelves than under a Mango-Tree; where our wearied Spirits afforded us not much time for Contemplation, nor our eager Stomachs much Sleep; wherefore by break of Day we made for Anchola, where we found the Buzzar half Burnt, and the remaining Shops without Tenants, a bad Cordial to an empty Maw: We ſent our Paſs to the Governor, and procuring from him another, we haſtened to ſeek our own Proviſions.

Anchola Caſtle ſupplied with Braſs Guns from a Portugal Shipwreck.

Seva Gi ſpared not this Town when he took the Caſtle, ſo that it is almoſt down or deſerted; the Soldiers by that means diſſurniſhing themſelves of all Neceſſaries, but what they ſeize by Violence abroad; the Caſtle is a fine place and of good force, bearing Fifty Braſs Guns, the Moors had got out of a Portugueze Shipwreck; it commands as far as the River Gongole, the utmoſt extent of Seva Gi's Dominions, South; Two or Three Mile out of the Town we met with ſome Game, and made Prey of it, walking by the Strength of it to Gongole River.

The Country properly Canatick.

Where we Ferried over and took up our reſidence this Night at Gongola, the firſt Town in the Country, which ſtill retains the Name of Canatick, and therefore is properly ſo called; though we ſhall ſhew by by and by all this Tract of Land we have paſſed from Guzzerat deſerves the ſame appellation, being originally ſo. Chap. III.

The People looked Chearful, and live in Peace under a quiet Government.

Peace makes People chearful.

——— Sine militis uſu
Mollia ſecuræ peragebant otia gentes.

By the break of the next Dawn we got to Gocurn, and exchanged our Engliſh for Moors Cloaths, yet not ſo privately but that we were diſcovered by ſome that told our Banyan (who was come to perform a Vow to the Manes of his dead Father,) that Two Engliſhmen were come to the Tomaſia, or Sight; whereupon he came to us before we expected, with a Band of Thirty or Forty Men; but we deſired to be concealed and paſs for Moguls, that we might ſee without being taken notice of; he was conformable thereto, and we went into the Town, which was in a Valley near the Sea; formerly very ſplendid, now of more eſteem for the Relicks of their Pagods than any thing elſe.

Our coming to Gocurn diſcovered.

It is an Univerſity of the Brachmins and well Endowed; here are innumerable, but ruinated Pagods; Two only of any Mark, and they half ſtanding; they were Large and of good Workmanſhip in Stone, after their Antick and Hieroglyphical Sculpture; they had, as all have, a dark Entry at the farther end, wherein are continually lighted Lamps burning before the Duel, or Image, ſeated there to repreſent a Glory, or Phoſphorus, whither they reſort to Worſhip and Offer Oil, Rice, and Frankincenſe, at it's Feet, on an Offertory; ſome make a great pother of Anointing and Waſhing it, being laviſh both of their Pains and Coſt.

It is an Univerſity.

At this time the Brachmins Reap a great Harveſt, for this Place is of ſuch repute for its Sanctity and Meritoriouſneſs of a Pilgrimage hither, that all ſorts of Idolaters, from the remoteſt parts of India, come in ſholes, πλειόμεθοι, celebritas ad quam plurimi mortales conveniunt πλειοὶ βεότα συνέρχον, and we found ſo many, that the Streets were troubleſome to crowd through; with much ado we got into the Buzzar, or Fair, only ſo upon this occaſion, long Rows of Sheds being put up on both ſides the high Streets, where the Two great Pagods ſtood, one at each end.

This Tomaſia, or πλειόμεθοι the Brachmins Harveſt.

We were carried by the Tide of the People that bore that way out of this place, to a large oblong ſtone Tank, with Deſcents to go down all about it; in the middle a neat Pagod ſupported on Four Marble Pillars; here during this Feſtival at Evenings, are blazing a Lecque of Lamps.

In this all of both Sexes Waſh (this Solemnity being called the Jatry, or Waſhing) and Preſent Rice and Mony to the Brachmins; and the Fiſh which Swim here frequently receive their Benevolence, being ſo Tame you may catch them with your Hands; to be the death of one of theſe is held Piaculare.

The Jatry, or Waſhing.

vered wrapped up to the Brachmin; who brings a Cow and a Calf into the Water, and binding them with Frontlets ceremoniously, they bestow on them, as they are disposed, either for Ornament or Maintainance ever after; imagining their Souls to have their residence in them: From whence they are conducted to the Pagod, which they enter bare-footed, and offer to the Duel; returning, they smite on a Bell hung in the Body of the Church; and going to the Porch, receive their Slippers, washing afterwards at more liberty for the rest of the Festival.

It was a Primitive Custom among the Jews to shave when they had made a Vow, Act. Apost. Chap. 18. v. 18.

Jougies or Devotes.

Coasting along the Sea-side, we came to the Pomærium of the greatest Pagod, where near the Gate in a Choultry sate more than Forty naked Jougies, or Men united to God, covered with Ashes, and pleited Turbats of their own Hair; two above the rest remarkable, one sitting with his Head hanging over his Shoulders, his Eyes shut, moving neither Hands or Feet, but always set across, his Nails overgrown like Talons: The other as a check to Incontinency, had a Gold Ring fastned into his Viril Member.

A Solemn Procession of their Duels or Heroes.

And now we returned into the Market-place, having obtained leave to seat our selves by the Chief Captain to see their Duels pass by in Pomp, being to do their Devoirs to a Mother Pagod: At the upper-end of the High-street were two great moving Pageants drawn on Wheels, two Stories high, with a Cupulo on the top, which was stuck round full of Streamers of Orient Colours; the inferior Stories were painted with deformed Figures of their Saints, on every side Portals: In the lowest was placed the Duel, attended by their Chief Priests with a dark Blue Cope over their Shoulder, their under Garments White, and Puckeries on their Heads, a Mussal within, and an Oftagary (a Skreen of Silver and Velvet with Sarcenet Borders) to keep off the Sun.

Thus the Chief Naik with his loud Musick of Horns, Trumpets and Drums waited on it, and the Brachmins with softer, of the Dancing Wenches singing, with Bells at their Wrists and Heels, and their Tamboles or Tabrets: An Ensign of Red, Swallow-tailed, several Chitories; little, but Rich Kitsolls (which are the Names of several Counties for Umbrelloes); 500 Men, with Javelins of Brass and Steel, with Bells and Feathers, as many more with Guns under his Command; and the Naik Wherry with like fashioned Ensign of Green, bordered with a Checker of White and Green, followed by 200 in the same order as before; after these followed a Medly of Pots and Pans of Copper or Brass, Men clattering on them, and dancing a good measure: When the Train drew near, it was drawn by a Team of Holy Men, the People rising and clapping their Hands as it passed to the opposite Pagod; a Troop of the Gentry in Cavalcade rode after it, where having paid a Visit, it returned with the like Solemn Procession, and by discharging of Guns the Ceremony ended: There were several other Duels fanned by Women, offering Censers of rich Perfumes with huge Lights; before which People possessed with Familiars ran Cudgelling themselves; others in a different sort of Mummery belaboured themselves, till they could could not ſtand, all ſtriving to outdo others; thus blind and heated were they in their Zeal. Chap. III.

To deſcribe every particular Duel or Pagod, both for the number, and difficulty of the Shapes, would be impoſſible; take therefore only one that had eſcaped the Fire, and therefore highly venerable; 'twas cut out of Excellent Black Marble, the height of a Man, the Body of an Ancient Greek Hero, it had four Heads, and as many Hands, had not two been cut off; it was ſeated on an Offertory in a broken Pagod; a Piece of Admirable Work and Antiquity, exceeding, ſay they, Bonares, the other Noted Univerſity of the Heathens.

Their Founders unknown.

Who founded theſe, their Annals nor their Sanſcript deliver not. But certainly Time, and the Entry of the Moors, ruined them. This, though a Principal Univerſity, can boaſt of no Bodlean or Vatican; their Libraries being Old Manuſcripts of their own Cabalas, or Myſteries underſtood only by the Brachmins.

Their Divines under no Vow of Celibacy.

They live not under a Collegiate Confinement, but in pretty Neat Houſes plaſtered with Cow-dung, which is done afreſh as oft as they ſweep them, where they abide with their Families, Celibacy being no Injunction to their Divines; excepting one Houſe of the Sinai Caſt, where is a Reverend Old Man, Head of their Tribe, who profeſſes a Life without the Company of a Woman, and has the Attendance of a great many Young Aſhmen, and Grave Brachmins: Theſe live a reſerved Life, and ſpend it wholly in Praying and Abſtinence; as the others count their Prayers by Beads, theſe do it by Cowreys, Fiſh-ſhells: They wore Red Caps, ſuch as thoſe are brought from Tunis; and our Seamen wear daily aboard Ship: But the Stricter, and more Undefiled Caſt, is the Butt, the reaſon whereof you will find in the General Account of India.

A Brachmin can hardly attone the violation of his Caſt.

All Brachmins are diſtinguiſhed by a Cotton-thred athwart their Body from their Left Shoulder, hanging down under their Right Arm; which Badge, if they violate it, coſts them vaſt Sums of Money to redeem, beſides the undergoing of ſtrict Pennances.

The Caſt of the Dowlys.

They fetch Water for the Duels from the Tank with loud Muſick and Dancing Wenches three or four times a-day (the Brachmins waiting in courſe) and thoſe dancing Wenches and Boys ſet a-part for that Service, dare not dance afore any elſe: Theſe Dancers are taken out of the Caſt of the Dowlys, who are obliged to devote the Eldeſt of the Males and Females to that uſe; having for that reaſon large Diſpenſations concerning their Marriage, or the Liberty of getting Children, being common to all: To conclude with theſe, Whether Religion make theſe People Moroſe, or it be to be attributed to the Virtue of their Manners; you ſee in them a careleſneſs of behaviour towards Strangers, neither regarding the Novelty, nor Gawdineſs of their Garb; being here, as it is ſaid, Romæ, Lutetiæ ac Venetiæ, ——— Nemo quicquid miratur.

From hence we trooped to Tudera, at the Mouth of Mirja River, over a Rocky barren Hill, where the Company's Barge or Baloon met us; and went up in it to Mirja, where our brisk Young Banyan treated us with the Dancing Wenches; his Father dying ſoon, left him young, and he out of Government, laviſhes into Exceſſes not approved of by that ſtingy Tribe.

Of Mirja.

At Mirja ſtands a Caſtle, which though old is a very fine one, being double Wall'd and Trench'd, with high Turrets on the Baſtions: It was ſurrendred by the Treachery of a Moor Governor, and is now under the ſubjection of the Canatick Ranna; it has a wide Moat about it, but few Guns: The Town has a Buzzar, at the end of it a Cœmitery for the Moors, with an ample Aquaduct of good Stone.

An huge Snake.

Being tired, and lying to repoſe out of the Noiſe of the Dancers, on the Bank of the River, under a ſhady Tree, I was made at by an unſizable Snake, which I hardly eſcaped, had it not hiſſed with an unheard-of Noiſe before me, which rouzing me, made me ſhift its ſpeedy Courſe, as it angrily gathered up its Body, and darted its ſelf into the Flags on the River-ſide: Theſe Creatures are dreadful to the Inhabitants, and when I related my Hazard, they wondred I came off ſo, there being of them big enough to maſter the largeſt Animals: After my Danger was over, I was told ſhe had a Neſt in that Place, it being lately turned into a Burial-place. Hic, obitèr, notandum quod ſcribit Plinius, lib. 10. *Hiſt. Here by the by, might be noted what Pliny writes, to wit, That Snakes are generated out of Human Brains putrifying, &c.

Returning we overtook the Portugal Armado from the South, with Two hundred Paddy-Boats with their Convoys, and touched at Angediva, from whence we came to Carwar.

The Story of Canora.

Before I left Mirja I received this Information from the Natives, That the Canatick Country reaches from Gongola to the Zamerbin's Country of the Malabars, along the Sea, and Inland up to the Pepper-Mountains of Sunda, and the Precinct of Sergi Caun. Bedmure, four Days Journy hence, is the Capital City, the Reſidence of the Ranna, the Relict of Sham Shanker Naig, (murdered by his Nobles) Raja of Canora; who now Rules in her Son's Minority, Baſſepæ Naig, the young Raja, by and with the Authority of one Timi Naig, that from a Toddy-man has by his cunning Policy, more than by true Proweſs and Valour, raiſed himſelf to be General and Protector. Sergi Caun, a Prince of the Kingdom of Viſiapour, and he, have lately entred into an amicable League and firm Confederacy, who have already Eat together, whereupon it is bruited Timi Naig is about to embrace the Mahometan Faith.

The Prime Nobility have the Title of Naiks or Naigs, as thoſe of Malabar, Nairoes.

The Language is Canorein, which to me ſeems to be the Primitive, from the Malabars up to Surat; the Country ſhort of it, as well as Speech, being Canorein, and thoſe between varying only in Dialect, and the Names of the Country altered, as the Chance of War prevailed.

Here

Chap. III.

Here are Wild Elephants, ſome Pepper, and ſtore of Beetle-Nut, and Wild Nutmeg, uſed to dye withal. The beſt Pepper in the World is of the Growth of Sunda, known in England by Carwar Pepper, though five Days Journy diſtant from thence. This Raja vends his Pepper, as it is the beſt, at the beſt rates, finding a Trade up the Country, and therefore is it we have little of it in Europe; he contents himſelf to live at Sunda, from whence he and his Country receive denomination, being as little Abſolute as the reſt of the Princes of Viſiapour, being Tributary, or rather Feudatory, obliged as well by Allegiance as Purſe.

The beſt Pepper comes from Sunda.

The Raja of Saranpatan muſt not be ſlipped by in ſilence, becauſe his way of fighting differs from his Neighbours; he trains up his Soldiers to be expert at a certain Inſtrument to ſeize on the Noſes of his Enemies with that ſlight either in the Field or in their Camps, that a Budget-full of them have been preſented to their Lord for a Breakfaſt; a thing, becauſe it deforms them, ſo abaſhing, that few care to engage with him; and this he makes uſe of, becauſe it is againſt his Religion to kill any thing. He enjoys a vaſt Territory on the back of the Zamerhin.

The Noſe-cutting Raja of Saranpatan.

Beyond him lies Raja Madaree, poſſeſſing all from him as far as the Cape, bordering on them both.

Raja Madaree.

All theſe are the diſjointed Members of Viſiapour, neither truſting on another, nor uniting for the common Good of the Kingdom: Since Seva Gi has put all into a Ferment, they know not who to ſide with, being uncertain of his Intentions; though he tells them, his Compeers the Duccanees, he is their Champion, and that none of them beſides himſelf has the heart to ſtand up for their Country; and therefore if he chance now and then to rob them, it is but to reward himſelf and Soldiers for his and their pains in endeavouring to free them from a more unnatural Slavery.

This makes them begin to Cabal, not brooking the Perfidy of this Man on the one hand, or the Inſolence of Bullul Caun, being a Foreigner, on the other; nor to call in the Mogul to their Aſſiſtance; though ſtill it is not reſolved by a General Conſent to be aiding to each other.

The Irreſolution of the Duccanees,

In the mean while Seva taking advantage of their Irreſolution, ranges where he liſts, quite through Viſiapour, as far as Badnagur in Gulconda, with one Detachment led by his Son; with another he flies himſelf as far as the Walls of Surat, leaving the Main of his Army at Pundit, before Goa: His Son, after he had plundered and burnt Badnagur, having been obſerved in his Paſſage thither by Bullul Caun, did no harm in Viſiapour; but the Protector being to watch the Conſpiracies of the Duccanees, could not be long out, for fear of being intercepted in his Return, and was therefore preſſed to retreat to his Poſt; and Sambu Gi retiring, ſet upon Hubly, Rabay, and other Mart Towns, and ranſack'd them: And Seva Gi his Father being not wholly diſappointed at Surat (which he calls his Treaſury) by their ſhutting their Gates upon him pro formâ, but give him his uſual Piſcaſh; whither on his repeated Excurſions being forced to ask leave of the Raja of Ramnagur, to carry his Army (by reaſon of the Mogul's Forces in the Plain Country) through his Country, over the Hills that reach within Thirty Miles of Surat; and having obtained leave of the Raja of Ramnagur, made himſelf thoroughly acquainted with the Avenues, and in his laſt Return took it; giving only this Reaſon, That it was inconvenient for him to truſt him with the Door of his Exchequer. The Inhabitants of Ramnagur are the Salvages called Coolies.

Bullul Caun being at the Helm, thought fit, on theſe unaccountable Pranks, to ſend to him, to be informed how he durſt attempt the Robbery of theſe Places? O, quoth he to the Meſſenger, Go tell thy Maſter, I wonder how he durſt diſpoſſeſs any Great Man of Life or Place, without having adviſed firſt with me, (reflecting on his uſurping the Protectorſhip by the Death of Cowis Caun) ; I did this only to let him know, I, not he, am a Member of Viſiapour.

The Protector of Viſiapour breaks the Meaſures of the Confederates.

By which, Bullul Caun foreſeeing the approaching Storms, was too wary to ſtay the breaking of them over his Head, but fairly ſteps forth to prevent them: Wherefore ſurprizing Sergi Caun and Timi Naig, as they were moving to join with ſome of the forwardeſt of the Duccanees, the firſt fled, not without loſs, the other was environ'd by Bullul Caun's Army, and compelled to ſtand it out, till the Camels of War, who carry ſmall Petareroes, ſlew the greateſt part of them, and Timi Naig himſelf was trodden to Death under his Elephants Feet, whereupon an eaſy Victory enſued, the reſt yielding when their General was ſlain; who is not much lamented by the Nobles of Canora, whoſe Greatneſs he diminiſhed by cutting them off upon ſmall Suſpicions, and advancing in their ſteads inferior Perſons to great Employments; confining the Princeſs-Mother with her Son to a Penſion, and that but ordinary. Things now begin to return to the Royal Current, and they confeſs him a Chaſtiſement for their former Rebellions againſt their Natural Prince, vowing a perfect Allegiance to the Infant Prince, in whoſe Name ſince the Death of Timi Naig, all things are tranſacted.

Bullul Caun beats the Mogul's Army.

Theſe were to have been ſeconded by Badur Caun, the Mogul's General, who has ſince appeared twice before Viſiapour with a formidable Army, pretending to right the Duccanees, and to call Bullul Caun to an account, but has been as often repulſed by Bullul Caun and 12000 of his Patans, who the laſt time made them leave their Koſanna or Treaſure, ſome Elephants, 1000 Camels, ſeveral Pieces of Ordnance, and cut off the Baſſa of Buſſerah with his Son, whoſe Heads were put on long Poles on the Walls of the City, and ſlew of the common Soldiers Four or Five Thouſand; not without great damage on their own Party: So that he muſt be diſtreſſed for all this Rout given, unleſs the ſtomachful Duccanees come to an Accommodation (from which they are averſe as yet), if, as it is likely, the Mogul ſend freſh and more numerous Supplies.

So miſerable is that State where the other Members grow too powerful for the Head, as in this conſtituted Government of Duccan, where the King's Munificence to the Grandees has inſtated them in Abſolute Authority over their Provinces, that they are Potent enough to engage one another, and countermand the King's Commands, unleſs ſuitable to their Humours.

By the fundamental Eſtabliſhment of this Realm, every Lord in courſe was to come to Court once a Year, and all to pay their Acknowledgment by doing Homage to their Sovereign, where he could demand their Heads, they becoming obnoxious to his Diſpleaſure; but the preſent diſturbances have found matters of excuſe to releaſe them from theſe Injunctions, and furniſhed Seva Gi in this buſtle with encouragement to March up the Gaot again with 15000 Horſe and 30000 Foot, knowing Bullul Caun neither to be at leiſure from his Inteſtine nor Foreign Broils, to divert him from his wild Enterpriſes. Of the King and Kingdom of Viſiapour; their Policy and Government; Hobſie-Cofferies Preferred: The preſent Protector, and other Members of Duccan: The Life, Exploits, and Expeditions of Seva Gi: The Wealth, Strength, and Powers of each, with reſpect to the Great Mogul as Supreme.

OF which Incendiary of India, as well as of theſe Parts, to give you ſome knowledge, it will be neceſſary (theſe Affairs being ſo interwoven) to look back as far as the time of Ramras, about Two hundred and fifty Years ago, ſole Monarch of India intra Gangem, and the laſt Emperor that was a Gentile; he nouriſhed Three Slaves that were Chias Moors, and advanced them to the principal Employs both of Court and Empire, to wit, Catub Caun, Maſter of his Hunt; Niſham Maluke, his Chief Treaſurer; Adul Caun, Catwal, or High-Conſtable; from theſe Offices they roſe to be Commanders of the greateſt Provinces in the Realm, with as Abſolute Power and Authority as could be transferred on Subjects, being Kings, only wanting the Appellation: The firſt of Baynagur, now Gulconda; the ſecond of Dowlet Abud, and all the Country from Guzerat to Bengal, and great part of Duccan (into which his Succeſſors were crowded till they Annihilated); the Laſt, the other part of Duccan, with all the Continent on this ſide the Gates, till it conclude in the Cape of Comora.

Thus were they ſeated, and by the ſequel not minded to be diſmounted; wherefore they jointly Combined againſt their ſupine Maſter, whilſt he too credulouſly relied on their Fidelity, and outed him and many of his Heathen Nobles, only ſuch as were befriended by ſtrong Gurrs, or Faſtneſſes upon the Mountains, who are thoſe that retain the Name of Raja's to this day; and who are ſtill notwithſtanding ſo Numerous, that would they ſtand up unanimouſly for their ancient Freedom, the Mahometans could not ſtand in Competition with their Idolatrous Tribes; ſed quos Jupiter vult perdi, dementes facit; but whom God will deſtroy he makes them infatuated ted to their own Ruin; for they are ſo jealous one of another, that without that inbred Diſpoſition it were impoſſible to keep them under.

They make themſelves Kings, and are Curbed by the Mogul.

After this Conſpiracy every one betook himſelf to his Government, there being no more to poſſeſs themſelves of; the imprudent King having given all away, even to his Perſon, which they ſcrupled not to Violate, Extinguiſhing the very Lineage, or leaving them ſo undefenceable, that they are only ſaid to be a petty Rajaſhip in the Plain, and thereby eaſily prevented to aſpire to their Lawful Sovereignty; the Supremacy being eſtabliſhed in their own Hands, and ſhared to their mutual Contents, they took upon them without controul the Regal Dignity and Title of Pedeſhaws, and exerciſed their Functions very Amicably ſome Years; and ſo long they kept themſelves ſafe enough from the Moguls, who began to make Inroads into their Country, without any notable Succeſs, till they found means to make them break with Niſhamſhaw, who maintained the Frontiers againſt them; for all that, he was beſet afore and abandoned behind, he held them play a long while; though by degrees the Moguls from without, and the perverſe remiſsneſs of his own Sect at home, reduced him to that part of Duccan, the entire Conqueſt of which the preſent Auren Zeeb finiſhed (though unhandſomely) he having been Hoſpitably receiv'd when he came under Colour of a Fakier, and a Baniſhed Man from the Court at Jeneah; where I ſaw the Ruins of a ſumptuous Edifice Niſhamſhaw Erected for the preſent Emperor of the Moguls: The Reward which he gratified him with, was the Extirpation of the Royal Race of the Niſhamſhaws; whoſe Deſtruction the remaining Two may at leiſure repent, being thereby incapacitated to make Head againſt the Mogul, maugre all their Forces; when before, Niſhamſhaw alone could withſtand, and even Defeat his moſt puiſſant Armies; but ſince his downfal they have enough to do to Guard themſelves. The Rajah's (the moſt Powerful of whom ſubſcribed to his Juriſdiction) beginning to ſet up for themſelves; ſo that the Two Kings of Viſiapour and Gulconda are often left alone to endure the brunt, the Rajah's coming in as they liſt.

On the fall of Niſhamſhaw the Raja's Deſert.

For all that, what is left of Duccan under the King of Viſiapour, is ſtill a ſpacious Kingdom, reaching North to Jeneah, South to Porto Novo, bounded Eaſt with Gulconda, Weſt with the Ocean; though unſettled and ill Governed, whereby it is often diſtreſſed; but when it comes near to the upſhot, Gulconda puts in either as a Mediator, or an Aſſiſtant with Men, (for which he pays dear if it be publickly, for then the Mogul turns his Arms on him) or Mony he helps him to underhand; though he is mightily awed by the Mogul, ſuffering the Mogul's Ambaſſador to reſide at Court in quality of a Superviſor; who Lords it without controul, cauſing his Coin to be ſtamped with his Maſter's Inſcription, his Subjects Mulcted and Seſſed by his Impoſitions; yet he is ſenſible ſhould he ſeize Duccan, Gulconda would loſe the ſtouteſt Bulwark on that ſide his Kingdom, which hath made him theſe Forty Years a firm Confederate to Viſiapour; ſometimes ſending Piſcaſhes of conſiderable Value to Seva Gi and the Bordering Princes and Raja's to diſturb the Mogul's Forces, other-whiles ſtopping

Chap. IV.

ſtopping the Mogul's Mouth with a Tribute, as alſo his Generals with large Preſents.

How it comes to paſs the Mogul has made no farther progreſs in his Conqueſt of Duccan.

Which are the Reaſons the Mogul hath made no farther Progreſs of late Years, ſatisfying himſelf to keep theſe Kingdoms in the nature of Vaſſals, though never abſolutely Conquered; fruſtrated chiefly by the means of the Soldiery and great Ombrahs, who live Lazily and in Pay, whereupon they term Duccan, The Bread of the Military Men: Or becauſe that he is never wholly at leiſure to proſecute theſe Wars himſelf, being always buſied in one place or another of more import, as lately againſt the Patans, and now againſt the Vsbeque Tartars; beſides a vaſt Army always upon the Marches of Perſia and Candahar; ſo that this huge Empire ſeldome has its Auxiliary Bands entire: However diſtracted as they are, this flying Battalion would eaſily ſuffice to diſpatch theſe Two Kingdoms one after another, there being ready on the Confines of Duccan never leſs than Forty thouſand Horſe, beſide Foot. Notwithſtanding all theſe formidable Numbers, while the Generals and Vocanovices conſult to deceive the Emperor, on whom he depends for a true ſtate of things, it can never be otherwiſe but that they muſt be miſrepreſented, when the Judgment he makes muſt be by a falſe Perſpective; whereby it is apparent on what Baſes theſe Kingdoms are ſupported.

The Government of Duccan.

Of the Government of Gulconda ſomething hath been ſpoken already, it remains therefore to give an account of Duccan; the ſubſtance of which is, that as the former was Modelled according to the Policy of Indoſtan, with this difference, that Eunuch's wedded to their Maſter's Concerns, were promoted from the dregs of Slavery to Empire, ſo here Cofferies at their firſt arrival as Slaviſh, are become as endeared to their Maſter; who, as they Merit, have the firſt places of Honour and Truſt impoſed upon them, with this Proviſo, ever to be faithfully obliged to their Lord; in which point their approved Faith has rarely failed, Intereſt teaching them to be true to him that raiſed them; they thereby being liable to the envy of thoſe they are purpoſely ſet as a Checkmate to; for by their exaltation, the ſwelling exorbitancy of other Princes is corrected, and they being only at the Will of their Maſter, are tied to their good Behaviour.

The Duccannees are Princes Born.

On the contrary, the Lords of Duccan are Born Princes, aſſume Honour from their Lands, have as perfect a Right to them as the King to the Kingdom, and deſcend from Father to Son by Inheritance (though the Commons are as meer Slaves as any where in the Eaſt beſides, excepting none); whereupon they grow Inſolent and Stubborn, and are not ſo eaſily Bridled, as where the Rule is Arbitrary, and are only reſtrained from Raiſing Men in the King's Name and for his Uſe; but theſe make Peace and War, Build Forts, and fall out one with another, and with their Sovereign too at their own Pleaſure; and hardly Unite, though a common neceſſity require; nay many times ſide with the Enemy.

However, when the King gets them in the Toil, they are treated as they deſerve; for he makes bold with their Heads, takes their Eſtates wholly into his Cuſtody and for his own Uſe, beſtowing them on his Creatures, when Forfeited, making them underſtand, that that they are obliged by Fealty to follow his Command, as their ſhewing themſelves at Viſiapour in courſe to pay their Reſpects demonſtrates; which yet of late they have done but remiſly, making a Salam at Four or Five Courſe diſtance, and then accompanied in an Hoſtile manner, as if coming to Beſiege the City, more than to perform their Duty: For which they plead the King's Minority, being either Afraid, or too Proud to commit their Perſons, or give Homage to the Protector, being an Alien, and a Patan, who hath but lately wreſted the Management of Affairs from the hands of Cowis Caun, to whom was intruſted the Safeguard of the King and Kingdom, by the Laſt Will and Teſtament of the Deceaſed King, and (with much ado) at length confirmed by and with the general Conſent of the Duccannees; he being from an Hobſy Caphir made a free Denizen, and Naturalized by the precedent King (who only in this Nation arrive to great Preferments, being the Frizled Woolly-pated Blacks) under the known ſtile of Syddies).

Cowis Caun the Protector Murthered at a Treat by Bullul Caun.

He, although an excellent Man of War, ſubmitted himſelf too often to be overcome with Wine (than which among Muſſelmen nothing renders them more odious) and upon that ſcore Pretences were found to lay the blame of the Government, and the Loſs of the Country, over-run by Seva Gi, upon his Head, together with other Diſorders. Though the Patan knew well his Commiſſion was to put a ſtop to thoſe growing Miſchiefs, and had he not been emulous of the other's Charge, was Man enough to have deterred Seva Gi from his Attempts. But Ambition knows no mean, and therefore lets all to the hazard, rather than admit the Commands of a Superior; wherefore he ſtands Idle, and ſtudies only how to diſplace the other, which was effected in a ſmall time after his being called back. For he inviting Cowis Caun to a Treat, who ſuſpecting leaſt, when nothing was pretended but Friendſhip, came with a ſlender Retinue, and taking off his Cups freely, fell dead drunk into the mercileſs Snare of his Enemy, who ſurprizing his Followers with 12000 brave Patans, made way into the Royal Caſtle, where the young King became a Prey, the Caun firſt a Priſoner, and then a Sacrifice to the Luſt of the Uſurper.

The Succeſſion of the Kings of Viſiapour.

And this is the ſum of the preſent Tumults of this Kingdom, which at this juncture of time, in the face of a mighty Hoſt of the Moguls, and the frequent Incurſions of Seva Gi from the Mountains on the other ſide, beſide the Civil Mutinies and Diſſentions within, to prevent ill conſequences, calls for a skilful Pilot; for it never, ſince the primary defection of Adul Caun, was in ſuch danger, from whom to this preſent King, is tranſmitted the Stile of

Chap. IV.

Long controverted whether he ſhould reign after his Father Alah Adul Shaw, it being bruited that Alah Adul Shaw was begotten by an Elephant-keeper, when the King's choiceſt Elephants were forced to be ſtabled near the Womens Quarters, to hide them from the Mogul's Ambaſſador (whom they dare not refuſe any thing he begs in his Great Maſter's Name), where one of them found the Conveniency to deſcend from the Trunk of his Elephant into the Queen's Apartment, and get her a Son when the good Old King was paſt his Labour, and withal ſhe fixed him upon the Throne: Which ſome of the Iſſue of Sultan Mahmud enquiring into, made their Claim, and upon the expiring of Alah ſtirred up Factions, with hot Altercations on either ſide; but were finally quelled by Cowis Caun, who continued Sultan Socodre Caudre Adul Shaw, till he was taken Priſoner and ſlain by Bullul Caun the Patan, who may do now as he thinks fit, the Young King being ſcarce Ten Years old. It was thought he intended to have delivered both King and Kingdom to the Mogul; but 'tis believed as long as he can keep both for his own Ends, he will not.

Bullul Caun keeps the King and Kingdom in Poſſeſſion.

He yet Salams to the King, and carries it fairly, endeavouring to win the Duccanees to a good Opinion of him, which they ſeem little to regard, unleſs he would reſtore the Fort, City, and Royal Perſon of the King, and diveſt himſelf of his Power; all which he holds yet Hero-like, maugre all the Practices of his Adverſaries; who now, as he hath attained the firſt Place in the State, we therefore muſt reckon him the Chief Grandee or Prince of Duccan, immediately next the King.

The Members of Viſiapour.

Seva Gi is reckoned alſo as a diſeaſed Limb of Duccan, impoſtumated and ſwoln too big for the Body; in ſome reſpects benefiting, in others diſcommoding it; beneficial, by oppoſing the Mogul's Entry into the Kingdom; but prejudicial in being his own Paymaſter, rewarding himſelf moſt unconſcionably; all Conchon being little enough for him, extending in Length along the Sea-Coaſts, 250 Leagues, that is, from Balſore Hills to the River Gongole; where neither is he limited in his extravagant Deſires, expecting only opportunity to gain further. Inland he hath not much, the Gaot ſeeming to be a Natural Line of Circumvallation to the Up-Country, where it is Campaign, though below Hilly; ſo that you aſcend to it by Mountains piled on one another, over which Seva Gi hath total Dominion, the Duccanees not ſtriving to retake any thing, for all he hath blocked up their Ports, which may prejudice them for the future; an irreparable Damage, (Arab Steeds being the Life of their Cavalry); they having only Porto Novo beyond Tutticaree left them free.

Nor has he done this Injury to them alone, but the Mogul hath the ſame meaſure up as far as Surat; ſo that he enjoys them wholly, excepting what the Portugals have, and the Engliſh at Bombaim; which are of no Import in reſpect of Trade, while the Caphalaes are hindred to paſs thoſe Ways; of which did he know or conſider the Advantage, he might amaſs greater Treaſures than he purchaſes by pillaging and pilfering, and might come off with the Glorious Name of a Conqueror; whereas otherwiſe, following his barbarous Courſes of Fire and Sword, he merits no more than to be branded as a Thief: Witneſs thoſe intolerable Cruelties, Devaſtations, and Deſerts made by him every where in his Range up and down in the Mogul's Territories, as well as in the Duccanean. 'Tis

'Tis undeniable he hath taken and maintains againſt the Moguls Sixty odd ſtrong Hills: But the Cauſe is, the Moguls are unacquainted with, and their Bodies unfit for ſuch barren and uneaſy Places; ſo that they rather chuſe to deſert than defend them: Whereby it is ſufficiently evident Seva Gi is unable in the Plain to do any thing but Rob, Spoil, and return with all the ſpeed imaginable: And on that account it is Aurenzeeb calls him his Mountain-Rat, with which the greateſt Syſtems of Monarchy in the World, though continued by an uninterrupted Deſcent of Imperial Anceſtry, have ever been infeſted, finding it more hard to fight with Mountains than Men. Chap IV.

The Mountaineers in all Conqueſts the laſt that ſtand out.

Thus it falls out here, by the like Chance as in moſt Conqueſts, that though the major Part have ſubmitted to their Victorious Arms, yet ſome out of Confidence in their Strength, Reputation, or Fortitude, have been ſo daring as to oppoſe by open Violence or ſecret Stratagem, the acquired Trophies of the Triumphing Party: As the Apennegeni did the Romans, and the Wild People about Taurus and Caucaſus the Grecians; the Welſh, the Engliſh; the Highlanders, the Switz; and as many as have been encouraged thereto by the inacceſſibleneſs of their Fortreſſes, or the Diſcontent of ſome Great Ones to head them: From whence, though inconſiderable in themſelves, it is, that they preſume to boaſt of their never being totally ſubdued.

Seva Gi raiſes himſelf on the Ruins of other Lords.

Such are the Rajahs of the Mountains, the moſt eminent among whom is Seva Gi, derived from an Ancient Line of Rajahs, of the Caſt of the Bounceloes, a Warlike and Active Offspring: His Grandfather was a Man in Eſteem under Niſham Shaw, whoſe Name was Vangu Gi Rajah; his Father Shaw Gi Rajah was made Commander by the ſame King of Juneah Gur, where, upon that Rock his firſt Wife brought forth the Obdurate Seva Gi, his Eldeſt Son, and Samba Gi, his Second; by another Wife he had a Third Son, called Ekou Gi.

Upon the Downfall of Niſham Shaw, the Father and his other Sons liſted themſelves as Penſioners to the King of Viſiapour, where the Father was, and the Sons now are advanced to conſiderable Employs. Seva Gi could not be won upon, but ſought to raiſe himſelf by the Ruins of others, ſetting the leſſer Lords at variance with their Prince, in whoſe Quarrels he always made ſure of the upper Ground; wherefore his Father at his Death diſinherited him, and inſtated his youngeſt Son Ekou Gi in the Rajahſhip of Benglure; a Starveling Rajahſhip, ſince it hath been haraſs'd by the Troubles of Duccan, where he ſits down quietly, whilſt this Turbulent Young Man works himſelf into Greatneſs.

The King of Viſiapour jealous of Seva Gi.

At which the King of Viſiapour beginning to caſt an Eye, finding him aſpiring, and intending to blaſt him in the Bud, ſent a Potent Army againſt him, conducted by Abdul Caun, an Experienc'd Soldier, yet outwitted by Seva Gi: For he underſtanding of his having taken the Field, while the Main Body was yet at diſtance enough, he ſent to him flattering and ſeducing Meſſages, intimating withal, if he would but ſtop his March, at an appointed Choultry out of ſight of each Rendezvouz, he would meet him, and kiſs his Feet; begging that he would act the obliging Office of a Peacemaker between him and the King.

Letter IV.

Seva's Treachery in slaying Abdul Caun.

Abdul Caun thinking no leſs than that he meant ſincerely, conſented, though adviſed to the contrary by his Friends, (whether out of Superſtition, as the dying of an Elephant, and other bad preſaging Omens, or they doubting the Integrity of Seva Gi, I know not), but they could not prevail: At the Day prefixed therefore he takes with him his Son and a ſelected Number, which he credited would not be out-equalled by Seva Gi, upon his former Proteſtations and Hopes of Reconcilement; but the Perfidious Man had placed an Ambuſcado, and with a ſmaller Shew in appearance than Abdul brought, waits his coming; who as ſoon as he ſpied him afar off, went forth to meet him, and proſtrates himſelf before him with feigned Tears, craving Pardon for his Offence, and would not riſe till he had aſſured him of his being his Advocate to procure it: Going to enter the Choultry together, he cries out, like a fearful Man, That his Lord (ſo he ſtiled the General) might execute his Pleaſure on him, and eaſe him of his Life; which Abdul Caun ſurmiſing was becauſe he was armed, and the other came ſeemingly unarmed, delivered his Sword and Ponyard to his Page, and bad him enter with Courage; where after ſome Parley he ſlips a Stiletto from under his Coat-ſleeve, and then eying his Blow, ſtruck it at his Heart, whereat the Signal was given, and his Men came forth, in which Scuffle Abdul's Son gave Seva Gi a Wound, but was forced to change Habit with a Fraſs immediately, and venturing through untrodden Paths hardly eſcaped to the Camp, who thereupon were ſo diſcomfited, that they quickly diſperſed themſelves, and left the Field open to Seva Gi.

Whereupon follows the Diſcomfiture of the Army, and taking Panala.

Who, grown proud with this good Fortune, reſolves not to return till he had ſacked Panala, one of their Wealthieſt and Strongeſt Cities; but finding it a Work not over-facile, they within, though thinly Mann'd, being obſtinate, he disbands therefore, under pretext of Ill Uſage, Seven or Eight Hundred of his Men, who preſently took their way to the City, and offer their Service, complaining of Seva Gi as an Inhuman Butcherly Fellow, ſome Marks of which they produced on thoſe ſuborned for that purpoſe: The preſent Occaſions urging, and being willing to blind themſelves with the Improbability of its being a Cheat, they within admitted them the City, but ſo as for ſome time they could not put their Plot in execution, the Citizens watching at Night the Gates with their own Men, and diſpoſing them on the Walls and Out-poſts: But the Inhabitants taken up with their Delight more than Security, had peſter'd the Ditches with Gardens and Trees, whereby on a Set Night, they on the Walls having ſo contrived it, received their Friends of the Camp under Covert of the Trees, and overpowering the Citizens, opened the Gates, whereupon the Enemy entred, and by this Treachery the City was gained for Seva Gi; which he makes his Retreat, ordering thoſe Trees to be cut down that were ſo fatal to the former Poſſeſſors.

Another Royal Army broke by Perfidy.

And now he forages the Country, and lays all waſte in his Round, till young Abdul was reinforced to revenge his Father's Death, and to join with another General Ruſtam Gemma, with whom Seva Gi had been tampering: Such is the Covetous Nature of theſe people, that Money ſhall corrupt the moſt Loyal among them: Which made him when they were ready to give Battel, withdraw his Cavalry,

Cavalry, leaving young Abdul and his Men to try it out with Seva Gi; whoſe Force, though an Handful, fell bravely on, and ſo gauled Seva Gi, that he wiſh'd him well off; Abdul crying out wherever he went, Thou Coward Seva, here am I; whereof though Seva had notice, he avoided him, ſaying, He was a Raſh Youth, let ſomebody elſe kill him: He made through his Army two or three times in Perſon, till being tired he was fain to leave off, and ſpeed to Viſiapour, to complain of Ruſtam's Falſhood: Upon this Ruſtam's Horſe disbanded, ſome choice Friends only going over with him to Seva Gi, adviſing him to follow his Blow, and ſet upon Viſiapour its ſelf, which he did; and had not Syddy Jore come to its Relief with a vaſt Recruit, he had not only attacked, but carried it.

Seva has Rajapore ſurrendred by a falſe Pharmond.

Then it was time for Seva to retire to Panala, where being long detained by Syddy Jore's lying before it, at length (as 'twas thought) through the Connivance of the ſaid Syddy, he ſtole out by Night; and by a falſe Pharmond takes the Syddy's Town of Rajapour, pretending the Syddy was to ſurrender it in exchange for Panala.

Syddy Jore tricked out of his Life by Bullul Caun.

After which the Syddy reſorts to Viſiapour to his Maſter, who bore his Diſguſt for letting the Traytor go, under a ſerene Countenance, and diſmiſs'd him with Thanks: But having made Bullul Caun Commander in Chief, he diſpatches him after the Syddy, who being wary and doubtful of the King's Intentions, had provided to ſtand to it, putting Bullul Caun to Flight: Whereupon begins another Civil Diſcord; the King in Perſon reſolves to bid at his Head, which otherwiſe by the clandeſtine Practices of Bullul Caun was hoped to be atchieved, as it proved, he doing that by Fraud he could not do by Force: For the Night after both Armies were in view, the Omrahs on the Syddy's ſide forſook him, and he was ſlain, and his Head brought to the King, without any more Strokes fought; ſuch deadly Venom bears Secret Malice and Helliſh Inſinuation.

This ſtill makes for Seva Gi, for he was not able to cope with him ſingly; which Impediment thus lopped off to his hand, he ſeizes at leiſure ſmaller Places, as Dan de Rajapour, whoſe Prince ſueth for Protection to the Mogul, being beaten out of all but his Strong Caſtle at Dan de Rajapour, environ'd about by the Sea, but within Shot of the Main, which Seva with a great Effort has lain before theſe fifteen Years: The Mogul ſuccouring it by Sea, it derides the Batteries of his Artilleries; and theſe are the Fleets we are ſo often troubled with at Bombaim.

The King of Viſiapour dies.

In this Juncture of Affairs the King dies, and leaves a Babe to diſpute for the Throne; when Seva Gi enlarges himſelf, flies out as far as Surat, and comes home with Rich Booty; which hapned preſently after the Emperor of the Moguls was warm in his Seat (by the Overthrow of his Brethren, and the Death of his Father Shaw Juan, by his Intereſt on Raja Jeſſeign); who deſirous to try if by Kindneſs he could reclaim this famous Rebel, allures him to Court (Faith being plighted for his Safety), where ſhortly after, the Outcries of the Women in whoſe Kindred's Blood his hands were imbrued, made him ſhift for himſelf in an Hamper on a Porter's Back, which paſſed the Guards among many other, which were forced to be ſent as Piſcaſhes to his Friends, as the manner is when under Confinement: With this Letter IV. Slight he got away (not without the Mogul's Privity), and 'tis believed will hardly venture to Agra again, unleſs better guarded.

Slight

For this he made a ſecond Rape on Surat, and now lately has taken the Rajahſhip of Rhamnagur, though he had firſt ſpread himſelf more South, even to the Walls of Goa, from whence he ſlided to the Borders of the Canatick and Sunda Rajah's Country: His Chief Reſidence is at Rairee, where he bids Defiance to the Emperor, Gulconda, Duccan, Portugueze, and all the World; magnifying himſelf in his Strong-Holds; inſtalled Mau Rajah Two Years ſince, when I ſent you a Journal of an Engliſh Gentleman's, ſent Ambaſſador to him at that time: His Mother was then alive, to whom he ſhewed Filial Obedience: He is married to Four Wives, to whom he keeps religiouſly, being a ſtrict Obſerver of his Heathen Rites.

Seva's Soldiers hardy.

He ſways by Brachmins; his Soldiers are Hardy Brave Fellows, fit for the Mountains; 30000 Horſe is the moſt he can make, Foot innumerable.

Merchants have little Countenance from him: Of the Common People he ſays, Money is inconvenient for them; give them Victuals and an Arſe-Clout, it is enough. They tell their Tale in Moratty; by Profeſſion they are Gentues; ſome few Moors are among them; Whores and Dancing Wenches he allows none in his Army: This Barbarian Commander being like the Scythian Ateas, who hearing one ſweetly modulating on an Iſmean Pipe, ſwore he had rather hear the neighing of an Horſe, or the Clangor of Horns or Trumpets. At Sea he is no ſtronger than his Neighbours; once he went Admiral of his Fleet of Grobs and Boats, againſt Dan de Rajapore, but Storms ariſing diſhearten'd him for a ſecond Adventure.

The Kingdom of Viſiapour.

The King not Abſolute.

Although it be Hereditary, and not Elective, yet it comes neareſt it at preſent, ſince the remaining part of the Duccan Kingdom is dwindled into it, and ſome more Southern have withdrawn, and the reſt at Pleaſure only own themſelves Members thereof; it muſt borrow the Compoſition of theſe ſeveral diſagreeing ones to make it bear the Port of a Kingdom.

For when entire, it was of large Extent, taking in the Zamerhin and Malabars; and while the Three Chias Moors repreſented the Ancient Geron; where for the common Safety, if any Part were afflicted, every Member ran to the Succour of the other, as if it were to their peculiar Tranquility; their Counſels one, their Minds one, their Deſignments one; their Dominions flouriſhed, and every one owned Subjection, and held their Provinces as Vaſſals to the ſame Monarch: When that Band was looſed, they were broken with more eaſe; Duccan is loſt already, Viſiapour ſeems declining, Seva Gi's Example putting others on to un-yoak themſelves; ſo that as yet no Tye is ſtrong enough to reduce them to their former Temper.

The Duccanees of a reſtleſs Temper.

Whereupon it is clear the Duccanees are a Warlike and Troubleſome Nation, apt to diſlike Government, Proud and Brave, having an Army more ſplendid than the Mogul's; adorning their Elephants, Horſes, Horſes and Lances with Silver Bells and Feathers, Gallant and Rich in Apparel and Sumbrero's: The People Swarthy or Olive; of all Religions. The Country Fruitful, Rich, and Campaign, unleſs it be near the Sea-Coaſt, where the Mountains are bleſt with Woods and Cattel, the Valleys with a bountiful Increaſe of Rice and Coco-Nuts, with ſtore of Rivers both Freſh and Salt; though theſe Hilly People are of a rougher Temper, more Hardy, and leſs addicted to the ſoft Vanities of Muſick, Cloathing, Pomp, or Statelineſs, being all Naked Starved Raſcals; Seva Gi's Men thereby being fitter for any Martial Exploit, having been accuſtomed to Fare Hard, Journy Faſt, and take little Pleaſure. But the other will miſs of a Booty rather than a Dinner; muſt mount in ſtate and have their Arms carried before them, and their Women not far behind them, with the Maſters of Mirth and Jollity; will rather expect than purſue a Foe; but then they ſtand it out better; for Seva Gi's Men care not much for a pitched Field, though they are good at Surprizing and Ranſacking; yet agree in this, that they are both of ſtirring Spirits. Chap. V. The Difference between the Hilly People and the Plain Country.

The Language of Viſiapour is peculiar. Cities of Note in this Kingdom, bear commonly the Names of their Grandees: Mart-Towns are Hubly, Rabag, and Huttany. Cities, Marts, and Ports.

The King's Sea-ports Gullean, Bimly, Blocked up by the Portugals; Rajapour, Dabul, Vingula, Carwar, which is Seva Gi's; the reſt are Poſſeſſed by the Malabar Raja's round to Porto Novo, which only is properly the King's; whoſe Revenues are very large, though not computed by common Rumour as the others are.

CHAP. V.

Shews the Pleaſure and the Product of the Woods: The People bewitched to Idolatry; the Sottiſhneſs of the Atheiſt. I am ſent for to Bombaim; after ſome endeavours to go thither, and ſome time ſpent at Goa, am forced to Winter at Carwar, and then I return to Surat.

THE Exerciſes here are common with India, only Cock-Fighting; for which Sport they have a Breed of Cocks as big as Turkies; which they Arm with Razors tied flat under their Claws, and faulched Two Inches inſtead of Gavelocks, with which they ſlaſh one another Mortally; ſo that the Diſpute endures not long, for moſt an end the firſt or ſecond Blow decides it.

For our own Diverſion here we had none beſides Shooting, in which we ſpent ſometimes a whole Week in the Woods and Rivers ſides; for if we expected Fleſh, or Fowl, we muſt take Pains for it; no Beef being to be Bought here, though up the Country from the Moors we could; ſo that our uſual Diet was (beſides plenty of Fiſh) Water-Fowl, Peacocks, Green Pidgeons, ſpotted Deer, Sa- Diverſions.

A Tigre Killed and Diſſected.

bre, Wild Hogs, and ſometimes Wild Cows. Going in queſt whereof, one of our Soldiers, a Youth, Killed a Tigre-Royal; it was brought home by Thirty or Forty Combies, the Body tied to a long Bamboo, the Tail extended; ſo they brought it to the Houſe, where we ſaw 'twas Wounded in Three Places, one through the Head with Two Bullets, another through the Body ſlanting up to the Shoulders, a Third in the Leg; it was a Tigre of the Biggeſt and Nobleſt Kind, Five Feet in Length beſide the Tail, Three and an half in Height, it was of a light Yellow, ſtreaked with Black, like a Tabby Cat, the Ears ſhort, with a few Briſtles about the Lips; the Viſage Fierce and Majeſtick, the Teeth gnaſhing, Two of which ſhe brake againſt the Stones for anguiſh, the Shoulders and Fore-legs thick and well ſet, the Paw as Large as the biggeſt Fiſt ſtretched out, the Claws thick and ſtrong.

The Boy Shot it in the Night from a Chouſe, or Eſtarzo, as it came to Drink, ſuppoſing it to have been a Deer; the firſt Shot was that under the Shoulder, which made her Spring Three times an incredible Height, at the laſt of which ſhe fell into the Chouſe from whence ſhe ſaw the Flaſh, where with the Engliſh Boy were a Comby, and a Comby Boy of Eight Year old, aſleep a little on one ſide; ſhe pawed the Straw with her Feet, while all but the Child aſleep fled; but being wrung by her Pain, ſhe ſoon left the place with an horrible Noiſe that made the Woods tremble, all which awaked not the Lad, nor had it any Harm.

In this interval, the Engliſh Youth Charged again with a couple of Slugs, and tracing the Blood, as ſhe was making at him, diſcharged through the Brain-pan, at which ſhe was quiet; but to make ſure, he made another ſhot at her, which he believed was that in the Leg: All this time the Moon was Obſcured and Cloudy; the Comby that had left him and his Son, at length came with a many more, calling Fringi, the Term they have for Europe-Men and Franks; the Boy was walking about, fearing to venture within reach, till at laſt laying aſide his well-adviſed Suſpicion, he approaching, found the Terror of the Wood Slain.

Two Bones bound in the Shoulders immerſed in the Fleſh.

Diſrobed of its Royal Hide, Two Bones of the Bigneſs and Figure of a Levator, preſented themſelves to our view, that had no Connexion with the other Bones, but wholly immerſed in the Fleſh per ſyſarcaſin, in the ends of each Pectoral, and the Three circumducing Muſcles, towards the joining of the Shoulder-blades, and the upper Bones of the Fore-feet, commonly called Shoulder-bones; of theſe there goes a Story handed by Tradition, as that Licking the Right Shoulder it appeaſes Hunger, the Left it whets it where theſe Bones lie; but probable enough it is, that Nature added theſe for its greater Strength; The Entrails were little variable, but the Heart was mighty, and the Liver (they ſay) had as many Lobes as that was Years old, which were Six and an half, like to a Foxes.

The Cuſtom of the Ombrahs on any grat Action.

The Chief, to encourage the Lad, told him, That though he were a Boy, he had done a Manly Action, and therefore according to the Cuſtom of the Country, in preſence of all his Admirers, he plucked off his own Coat, which was Venetian Cloath of Silk and Silver, and gave it him. The Great Ombrahs always do the like upon any hazardous Atchievments,

Chap. V.

Atchievments, and if Wounded, throw them their Saſhes and Pamerins to Bind them up, and Cover them, though never ſo Rich: Having likewiſe another Cuſtom among them, to Cloath the Gun with Scarlet that has made any notable Breach, Slain any great Soldier, or done any extraordinary Feat.

Monkies the common Repaſt of the Tigre.

It is memorable what is atteſted, by theſe Woodmen, of the Tigre, that when he intends to Prey on the Monkies (with which theſe Woods abound) he uſes this Artifice or Stratagem; the Monkies at his firſt approach give warning by their confuſed Chattering, and immediately betake themſelves to the higheſt and ſmalleſt Twigs of the Trees; when the Tigre ſeeing them out of his reach, and ſenſible of their fright, lies Couchant under the Tree and then falls a Roaring, at which they trembling let go their hold, and tumbling down he at leiſure picks them up to ſatisfy his Hunger: They are his accuſtomed Repaſt, ſeldom making Man his Meal, and they are judged (as St. Paul's Barbarians did him) guilty of ſome horrid Crime that ſuch Vengeance overtakes; the Woods and Mountains yielding them variety of other Food. The Tigre is dull Scented, and not long Nimble, Three Leaps Tiring him, otherwiſe it's probable he would make more havock than he does. The She brings forth but once in Twelve Years, and then but a ſingle Cub; they are Ingendring Three Months, in which time their Fury as well as Luſt rages upon one another; thus has Providence ſuppreſſed the Growth of this maſterleſs Creature: Beſides, if the Proverb be true, the Bitch brings forth but once in her life, or very rarely more; Iteratus haud partus leænæ contigit, notwithſtanding Ælian ſays otherwiſe in his 4 lib. de Hiſtoriâ Animalium.

The moſt frequent in theſe Woods are the leſſer ſort of Tigres ſpotted like a Leopard; theſe are Cruel and Ravenous, but more Fearful than the others are; that Monkies are their Food, the very Ordure declares ſcattered up and down, where is viſible the ſhagged Coats or Hair of theſe Creatures.

Apes Anatomized.

Many of theſe Apes fell by our hands, either for being noiſy and impertinent ſpoiling our Game, or provoking us by their conſtant purſuing us, being of the largeſt ſize, upon which account many came under my Knife; opening them I found and obſerved their ſeminary Veſſels turgid, their Virge White and Nervous. To Kill one of theſe the Natives hold Piacular, calling them Half Men, ſaying, once they were Men, but for their Lazineſs had Tails given them and Hair to cover them: Towards Zeilon they are Deified; at the Straits of Baligaot they pay them Tribute.

Bamboos.

Bamboos make the groſs of the Woods, which are High, Tapering, Thorny Trees, incumbred from the Roots with abundance of ſhrubby ones, the Bark Green and jointed with the Wood, the Branches are Tapering and inclining, ſending from every Joint ſprouts of the ſame form, leafed like long Five-fingered Graſs, the Body is thick and ſtrait; their uſe is for Staffs, Poles, or Rafters for Houſes, and Fences; being ſlit they are hollow and ſerve for Laths.

Thoſe they carry their Palenkeens on, require an exact attendance, Shaping them while Young and Tender, and taking care to keep them growing in that Poſition; Cut and Pickled they make good Achar: Bamboos are ſo general, that by way of Excellency they call all Sticks and Canes, Bamboos; the Woods are over-grown with them; for which reaſon often impaſſable.

Letter IV.

Caſſia Fiſtula. I travelled to the Tops of the Hills for the Caſſia Fiſtula Tree, whoſe Trunk is but ſlender, but Tree tall, leafed moſt like an Aſh, with ſmall Veins, and the Caſſia hanging down in long Green Canes or Cods, in manner of its Keys between the tender Nodes, by the Natives called Singa. Et Lobel Siliqua, aut Caſſia purgatrix Arabum Carobis ſimilis.

Caſſia Lignum. In the Groves about Carwar grows Caſſia Lignum, Xylo-Caſſia, or Baſtard Cinamon; the Trees are large as a Pear-Tree, a Leaf of the like bigneſs, but ribbed like our Plantain, the main Bark and Body like other Trees, of no different Smell or Taſte till dried, when it bites, and ſmells Spicy; the Leaf bruiſed and chewed ſmells like ſtrong Cinamon, and upon the Tongue is as hot as a Clove; the Bark of the ſmall Branches alſo when Green alters nothing in Taſte from Cinamon, but dried is more ſlimy, and is very good Caſſia Lignum: It bears little long Whitiſh Flowers, of no Smell nor Taſte, but the Leafs of the Branch that bear them have a more Aromatick Taſte.

The Thamarind Tree. The Thamarind Tree hath a ſmall Leaf like a Vetch, bears the Fruit in a Cod like a French Bean, wherein is the Pulp, incloſing the Stones and Fibres; it is a great ſpreading Tree, the Body thick, the Bark rough and browniſh, bears its Fruit in March; the Indians feed on it, and grow Fat with it; they have not the Art to preſerve it with Sugar, but Salt it up: This is Siliqua Arabica too, but not Nigra, as the Caſſia Fiſtula is.

The Indian Oak. Teke by the Portugueze, Sogwan by the Moors, is the firmeſt Wood they have for Building, and on the account it reſiſts Worms and Putrefaction, the beſt for that purpoſe in the World; in Height the Lofty Pine exceeds it not, nor the Sturdy Oak in Bulk and Subſtance; the knotty Branches which it bears aloft, ſend forth Green Boughs more pliant, in Form Quadrangular, fed within by a Spongy Marrow or Pith, on which at the Joints hang broad, thin, and porous Leafs, ſending from the main Rib ſome Fibres, winding and ſpreading like a Fan. This Prince of the Indian Foreſt was not ſo attractive, though mightily glorious, but that at the ſame time I was forced to take notice of the creeping Cow-Itch, raiſing its ſelf upon the Shrubs and Under-woods, there ſpending in laſcivious Twines its Verdure, leaving nothing but withered Stalks to be the Props of its brindled Offspring, which is a ſmall Cod covered with a light and tickling Down; within, it includes in four Cavities, four ſpecked Beans; the fallen Leafs make ſome appearance of a Nobler Stock, having a Countenance like thoſe of Lawrel; the Root is difficult to find, being mixed among other Trees, like our White Briony.

Nux Vomica. Here grows Nux Vomica on a Tree of indifferent bigneſs, in a round Shell as big as an Orange, filled with White Pulp, where the Nuts are lodged.

Near the Sea grow Squills, or Sea-Onions, as alſo a Species of Sarſaparilla, with which they do great Feats with the Juice of the Leafs in Venereal Caſes.

In

Chap. V.

In their Fields they plant, beſides Rice, Nuchery, a ſmall Seed they make Bread of, as alſo Cuſhcuſh, which is Millet, Hemp, and Flax: In the Incloſures Turmerick, which riſes with a broad Leaf like our Water Plantain, bearing a broad flaggy Leaf of a Span long, obliquely ribbed till it end in a Spear-Point at top; it proceeds immediately from the Root by a winding Stalk, which the main Leafs embrace, the other Leafs creeping through it till it riſes Six Foot.

Ginger comes up like our Gentian; they pickle it well, but cannot preſerve it with Sugar.

Potatoes are their uſual Banquet.

And to give the Soil its due Praiſe, it obeys in all things the firſt Commandment, Increaſe and Multiply.

A Feaſt of Priapus.

For theſe Bleſſings, as if Men were to loſe their Reaſons, and ſink below Brutes by a baſe Superſtition, they are ready to acknowledge a Stock for a Deity, rather than to go without, infatuated by the Deluſions of the Devil, being captivated at his Will; for which cauſe they not only make Oblations to him, but give up their Souls and Bodies to his Devotion: As might about this time have been beheld at an Idol Worſhip of Priapus, (where the Women proſtitute themſelves to him, and receive the Pleaſure of Copulation, all that while being as it were poſſeſſed) at Semiſſar, on the other ſide of the Water from our Houſe, where he lay with Two and twenty, who reckon it a great Honour, and the Husband thinks himſelf happy in his Cornucopia.

There are a ſort of Jougies, Prieſts fit for ſuch a God, among the Linguits of this Country, who practiſe this daily; the Husbands entertain them courteouſly, waſh their Feet, and the whole Family is at his Beck, as long as he ſtays to do the Wife a Kindneſs.

Others flaſh themſelves with ſharp Knives, and ſuffer themſelves to be hooked by the Muſcles of the Back, and hang ſo ſome Hours upon a Vow.

Under the Banyan Tree, an Altar with a Dildo in the middle being erected, they offer Rice and Cocoe-Nuts to the Devil, and joining ſome ſmall Ladders together made of Oſiers, do the like; when the Gomcar or Bayliff of the Town takes a falched Knife for Sacrifice in one Hand, and a Dunghil-Cock in the other, and cutting off its Head, fixes it at top of the Ladder, and ſprinkling the Blood they all dance, and beat Braſs Pots with a great Shout, ſaying, The Devil muſt be pacified with Blood, God with Prayers.

The Dregs of the People uſe Charms, or think they do ſo.

Some of theſe ſell themſelves to Wickedneſs, and theſe muſt be endued with the Spirit of Faſcination, always nouriſhing a Familiar in their Families, which they keep moſtly in the forms of Snakes or Serpents, appearing to them upon their Command; and undergo fiery Afflictions to have the moſt hurtful Devil; and as they wreak their Malice more powerfully, eſteem themſelves more in favour with their Grand Maſter: Theſe are the Dregs of the People, who are full of Envy and Ill Deſigns, who glory in their Shame of Incantations and Charms: Such as theſe are thoſe that out of Fear pray to the Devil and Evil Spirits, ſaying, God will do them no harm.

The better ſort acknowledge a God, and live in the Rules of their Tribes, abſtaining from Fleſh, and all things of a Senſitive Being:

Letter IV.

Sicuti Pythagorici, qui herbis & bellariis tantum vivebant: And theſe Patronize theſe more Innocent Rites, ſuch as the Swains asking Advice of their Deities about Increaſe; and to that end offer Rice, Oyl, and Cocoe-Nuts in a thick Grove, where they piled an huge Heap of long Jars like Mortivans, about Figures reſembling Serpents, before which they preſent their unbloody Sacrifice by the Prieſt, the People circling the whole Grove in a Ring, beating on Braſs Inſtruments, and ſhouting.

Their Sacrifice for the Fields.

In their Hooly, which is at their other Seed-time, I obſerved they cut a whole Tree down to the Roots, and lopped off the under-Branches till it became ſtrait, when leaving the upper Boughs, they ſhoulder'd it with great Clamours, the Brachmin beginning a Note which they all followed: Thus they brought it into the Pale of their Pagods, before which, eaſing it down at one end, the foremoſt made a Salam, and hoiſted it with the ſame Noiſe again, and about they went three or four times repeating the ſame; which being finiſhed, the Arch-Brachmin digs an hole, and baptizes it with Holy Water, wherein they fix the Tree, crowning it with Flags aloft, and about the Body up to the Green Boughs they bind Wiſps of Straw, to which they put Fire, and look earneſtly on the Flame, according to the Aſcent of which the Brachmin pronounces his Auguries; then they offer Rice and Flowers, painting their Bodies with the Aſhes, departing with a Mace of Flowers carried before them, beating of Drums and a great Noiſe. This reſembles the Ambar vallis hoſtia, or Sacrifice for the Fields; of which ſee Scaliger, and alſo Virgil, Terque novas circum fœlix fuit hoſtia fruges.

Whether theſe Wretches do work by the Devil, or no.

But to be clear, & ut Fama ad liquidum producatur, let us conſider, that theſe Underlings of the People that do theſe Services to the Devil, or are ſaid ſo to do, may be aſperſed: For the Brachmins, and other the Purer Sort, as they account themſelves, may defame them only, becauſe ſhedding of Blood is horrible to them, and therefore Diabolical: Beſides, thoſe Diſeaſes that are ſaid to be Devils put into one another, (which as many as I have met with, I have been curiouſly inquiſitive of) their Phœnomenaes or Energies are diſcuſſed by Natural Cauſes, and as often cured by Natural Means; but on the contray, it is allowed where they reſiſt them, it is ſuſpicious: And the Devil without doubt cannot eaſier work on any, than the Weak and Simple, (wherefore he choſe the Woman, not the Man) and upon that account may probably delude and overawe theſe People, that give themſelves up to him wholly out of Fear, having not ſo much Virtue, Fortitude, and Cunning, to reſiſt and check their own Luſts, as the Wiſer ſort. As for the viſible appearance of a Devil or Dæmon (which they ſay is common among them, by thoſe that ſee it) I am convinced it may be credible; but in the mean while, Rage and Melancholy Madneſs, aſſiſted by the Infernal Power, may create great Illuſions to a Fancy fitted for ſuch an Operation, and they may think they ſee things which in reality are not ſo.

Now as theſe, by the low and mean Conceptions they have of a Godhead, reach not the great Branch of its Omnipotency and Goodneſs,

Chap. V.

The ſublime Wit as much in the wrong as the depreſſed.

neſs, whereby it is able to defend them from all Aſſaults and Wilineſs of the Devil, depreſſing their Underſtandings, bow under the intolerable Yoak of his Slavery; ſo there are a ſort of ſublimated Wits, that will own neither God nor Devil, and put all things upon Chance ſo long, that the very Notions they framed to themſelves, after beating of the Air, fly out of their Giddy Heads in Fumo. Let them place themſelves under the Æquator, where the Sun is at preſent, and take a Proſpect on each hand of the Orderly Courſe of the Creation; How he paſſes the Ecliptick, and diſpenſes his Irradiations as far as either Pole: How within the Tropicks, entring the firſt Degree of the Ram till the ſecond Degree of Taurus, it is Summer; that is, from January till the One and twentieth of March; when the Woods are moſt denuded of their old Leafs by the parching Heat of the Sun, though new ones ſucceeding, the Trees keep their perpetual Verdure; yet theſe lying on the Ground, makes this time then the moſt like Autumn of any till the Rains fall; which while the Sun is over their Heads make their Winter; till which come, it would be unſufferable living here, did not the Variable Winds gather the Clouds to obſcure the Sun: After the Rains, follows their Spring, when by reaſon of the Remoteneſs of the Sun it is moſt pleaſant living. Thus truly might Ovid be deceived, whilſt he only reaſoned, and not experimented, when he ſang of the Zones and the Climes:

Utque duæ dextrâ Cælum totidemque ſiniſtrâ
Parte ſecant Zonæ, quinta eſt ardentior illis.
Sic onus incluſum numero diſtinxit eodem
Cura Dei, totidemque Plagæ tellure premuntur, Quarum quæ media eſt non eſt habitabilis æſtu.

No Evaſion for the Atheiſt.

But what Colour is there for the Ignorance of our Atheiſtical Young Gallants? Certainly none: Would they abate ſo much time from living, as to ſee and conſider an admirable and well-contrived Providence, and not to harp too much on Caſualty; which I am confident their own Logicians would hiſs at as an Abſurdity, to ſay, That ſuch an exact Progreſs and Obſervance ever ſince the Frame of Nature was inſtituted, ſhould continue ſuch an unalterable Decorum on theſe Four great Anniverſary Wheels, fitly adapted to every Climate; or that they firſt proceeded from a Bundle of Nonſenſical Fortuitous Atoms conjoined into an Hodg-Podge of confuſed Nothings. For the very Matter being Chance, would without doubt produce a rare Stability for the Impreſſions of any Forms, but what muſt be blowed out of as idle Chimeras. I could wiſh therefore, ſuch bold Diſputes being waved, they would confeſs an All-wiſe Creator and Preſerver of Heaven and Earth; unleſs they will verify the Proverb, Atheus eſt talpa de die cæcutiens, Rationi autem paret qui Religionem ſectatur: The Atheiſt is a Mole, being blind at Noon-day; the Man that adores God, and follows Religion, is the only Maſter of his Reaſon. I am ſent for to Bombaim.

The Deputy-Governor of Bombaim being ſick, the Phœnix-Ketch was ordered to bring me up to that Iſland; wherefore the 6th of April, 1676. I took my leave of Carwar, which hath no peculiar Commodities or Manufactories of its own Product, but lies conveniently for the Markets of Pepper, Beetle-Nut, or Arrach; Cloath, as Potkaes, Suffaguzes, from Hubly, ſix days Journy hence; Diamonds from Viſiapour, ten days Journy: But the Factory decays, by reaſon of the Embroils of the Countrey, Merchants being out of heart to buy or ſell: Here are good Returns to be made from this Port to Perſia, and back again; as likewiſe from Mocha, from whence are brought Horſes for War.

All Butchers Fleſh forbidden at Goa in the Heats, except Pork.

The Variable Winds kept us ſix days before we could reach Goa, though but twelve Leagues: At the City all Butchers-Meat is forbidden, except Pork, upon account of the Heats, which afford not much Suſtenance for the Cattel; and the approaching Rains, which robs them of that little Fleſh they retain, and ſcours them to mere Carrion: Wherefore the Religion of the Indians has enjoined them the moſt Healthy Rule to avoid Sickneſs, the forbidding them to eat Fleſh, than which nothing now can be more prejudicial. At this time the Citizens remove moſtly to their Aldeas, the Air of Goa being leſs temperate than the Fields and open Bays.

Mangoes good to cleanſe the Blood.

The Diſeaſes here are Epidemical, unleſs Plagæ Veneris be more Endemial, for which at this Seaſon they have a Noble and Familiar Remedy, the Mango (which they have improved in all it kinds to the utmoſt Perfection) being a Sovereign Medicine; they are the beſt and largeſt in India, moſt like a Pear-Plum, but three times as big, grow on a Tree neareſt a Plum-Tree; the Fruit when Green ſcents like Turpentine, and pickled are the beſt Achars to provoke an Appetite; when Ripe, the Apples of Hiſperides are but Fables to them; for Taſte, the Nectarine, Peach, and Apricot fall ſhort; they make them break out, and cleanſe the Blood, and Salivate to the height of Mercurial Arcanaes; and afterwards fatten as much as Antimony, or Acorns do Hogs; theſe and Sarſa being their uſual Diet.

Cheruſes.

Cheruſes grow on a Tree whoſe Branches ſend forth a Stone firſt, like a Bean, whoſe Meat or Kernel when Green taſtes like a Walnut, roaſted, like a Cheſnut; the Fruit follows, large and of a fine Colour, ſquaſhy, of a better Reliſh than Smell, the Leaves Oval and Succulent.

Ananas, or Pine-Apple, the moſt admired for Taſte.

The Fruit the Engliſh call a Pine-Apple (the Moors, Ananas) becauſe of the reſemblance, cuts within as firm as a Pippin; Seedy, if not fully ripe; the Taſte inclinable to Tartneſs, though moſt excellently qualified by a dulcid Sapor that impoſes upon the Imagination and Guſtative Faculty a Fancy that it reliſhes of any Fruit a Man likes, and ſome will ſwear it: It grows on a thick Stalk like an Artichoke, emitting a Tuft of Leafs upon the Crown; the Leafs a-kin to a Carduus Aſininus (as has been partly related already); the Juice will corrode any Iron or Knife, like Limon.

The

The Eleventh of May, being ſtill Wind-bound, I received a courteous Invitation to return to Carwar; but I could not be diverted till the Full Moon had paſſed with Rain, Clouds, and Thunder; Chap. V.

Jamque erat in totas ſparſurus fulmina terras.

When the Current changed, with which were brought innumerable Shoals of dead Fiſh; the Toddy worked on the Tree over the Pots, the accuſtomed Forerunners of the Rains, but hitherto fallible; which is a wonder even to the Country-People; though our Pilots have obſerved an unwonted Deviation theſe two or three Rains together.

The Nineteenth an Expreſs coming from the Chief of Carwar, That a Gentleman there being almoſt deſperate, importuned my Aſſiſtance, and I fearing to Winter here, for Expediteneſs choſe a Baloon, though he had ſent Horſe and Peons, in caſe I could not acquire one; and the next day by Two in the Afternoon I returned to Carwar Houſe, though two days after the Winds ſet in Southward together with the Rains, when the Ketch ſet ſail for Bombaim, with a great Fleet of Grobs to the North. It is the Freſhes from the Uplands that kills and ſickens the Fiſh. I winter at Carwar.

And now the Rains invade all India, which puts a ſtop to all Journying and Voyaging, as well as Warlike Preparations, Aſpera tum poſitis miteſcunt ſecula bellis.

Till St. Francis's Moon in Auguſt, when the Earth is diſcovered, and the Rice begins to ripen, which all this while floated in Water, which it rejoices in; and this is the firſt Harveſt; for it is to be underſtood this World produces two Harveſts; this moſt natural and uncompell'd, becauſe of the Rain; the other about March, with great pains of bringing Water by Gutters to their ſown Fields, which notwithſtanding yields not ſo plentiful a Crop as the firſt, which this Year increaſes vaſtly; but the misfortune is, three quarters of the Land lies unmanured, through the Tyranny of Seva Gi.

October the Seventeenth I bad a final Adieu to Carwar, and embark'd in the Berkly-Caſtle with Mr. Oxendine, who was called up to ſucceed Mr. Gyffard, the deceaſed Deputy-Governor of Bombaim: Coming again to Goa I lodged at the Houſe of a French Phyſician in the Camp of St. Thomas, which the City overlooks in the ſame manner Old Rome did the Martian Vale. Bad a final Adieu to Carwar, and come again to Goa.

I ſaw there an unfiniſhed Piece of the St. Thomas Chriſtians, but the Troubles of their Prince called them back before it could be perfected; others ſay prevented in it by Thunder and Lightning. The great Traders of this Place for Diamonds are the two Martins, both Jews, yet to carry on their deſigns permitted to live as Chriſtians, they conſtantly frequenting Maſs, and at Table every Meal during our Stay had Hogs-fleſh ſerved up. Jews feed on Hogs-fleſh, for fear of the Inquiſition.

We left Goa on the Eve of St. Xeverius's Feaſt; the Tomb therefore was richly ſet out; and as Eraſmus relates of Thomas à Becket, that nothing could be ſeen baſer than Gold, ſo truly here Silver was the Left Goa on St. Xeverius's Eve.

the meaneſt; Pearls and Precious Stones, as well as Gold, caſt forth their Luſtre, by the reflection of the Virgin Flambeaus upon them: From the tops of the Towers belonging to the Jeſuits, we beheld Lamps at Night ſtriving to vie with the Stars for Number and Luſtre; which appeared Glorioufly on the Water as we Rowed down the River to our Ship.

In Danger of being Ship-wrecked at Bombaim.

Being in ſight of Bombaim, the Tides horſed us to the Northward, which inſenſibly threw us on a Ledge of Rocks running from Old Womans Iſland, where the Ship Struck; after a Quarter of an Hour ſhe cleared, but with the inconvenience of falling more upon them, not without danger of Bulging; whereupon we Fired ſeveral ſingle Pieces of Ordnance to give notice; for the Tide being made, the Water began to Ebb and forſake the Ship, ſo that ſhe ſtood wavering without any prop, which way to incline; and though the Wind and Sea were Calm, yet the fear of Over-ſetting cauſed a general Conſternation; no help appearing, we won on the Captain to ſpare Hands for the Yawl, wherein Four of us got Aſhoar (though ſhe was very Leaky) leaving them in deſpair of their Ship, her own preſſure threatning to break her Back; at Night Boats and Pilots went off to her Relief, and with the Tide of Flood as ſhe Floated, releaſed her to a wonder, being heavy Laden, receiving no damage but in her Sheathing.

Return to Surat.

I Reimbarked and arrived at Surat the Eleventh of December, where giving you a general Account of all India, you will hear from me next out of Perſia.

A P P E-

A Special Chorography and History OF EAST-INDIA.

CHAP. VI.

Is a Summary Rehearsal of the Whole.

Chap. VI.

The Business of Alexander and King Pore is suspicious.

EAST-INDIA, when Alexander's Sword had enlarged its self thither, was Inhabited by the Dædali, Mezegi, Melli, Oxydraci, and Gangarides (if History tell truth); which Nations Time has long since worn out of the Indian Annals. Something they do speak of King Pore, but so uncertain, that it is a doubt whether ever he and Alexander waged War, though good Authors do attest it. But it is plain that Two hundred and seventy Years ago, between the Indians and Scythian Tartars, under Tamerlane, there was begun, what after-Emperors compleated by the then introduced Forces, a total Conquest; under which the greater part of the Natives rest content with their Subjection.

The Name of India doubtful from what beginning.

India it's likely took its Name from Indus, whose Mouths are so choaked up by Sands, that they cannot speak much in this behalf neither, it being changed into the Name of Sinda, which imposes at this day a Name to as large a Province as is in all India; the shallow Currents of which River stretching themselves far and near to the River Ganges almost, has given occasion to Geographers to call it a Peninsula. Omitting these Disputes, I shall at present apply my self to give you a faithful Chorography and Account of those things that fell under my Remark: It is then the largest Country in Asia, which Ptolomy divides into Within and Without the River Ganges, being in Length from the Golden Chersonese, now called Comory, 3600 Miles: In the most Northern part the Day lengthens to Fifteen Hours, but in the Southern it has no more or less than Twelve: The Breadth of it, from the widest place, to wit, Bengal to Candahar, 1500 Miles; from whence, like a Wedge, it lessens into the Cape of Comory. On the West it was formerly bordered by the River Indus; on the North by the dispersed Mountains from Taurus; from the East it is waſhed with the Oriental Sea, and from the South with the Indian.

India produces Three Harveſts in ſome places.

It is a Land in all places very fruitful, and enjoys a Temperater Air than would be allowed by the Poet under the Fifth Zone, under which the greateſt part of it lies; as often as the Sun viſits the Arctic Pole, it brings with it grateful Showers and Winds (whoſe Heat otherwiſe would be intolerable) by which the Earth is cooled and made Productive; neither in the extreameſt Heat does it want by the equality of Days and Nights after Sun-ſet, the favourable Dews of the Heavens, when you ſhall ſoon perceive a kind Moiſture fall to refreſh the Earth, and nouriſh the almoſt ſcorch'd up Plants; though theſe alone are not ſo powerful to take away the Labour from the induſtrious Husbandman, who this Seaſon is forced by artificial Channels to aſſiſt Nature to produce, otherwiſe ſhe would fall one ſhort of a threefold Harveſt in ſome places, every Year; but every where they have a double Harveſt.

The Year made up of Lunary, not Calendar Months.

As the Sun becomes Twice Vertical to them within the Tropicks, at each Tropick but once, beyond never; ſo nearer the Equator the Sun and Stars aſcend and deſcend more directly, but the farther from the Equator the more Obliquely, whereby the dawn of Light here is but ſhort before either the appearance or fall of theſe Bodies, when as the Twilight is ſome Hours after Sun-ſet or afore Sun-riſe the nearer either Pole: Having premiſed this, know they begin their Almanack with our Lawyers, or rather when the Sun is in the Equinoctial Line; but their Months being Lunary, every Third Year bears an Intercalary one, which they clap in Auguſt, and count it double: The Names of their Months are

March	Falgunu	1	Bharapadrâ	7
	Chaitru	2	Aſuinu	8
	Vaixaque	3	Caſtica	9
	Zeſtthâ	4	Margaſſica	10
	Aſſadâ	5	Puxu	11
	Srauana	6	Magu	12.

Sunday Obſerved by the Indians.

They diſtinguiſh their Time by Weeks, i e. Seven days; Sunday being obſerved by the Indians as an Holy Day; agreeable to what is Taught by Philoſtratus, Dion Caſſius, and Juſtin Martyr.

How they count the Hours.

The Hours of Day and Night have all the Year round the ſame Number, Twelve; not minding their Length or Decreaſe: They have no Watches or Hour-Glaſſes, but meaſure Time by the dropping of Water out of a Braſs Baſon, which holds a Ghong, or leſs than half an Hour; when they ſtrike once diſtinctly, to tell them it's the Firſt Ghong, which is renewed at the Second Ghong for Two, and ſo Three at the end of it, till they come to Eight; when they ſtrike on the Braſs Veſſel at their liberty, to give notice the Pore is out, and at laſt ſtrike One leiſurely, to tell them it is the Firſt Pore; which is repeated after the ſame manner for the Second about Midday, when they ſtrike Two, and ſo at the end of the Third Pore Three, and of the Fourth Four; at the end of which Pores the Prieſts Aſcend their Steeples and are Monitors to them of their Devotion; And

Chap. VI.

And as solemnly dividing the Night into as many Pores; so that Thirty two Ghongs and Four Pores make the Day, and as many more the Night; in all Sixty four Ghongs and Eight Pores.

Their Year divided into Three Seasons.

As our Year is divided by the Seasons of Spring, Summer, Autumn, and Winter; to every which we allow a Quarter of a Year: Theirs also agree with their Seasons of Weather, but square not in respect of the Account of the Year, having Four Months for each Season; but divide the Year into no more than Three Parts, viz.

New Colla	The Rains.
Ger Colla	The Cold Season.
Deup Colla	The Heats.

To every one of which they attribute Eight Constellations; are skilled in the Sun's Course through the Zodiac, have their wandring and fixed Stars, and are exact in the Eclipses of the Two Inferior Luminaries.

What has been Experienced in the particular Accounts, I must confirm again in this general one, That the first Full Moon in May brings the Rains, when it Rains a Fortnight only, and holds up till the middle of June, in which times, Empyemas, Fluxes, Fevers of all sorts (except Pestilential) Hæmorrhages, rage; after the Rains are fully settled, it grows Healthy. From the setling in of the Rains till the Full Moon in August, it Rains without intermission, after which it clears up for a Fortnight, and with little variation (bating the accidental Causes of its beginning earlier or later) it Rains all September till the Elephant breaks up, the last Rainy Star: After which is the Harvest for Rice, when it is gathered; and then just after the Rains they are most Sickly, the Sun exhaling Vapours, the Earth grows Muddy and Stinking, though abundantly Productive: From thence to the latter end of January commences the Cold Season, when their Bodies are Healthier, and a lovely Verdure Cloaths the Earth; at the latter end of this they reap another Harvest without extraordinary pains; all this time the Evenings are very sharp, and at Surat I have seen an hoar Frost in the Morning. From February the first, till the Rains set in, are the Heats, and in March the Leafs fall off the Trees, yet always supplied with fresh, so that the Trees are always Green, though the Grass and Fodder are quite burnt up; and with difficulty, by the advantage of Aquiducts, a lean Harvest is brought forth: The Peasants Morning and Evening draw Water out of Wells by Buffola's, or Oxen; or else by a thwart Post poised with a sufficient weight at the extremity, laid over one fixed in the Earth; the Water is drawn by a Bucket of Goats Skins; others have Pans or Buckets of Leather hanging round about a Wheel, some always in the Water, others rising up, and at the same time others pouring out as the Wheel turns round: And thus are their best Gardens kept alive.

Mountains.

The Mountains here are one continued Ridge, dividing the Two Coasts each from other, and are all along called the Gaot; they run North and South till they cross the Imaus; and are the reason of some difference of the Seasons, both in respect of themselves and Low-

Letter IV.

Lands: They are plentifully ſtored with Woods, and Increaſe of all things, except Rivers, which are in ſome Places compenſated by living Springs out of the Rocks, but every where by Water falling in the Rains.

Rivers.

The Rivers are innumerable; but thoſe of greateſt fame are Indus and Ganges, the latter not only for its many Navigable Streams for ſome Hundreds of Leagues, but for its Purity in the eſteem of the moſt Religious; beſides all which, are great Tanks or Ponds of Rain-Water, where it wants the other Benefits, with deep Wells, of extraordinary Coſts and Charges; ſome purely for Pomp, and to tranſmit their Names to Poſterity; others for the good of Travellers, but moſt for the ſake of Religion, in which they are extravagantly profuſe, every great City ſtriving to outvye each other; the moſt admirable whereof are thoſe cut on high Hills and Fortreſſes thereon, out of the main Rocks, ſeeming rather the Works of many Ages than one to finiſh them: At Rajapore are Hot Baths; here are very few other Mineral Waters.

The Country rich in Increaſe.

The Plain Country is Rich in all things neceſſary; Paſturage, by reaſon of the long Summers Drought, being the only lack; which in the Rains and Cold Seaſon they have Time and Store to provide againſt. Cocoes grow all along the Sea-ſide round India, within the Tropicks, and Beetle-Nut is in great Requeſt, not only for that it is the Courteous Entertainment or Farewel at all Friendly Interviews, but becauſe wrapped in Pawn-Leaves with Chinam, it exhilarates and makes a kind of pleaſant Drunkenneſs, if much eaten, as the Natives of any faſhion are ſeldom without it in their Mouths; and theſe are peculiar to the Low-Countries as are Water-Melons; other Fruits, as Grapes, Mangoes, and the like, are the common Growth of India: Rice thrives beſt in Watry Places, it ſwimming always therein till Harveſt, when the Water is let out by Drains; all other Corn rejoices better in drier Grounds; Cotton is a Lover of the ſame, from whence comes all the Wealth to India, quæ effodiuntur opes, which are dug for in other Places and laid up here.

Woods are every where, in which ſometimes are met Inhabitants not yet mentioned, and for their Solitarineſs called Men of the Woods, or more truly Satyrs; there are Nereids too, or Men of the Rivers, but dye as ſoon as taken: A Couple of the former I ſaw aſleep in the day-time, in the Night they Sport and Eat; they were both in a Parrot-Cage, they had Heads like an Owl, Bodied like a Monkey, without Tails; only the firſt Finger of the Right Hand was armed with a Claw like a Birds, otherwiſe they had Hands, and Feet which they walk upright on, not pronely, as the other Beaſts do; they were coloured like a Fox, of the length of Half a Yard; though they grow bigger till Twelve Years old, when they copulate.

Deſerts.

Here are Sandy Deſerts near the Gulph of Cambaja, and beyond Bengala, towards Botan and Cochin China, whence they fetch Musk.

Mines.

Mines, beſides thoſe of Diamonds, Rubies, Agats, Cornelian, Granats, Topazes, and Iron, none are diſcourſed of; which with what elſe comes to Memory, ſhall be ſpecified in their proper place. Of Diamond-Mines there are two ſorts, the Old and New Rock, the latter latter the Larger, the other the Best; the first in Duccan, the other in Gulconda. Chap. VI.

Wild Beasts frequent here, are the fiercest Tigres in the World, with all their sorts; Lions here are some, but feeble and cowardly; Leopards, Balus, a sort of Wolf, wild Cats, or Catamountains, Monkeys, wild Dogs, which they say Piss out the Eyes of Venison as they feed in the Woods, and so Venom them with their Urine, that they become their Prey; Squirrels, Jackals, Mungooses, wild Bulls, Elephants, Rhinoceros, Buffolaes, Bears. Wild Beasts.

For Game, all sorts of Antelopes, Deer, Boar, and Elks. The Fields are stored with Tame of all kinds, but mostly with Kine and Goats. For Game.

Fowls of Prey, Eagles, Vultures, Kites, Newries, Crows, which last hath an Enemy, though in Bulk contemptible, yet in Revenge implacable, being no bigger than a Bumble-Bee, yet it never leaves the Crow's Breast till it have left it breathless, making a Vent therein by its piercing Bill. Fowls of Prey.

For Game, abundance of all sorts: The Bats here are the biggest of any place.

Fishes common to India are not to be numbred, some spangled with Gold, Vermilion, and other Colours, not usual with us; but the best known are Sharks, Whales, Sea-snakes, (the assured Tokens to the Pilots of their approaching the Coasts of India); Pilchards come in Sholes as our Herrings do; Porpoises, Oysters, Crabs, Tortoises, the Sword-fish, Sæpæ, or the Ink-fish of Gesner, Spanish Mackrel. The Rivers are well provided (and the Grass too) with Snakes, many of which are venomous, and some big enough to devour a Sow and Piggs, if the Natives may be believed. Fish.

Insects (besides Fleas) are large Flies in the Rain, who will be sure to be our Tasters, unless one stand purposely to beat them off with a Mirchal; nor are Ants less vexatious, nothing eatable can be set by but they will be at it; but the greatest Pest is the Mosquito, who not only wheals, but domineers by its continual Hums; the Chints are as venomous, and if squeezed leave a most Poysonous Stench; these breed in the Cotton, and where once they beset an House, they are not easily removed, they being Proof against all Fumes or Remedies used to destroy such-like Vermin; and therefore keep Possession, while the Inhabitants being not able to endure them, must turn out to other Dwellings; and these Plagues are in all their Quarters. Insects.

The Inhabitants and Natives of India are divided into Five Sects, to wit;

I. Gentues; the first Possessors, Aborigines, or Natives.
II. Moguls; the next Invaders or Conquerors by Land.
III. Portugals; the first Discoverers or Conquerors by Sea.
IV. Dutch, English, &c. Strangers; partly by Conquest; partly by Trade.
V. Parsies, by Permission.

The Ltteer IV.

The Gentues are again distributed into these Classes;

The Gymnosophists, Brachmins, or Book-Men.
The Quetories, Rashpoots, or Soldiers.
The Merchants or Mechanicks.
The Labourers, Peasants, Combies, Coolies, Frasses and Holencores.

The Brachmins

Their men of Learning.

Are chiefly distinguished by Butts and Sinais; from these two Roots spring the other Branches: The difference was occasioned by a Famine in the Low-Countries, where the latter resided, on which account they were constrained to break their Fast with Fish, or else starve; for which reason they are greatly despised by the purer Butt, having never deviated from his Pythagorean Institution and Primary Abstinence from all living Creatures. Yet notwithstanding, the Sinai keeps his Cotton-String Badge (the Characteristick Note of a Brachmin) under his Left Shoulder as well as the Butt, and has his Disciples.

The Butts addict themselves to the profoundest Mysteries in their Religion, giving themselves over to an exact Regular Life, abstracted from all Worldly Employments, unless such as are for the saving and preserving of Life, the Chiefest and Skilfullest Physicians being of their Tribe: These are the Masters of all their Heathen Ceremonies, or Doctors of their Canon Law, every Tribe being instructed by them; they chiefly consist in Washing, Abstinence, and other Austerities imposed at their Pleasure.

The Sinais are more biass'd by Secular Offices, out of which are made their fighting Bishops, Desies, or Farmers of the King's Rents, Pundits (Governors of Towns and Provinces), Physicians, Accountants, Scrivans, and Interpreters: Any of these, if they arrive to any smattering in Learning, are admired and highly reverenced by the Vulgar. Their Cabala's or Pious Secrets are kept in a Language communicated to none but themselves, as are all the Arcanaes of every Science, written in a peculiar Character; they are very dogmatical in their Dictates to the People, singing them out in a Lofty Tone, as the Fauns and Bards of old are reported, as the Sybils by Lactantius, the Salians by Livy, the Druids by Cæsar, the Delphian Enigmaes by Herodotus, the Spartan Rites by Eustathius: Suas nimirum cogitationes non eâ pervulgatâ & detritâ & dissolutâ quâ quilibet uteretur oratione, consignare, sed aliâ exquisitâ, & astrictâ, & numerosâ, & vinculis alligatâ, præclarum æstimârunt. Dr. Reyn. in Orat. 6.

Their Notion of God.

God they say is incomparably Good; in some of their Languages they hardly have a name for Hell; their Notions of the World's Creation and the Origine of all things, are mere confused Stories; their Account of Time is perplexed, and not to be reckoned up. For the Immortality of the Soul, they rely as well on Plato as Pythagoras, (viz.) That it is transmigrated, and in such a Revolution of time they appear in the World again, Princes or Rajahs, according to the Demerits Demerits of their former living, or Penalties inflicted on them to purify them, their Souls not being informed, but incloſed as a Bird in a Cage. Chap. VI.

Whence it is that, propped by theſe Perſuaſions, the Women freely Sacrifice themſelves, in hopes of coming into the World great and famous, after they have paſſed the Limbo of Tranſmigration with their Husbands; and in the mean while are Canonized and Invoked as Saints by their Kindred and Relations; and their Patriarchs oblige themſelves to incredible Abſtinence from Food, for many days together refuſing any Suſtenance, undergoing the ſtricteſt Penances; having learned from Pythagoras, Anguſtam & aſperam eſſe viam ad vitam beatam. The Conceit of Tranſmigration forcible to Merits.

SCIENCES

In Eſteem among them are principally Magick and Judicial Aſtrology, one of the Sectators of which on all accounts are conſulted, as well by Moors as Gentues; Grammar and Rhetorick, ſome of them being Maſters of Perſian, Indoſtan, Arabick, Sanſcript (or Holy Language) Portugueze, and all the depending Speeches of Indoſtan, as Duccany, Moratty, Conchany, and the like; beſides the Canatick, in which all their Sonnets and Poeſies are expreſſed, being ſofter and more melting than the others; which is an Argument alſo of its Antiquity, Indoſtan not having a Character to expreſs its ſelf in, on which the later Dialects depend. Elocution, Phyſick, Metaphyſicks, are not out of their Element: Their Philoſophers maintain an Ariſtotelian Vacuity; nor are they quite ignorant of Medicks, though Anatomy is not approved, wherein they lean too much on Tradition, being able to give a very ſlender account of the Rational Part thereof. In what Perfection Muſick ſtands (as I am no competent Judge) I could never give my Ears the trouble to examine, it ſeeming loud and barbarous; yet they obſerve Time and Meaſure in their Singing and Dancing, and are mightily delighted with their Tumbling and Noiſe. They as much diſlike our ſhriller Muſick, hardly allowing our Wayts fit to play to Bears, and our Stringed Inſtruments ſtrike not their hard-to-be-raiſed Fancies; but our Organs are the Muſick of the Spheres with them, charming them to liſten as long as they play. Arithmetick being the moſt profitable Science, is the beſt underſtood by them; to which they have a Natural Propenſity, and will in a trice, without the help of Pen or Ink caſt up the difficulteſt Sums, and never pauſe upon it. Their aptneſs to learn Languages, and Skill in Philoſophy.

In ſome Places they write on Cocoe-Leafs dried, and then uſe an Iron Style; or elſe on Paper, when they uſe a Pen made with a Reed, for which they have a Braſs Caſe, which holds them and the Ink too, always ſtuck at the Girdles of their Scrivans. Write on Leafs.

Among theſe are enrolled the Muttanies, Jougies, or Pilgrims, who lead a Beaſtly Life, having all things common, and are courted wherever they come; nor do they ever depart, without leaving a Stain to their Profeſſion: When they eaſe Nature they ſcrape an Hole, as Dogs or Cats do, to bury their Excrements, to prevent breeding of Inſects. Theſe are covered, the firſt with a White Sheet, and Muttanies and Jougies.

Letter IV. and carry Perfuming Pots, and Bleſs all as they paſs; the others have a Snapſack, a Mirchal, and a patch'd Coat, rambling up and down as the Fakiers; the firſt are buried with their Heels upwards and Heads downwards; the others ſometimes buried, ſometimes burnt.

Juglers, &c. At the Heel of theſe may be reckoned the Bengal Juglers, Mountebanks, and Conjurers, as alſo the Dancing People; theſe are Vagrants, that travel to delude the Mobile by their Hocus Pocus Tricks (living promiſcuouſly like our Gypſies); among whom I ſaw one who ſwallowed a Chain, ſuch as our Jacks have, and made it clink in his Stomach; but pulling it out, it was not ſo pleaſant to the Spectators (being moſtly Ladies, for whoſe Diverſion he was brought) they puking when it was accompanied with a filthy roapy Slaver.

Others preſented a Mock-Creation of a Mango-Tree, ariſing from the Stone in a ſhort ſpace (which they did in Hugger-Mugger, being very careful to avoid being diſcovered) with Fruit Green and Ripe; ſo that a Man muſt ſtretch his Fancy, to imagine it Witchcraft; though the common ſort think no leſs: Sed Magus quò peritior eò deteſtabilior.

I was promiſed to ſee a Fellow that caſt up his Tripes by his Mouth, Stomach and all, ſhewing them to the Beholders; but he was excuſed, having ſome time allowed him to prepare himſelf for it: In his ſtead were brought me two; the firſt of which, by Suction or drawing of his Breath, ſo contracted his lower Belly, that it had nothing left to ſupport it, but fell flat to his Loins, the Midriff being forced into the Thorax, and the Muſcles of the Abdomen as clearly marked out by the ſtiff Tendons of the Linea Alba, as by the moſt accurate Diſſection could be made apparent, he moving each Row like living Columns by turns. The Ætiology whereof I think to be this; that while all the Contents of the Belly are moved upwards, all Reſpiration is expelled, only the voluntary Motion of the Animal Spirits acts upon the Nerves (the Mind or Soul commanding them) while the Vital or Natural are compelled to the contrary.

After this I ſaw another Fellow of a good Habit of Body, that had taught himſelf by uſe to depreſs his Sternum, with the Serratus Poſticus Inferior, Sacro lumbus, and Triangular Muſcles, ſo that the Cartilaginous Subſtance of the Ribs, which Anatomiſts ſeparate for Diſſection of the Thorax, and throw it back over the Face, by this means was crowded in, that it made a notable Cavity as deep as the Spine would ſuffer; in the mean while the Man was almoſt ſtrangled, as if preſſed to death; for under this Conſtraint neither he nor the former could take their Breath, yet remained ſo ſome time: Which may be a viſible Inſtance that divers Urinators may continue a long ſpace, being inured from their Infancy to keep under Water. From the reſt of theſe I obſerved nothing more excellent than what is performed by our Rope-dancers, for Feats of Activity, or Slight of Hand. Theſe peſter every open place in great Cities and Publick Fairs, as they do in Europe.

The next Rank,

Is of the Soldiers, commonly called Raſhpoots, who by their Valour have have won unto themselves the Perpetuity of their Arms, and the Credit of being called in to the Aid of divers Princes, and are in continual Action under some one State or other bordering upon them; never altering their Vocations, being bred Warriors; these aspire not to great Charges, nor admit Commanders over them, unless of their own Cast; fighting Pell-mell, as every one is inspired from the Pay they receive; their Arms are Sword, Pike, and Buckler. A Soldier that puts on a Crocus-dye, intimates a Resolution either to dye or be Conqueror. Chap VI.

A Crocus-coloured Coat intimates a Resolution to dye, or be Conqueror.

Opium is frequently eaten in great quantities by the Rashpoots, Queteries, and Patans, when they fight, which makes them run upon any Enterprize with a raging Resolution to dye or be victorious. Before Engaging, it is usual for them to embrace one another, as if parting for another World; esteeming it happier to be killed in their Vocation, than to submit to the Lust of a Conqueror; their very Women disdaining to own them for their Husbands, when they once turn their Back upon their Enemies: Of one of which Viragoes goes this Story; Her Mate had made an Escape honourable enough for a prudent Retreat, when coming home and craving Meat from his Spouse, after many obloquious Salutes she put this Affront on him, she served him with a Brass Ladle, whereas before his Meals were taken up with one made of Iron; whereof he demanding the Reason, she tartly replied, Lest the sight of Iron should turn your Stomach from your Victuals, as it had done from Fighting.

Opium eaten often, and in quantities.

The Banyan

Follows the Soldier, though as contrary in Humour, as the Antipodes in the same Meridian are opposite one to another: These have forgot if ever they were Jews, or no; but if any of these People are such, these are most likely; and by a double Right of Jew and Gentile, are a Compound of the greatest Cheat in the World, the fittest therefore to make Brokers and Merchants of: They are devout Proselytes in the Worship of this Countrey, and tenacious of their Rites and Customs; strict Observers of Omens, so that in travelling ten Miles they shall sometimes double the Ground, to avoid encountring a Caphala of Asses, or to take the Hand of a Flock of Goats or Cows grazing: In the Rains they will not ride in a Coach, for fear they should kill the Insects generated in the Cart-Ruts, or stinking Puddles: So foolishly superstitious are they and precise in Matters of Religion; in cases of Trade they are not so hide-bound, giving their Consciences more Scope, and boggle at no Villany for an Emolument.

Whether the Banyan be a Jew.

The Poor Artisan

Can hardly live for these, who will grind their Faces to fill their own Hoards, as much as the Desies do

The Peasants

And Combies, who Till the Land, and dress the Corn, with no remarkable difference from other Nations; they plough with Oxen, their Coulters unarmed moſtly, Iron being ſcarce, but they have hard Wood will turn their light Grounds. The Gentues thraſh their Corn with a Stick, not a Flail; the Moor-men that are Husbandmen tread it out with Oxen (but muzzle their Mouths), which they do in the open Fields, before they carry it home; fixing a Stake in the Earth, and yoaking the Oxen three, four, or more abreaſt, faſten them to a turning Pole, paſſing round till all be done.

Letter IV.

Coolies, Fraſſes, and Holencores, are the Dregs of the People, and are not permitted to have their Funeral Rites or Marriages with the others; ſo abject, that the others think themſelves defiled if they touch or converſe with them.

Diſtinguiſhed by their ſeveral Paintings on their Foreheads,

All theſe are diſtinguiſhed one from another by the Cut of their Beards, or different Painting of their Bodies and Foreheads, as well as winding of their Turbants. A Brachmin paints himſelf on the Front with a Pythagorean Y between his Eyebrows, deſcending to his Noſe, and gives to every Tribe their peculiar Mark.

And Cuts of their Beards.

The Gentues wear little Beards, and ſhave them; the Moors great Beards, and trim them only to keep them decent: And ſince their Barbers are ſo neceſſary, as well to give them their diſtinguiſhing Shape, as for other Uſes, we will let you know they ſeldom keep Shop, but go about the City with a Checquered Apron over their Shoulders, and a Mirror in their Hands, which they offer any to ſee their Face in; and if any employ them, they are well paid with a Gosbeek, much under a Farthing: When they pluck out a Razor not an Inch long, a Baſon of Braſs as big as a Coffee-diſh, and a piece of Caſtle-Soap, which they dip into the Baſon of Water, and rub about the Lips or Head, with no more Water than it gathers up, and ſo ſhave very well; and for the Head few out-do them, both for Eaſe and Readineſs: They have an Iron Tool alſo, one end to pick the Ears, another to cut the Nails, both which they do dextrouſly, clearing the Ears of great quantities of that thick Wax incloſed therein; they alſo waſh and anoint their Bodies, it being not obſolete here to anoint every day with Sweet Oyls, and the Poor, both Men and Women, with Cocoe Nut Oyl, which being Rank, together with their eating Hing and Garlick, makes them always ſmell ſo ſtrong, that it is very offenſive paſſing through Places of Reſort, before one be accuſtomed to them; they alſo rub the Hair of their Head with a ſweet Powder to get the ſweat out, and then bedawb it with ſtinking Oyl, which they ſay preſerves it: In the Bath or Hummums they have a large Province.

The Moguls

Are the Invaders of their Liberties and Properties, ruling tyrannically; yet more tolerable than what they were when firſt invited hither by the Plenty of this Country, and Scarcity of their own, which was a means to gain, as well as now to preſerve their Conqueſt; for they were originally Tartars, coming from Scythia with their Leader Tamerlane, and thence prided themſelves to be called Whites, and ſtill do ſo in ſcorn of the Indians, who are Blacks; and and it is the Flower of their Emperors Titles to be called the Great Mogul, Burrore Mogul Podeſhar, who reckons but few Deſcents from Tamerlane, and is at preſent Auren Zeeb; who Governs by this Maxim, To Create as many Ombrahs, or Nobles, out of the Moguls or Perſian Foreigners, as may be fairly entruſted, but always with this Policy, To remove them to remote Charges from that where their Jageah, or Annuity ariſes; as not thinking it fit to truſt them with Forces or Money in their allotted Principalities, leſt they ſhould be tempted to unyoke themſelves, and ſlip their Neck from the Servitude impoſed on them; for which purpoſe their Wives and Children are left as Pledges at Court, while they follow the Wars, or are Adminiſtring in Cities or Provinces; from whence when they return, they have nothing they can call their own, only what they have Cheated by falſe Muſters and a hard Hand over both Soldiers and People; which many times too, when manifeſt, they are forced to refund to the King, though not reſtore to the Oppreſſed; for all Money, as well as Goods and Lands, are properly his, if he call for them.

The Ombrahs.

Out of theſe are made Generals of Armies, under whom are Commanders of Hundreds and Thouſands, as the Centurions and Legions; from thence to Fifty, Twenty, and Ten.

A Cavalier is Armed with a Poniard at the Right ſide of his Girdle; a broad Bladed Sword of an unwieldy ſize (and therefore poiſed with an heavy Pummel), on his Left ſide in a Belt; a Bow made of Horn ſtrongly and artificially Glutinated (Adducto flectere cornua nervo) and Arrows in a Quiver at the Bow of his Saddle; and a great Lance in his Hand, with a Target hanging croſs his Shoulders Boſſed.

A Foot Soldier carries a Match-lock Gun, or elſe a great Lance and Target, and ſometimes a Sword; the former are ranked under the great Ombrahs, or the Chief Commanders of Hazory; the latter have a Standard of their own to repair to.

Petty Ombrahs.

Munſubdars, or petty Ombrahs, own the King only for their Leader, and have not above Four or Five Horſe under them.

Rouſanders are Cavaliers that are Paid by the Day, a conſiderable Salary, ſurpaſſing the Munſubdars, though not ſo Honourable.

A ſimple Cavalier under the Ombrahs have ſome of them Two Horſes apiece, as his Lord favours him, and his Pay 30 or 25 Rupees per Month.

Among theſe may be reckoned the Artillery in which the Fringi's are Liſted; formerly for good Pay, now very ordinary, having not above 30 or 40 Rupees a Month.

The Artillery.

For Artillery they have both great Ordnance and ſmall Field Pieces, drawn by Elephants and Oxen, adorned with Streamers, beſides Camels that carry Petereros.

The Soldiery are Paid, partly out of the Treaſury, and partly out of the Lands allotted for that purpoſe.

The Husbandman is forced to Build low, and the Doors like entring Ports, otherwiſe the Soldier would bring his Horſe in as well as himſelf.

Letter IV.

Their Difference in Religion with the Perſians.

The Moormen domineer over the Indians moſt unſufferably; and theſe are of the Turkiſh or Arabian Sect in matters of Religion, owning Mahomet, and his Brother to be his Succeſſor: The Chias, or Perſian, own Mahomet alſo, but place the Succeſſion of the Caliphſhip in the Daughter; and this is a Diſpute of ſo high a nature, that they Eat not, neither Communicate one with another.

Their Pride and Luxury.

There are ſome great Merchants among them, that are buoy'd up more by the Authority of their Religion and Caſt, than Cunning, the Banyan being forced to flee to them for Patronage: They imitate a noble Pomp, and are not encountred abroad niſi magna Comitante catervâ, without a great Train, uſing many Odors in the Hummums, or Balneo's; nor are they without Oils, Perfumes, and Eſſences of Sandal, Cloves, and Oranges, which are in their kind very exquiſitely drawn off. They go Rich in Apparel, their Turbats of Gold, Damask'd Gold Atlas Coats to their Heels, Silk Alajah, or Cuttanee Breeches, Embroidered Saſhes and Slippers, Golden Hilted Swords and Poniards, as alſo Golden Emboſſed Targets; Silver and Gold Cappariſons for their Horſes, which are of Arabia, Perſia, or Turky.

The Moguls Feed high, Entertain much, and Whore not a little.

The Women are conformable to the Wills of their Husbands, being truly no more than their Chief Slaves; Dreſſing the Victuals, and Waiting till their Lords have Dined, before they Eat themſelves. Every Caſt in India refuſe to Eat with thoſe of a contrary Tribe or Opinion, as well Gentues, Moors, and Perſians, as any other; nor ſo much as to Dreſs the Meat in their Veſſels, they accounting them Defiled.

A Fakier

The reaſon of the Licentiouſneſs of the Fakiers.

Is an Holy Man among the Moors; for all who Profeſs that Strictneſs (for ſuch it ſhould be) they eſteem them Sacred; and though before apparent Traytors, yet declaring for this kind of life, and wearing a patch'd Coat of a Saffron Colour, with a pretended careleſs neglect of the World, and no certain Reſidence, they have Immunity from all Apprehenſions, and will dare the Mogul himſelf to his Face: Of this Order are many the moſt Diſſolute, Licentious, and Prophane Perſons in the World, committing Sodomy, will be Drunk with Bang, and Curſe God and Mahomet; depending on the Toleration the Mogul indulges them with, having been one himſelf in the time of the Conteſt among his Brethren; ſo ſecuring himſelf till they had deſtroyed one another, and made an eaſy paſſage for him to the Throne; theſe People Beg up and down like our Bedlams with an Horn and Bowl, ſo that they enter an Houſe, take what likes them, even the Woman of the Houſe; and when they have plaid their mad Pranks, away they go to repeat them elſewhere. Under this Diſguiſe many paſs as Spies up and down, and reap the beſt Intelligence for the benefit of the Prince that Employs them.

The

Chap. VI.

The Portugals,

Not to defraud them of their due, might have Subdued India by this time, had not we fallen out with them, and given them the first blow at Ormus; upon which the Dutch fell in and took from them the best of their Conquest, and all their Spice Trade; notwithstanding they have added some Christians to those formerly Converted by St. Thomas, but it is a fond report to say all India; no more than to have Conquered all the Inland Country, where they never pierced, their Possessions being most by the Sea-side; yet at this day they bear the Port of a Vice-Roy at Goa, who has his Council, and Governs after the Mode of Portugal: His Reign is Triennial, as are all their Capitaneas.

The Portugals might have Conquered India had not the English Interrupted them, and the Dutch fallen upon them.

The Dutch,

Though a Commonwealth in Europe, find it propereſt to bear the face of a Monarchy here, appointing a General at Batavia, whose Power is extensive over all India: These begin to be taken notice of, and are esteemed as Men of War among these Nations; for obliging and fair Means prevail not here, they being of a less Ingenuous Temper than to be won by any other ways than Force; so that a Tyrannical Government in India is as necessary to keep them under, as abstaining from Flesh and Washing their Bodies, to keep them in Health; wherefore they have wisely Ordained Religious Rites: And this is the reason they have a value for

The English,

Who they see are content with Bombaim, and a peaceable way of Trade; square with the Humour, and meet with the Praise of the Banyans; but command not that Awe by which these People are best taught to understand themselves.

The English much valued.

The Parsies,

As they are called, are of the old stock of the Persians, Worship the Sun and Adore the Elements; are known only about Surat; where they are famous for what all other Nations deem infamous, the exposing their Dead to the Fowls of the Air: And these coming in by permission are obliged to Conformity with the Heathen Customs, being almost, as the Gibeonites to the Israelites, Hewers of Wood and Drawers of Water; having been curbed formerly by the Gentiles, and now by the Moors used as perfect Slaves; yet they endure this, that so they may enjoy their Religion, and that benefit, which is tolerated to the Indians more than any where, the liberty of getting Children, and an indulgence for Poverty.

The Parsies expose their dead to the Fowls of the Air.

The Indians are Tall of Stature, Large Boned; their Colour varies according to the diversity of the Region; the Parsies are Straw Coloured, as Hyppocrates witnessed for them; Æthiopians are Black and

Letter IV.

and Frizled; the Indians here are a mixture of theſe, but long Haired. The heat of the Sun alters our Europe-Men to a dark Brown; ſuch as Sail to and again conſtantly in theſe Climates, by going Naked and expoſed to the Sun, being almoſt as Swarthy as the Natives, with this difference, that by Cloathing the Sunburnt wears off; but contrariwiſe, it remains indeleble on the Indians.

Infants when newly Born have the ſame Fleſh Colour as ours; but in a few Days, by the inbred Humour, and the Sun's Heat, declare their Hew to be of the ſame with their Parents.

The Women of the ſame Species as others, the Poſition of their Veins being the ſame.

The Women are Small, and moſt an end Plump, and Short in reſpect to the Men; as to the order which Nature obſerves in them they are more forward than ours in Europe, and leave off Child-bearing ſooner. It is reported the Menſtruums of the Africans are pernicious, but there is no ſuch ſlander here, theſe being Neat, Well-ſhaped, and Obſequious to their Husbands; for the different Poſitions of their Veins it's a ſilly Query, they being of the ſame Species of the reſt of the World, bating their Education, which is agreeable to them, and bear as good a Meen naturally, as ours inſtructed by the Maſters of Behaviour; they keep their Breaſts bound up carefully, and on that account are no more extended than they ſhould be; they are quick in Labour, and Affectionate to their Children, Bearing them Naked on their Hips a ſtraddle; are well Proportioned, and for that reaſon not aſhamed to ſhew the Motion of their Bodies, all their Limbs being viſible, yet love to hide what ſhould not be ſeen: They are Cleanly, as well in their Cookery as in their Bodies, Pruning themſelves by plucking the budding Hairs off their Privities up by the Roots, they being all as ſmooth there as the back of their Hands, though they ſuffer the Hair of their Heads to grow in Treſſes, which the Rich Embroider with Gold, Coronets, and Rich Jewels; the Poor Brade with Strings of Jaſſamin Flowers, and make Necklaces of the ſame; the Rich have their Arms and Feet Fettered with Gold and Silver, the meaner with Braſs, Glaſs, or Tuthinag; beſides Rings at their Noſes, Ears, Toes, and Fingers: Their Attire alters not into new Modes, nor need they a Taylor; a Lungy being tied looſe over their Shoulders Belt-wiſe, and tucked between their Legs in nature of ſhort Breeches, beſides a ſhort Waſtecoat, or Ephod to keep up their Breaſts, being all their Garb; going conſtantly without Shooes or Stockins, Shoes being allowed their Midwives only, which are like the Mens, only a few Silk Tufts upon them for diſtinction ſake. Thoſe that have Buried their Husbands (or rather Burnt them) are rifled of all their Jewels, and Shaved, always wearing a Red Lungy, whereby to be known that they have not undergone the Conflagration; for which cauſe they are deſpiſed, and live more Uncomfortably than the meaneſt Servant.

The Moors Women are all Cloathed like the Men, as has been ſaid elſewhere, only Vailed when they go abroad; and thus the Indian Women are Habited.

Few Crooked or Deformed.

They uſe no ſwathing to their Babes, and have very few deformed or Dwarfs among them; are Temperate, and live to a good Old Age, when their Hair alſo turns from Black to Grey. What Ovid relates of the Glaucus Fish, Æstivo nunquam conspectus Sydere Glaucus, is true in these Hot Countries of the Colour of the Eyes of these Sun-burnt people, for I never saw but one Grey-ey'd, and therefore I suppose them rare; (unless they should tincture them with some Fucus, it may be of Antimony, which we read in the Sacred Page the Jews used, especially the Women, both to preserve them from Filth, and to procure a graceful Blackness, 2 Kings 9. Jer. 4. Ezek. 23.) Nor but one Dwarf, which was a Brachmin, 109 Years old, well limb'd, and of a quick Apprehension, being not Three Foot high, free from the Infirmities of Age.

of

The Cause of their Blackness left in suspence.

In general they are melancholy inclined, and love a sedate Life more than Action; and whether that may not add to their Dye, I leave to the Sceptical; and conclude in this Point of these Asiaticks, as Naso did of his Africks;

Sanguine tum credunt in corpora summa vocato
Æthiopum populos nigrum traxisse colorem.

The Indian Wives dress their Husbands Victuals, fetch Water, and grind their Corn with an Hand-Mill, when they sing, chat, and are merry; such prevalency has Custom: They make their Bread as thin as Wafers, bak'd on broad round Plates or Stones, commonly of Rice; the Moors is made of Wheat, thicker and oblong, bestuck with Seeds to correct Wind, and mostly bak'd in a Furnace, which they stick to the sides, when Dough, as we see Cow-Turds on a Mud-Wall. Boiled Rice, Nichany, Millet, and (in great Scarcity) Grass-Roots, are the common Food of the ordinary People; which with a Pipe of Tobacco contents them.

CITIES

Are many and Populous; three more Renowned than the rest (Dhilly, Lhor, and Agra), for the Residence of the Emperor in one of these for every Season of the Year: The rest are known either for Trade, or the Provinces whose Names they bear.

Their Houses built for Conveniency.

Their Buildings suit with the Country and State of the Inhabitants, being mostly contrived for Conveniency: The Poorer are made of Boughs or Oleas of the Palmeroes, or Leafs of Teke, and thatch'd both Sides and Coverings; the middle sort of the Gentues with Mud one Story; floored with Cow-dung, which they do afresh every day, after they have swept and cleansed them: Under which, their Houshold-Gods, themselves, their Family, and Cattel, are all housed, and many times in no distinct Partition: They plaster Cow-dung before their Doors, and so keep them clean, having a little place or two built up a Foot Square of Mud, where they plant Calaminth, or (by them called) Tulce, which they worship every Morning, and tend with diligence.

The Richer and the Moors build with Stone and Mortar, sometimes with Brick, making small Shew without, but delicately contrived within, with Tanks, Airy and cool Choultries, private Recesses for their Women, Taras'd atop, and sometimes three or four Stories high:

Letter IV.

high: Their Furniture is moveable, as Rich Carpets to ſit on the Floor, and Rich Cuſhions behind them, without any Chairs within-doors, unleſs large Elbow Chairs when they ſit at their Doors ſmoking in State.

Live to a good Age,

And in theſe they ſpend their Lives, and have the Length of Days here as in other places, they ſpinning them out a long while: Whether the Cauſe may be attributed to the Air, or Temperance in their Diet, I know not: Yet this is certain, they are careful what they eat ſhall be well dreſſed, that the Stomach be neither over-charged, or have much trouble to concoct.

By Care of their Diet,

And as they are careful what they take into their Bodies, ſo are they ſolicitous to evacuate in good order, always waſhing their Fundaments, and ſquatting when they make Water; nor do the Women ſcruple to do their Occaſions in Publick Streets or Highways, going hand in hand for that purpoſe at Set-times of the day, and if any paſs by in the Interim, will turn their bare Backſides upon them, but will hide their Faces; and this at Sun-riſe and Sun-ſet every day they do in Droves; Men by themſelves, and Women by themſelves; if in the City, moſt an end, under dead Walls, where when they have finiſhed, they waſh the Filth off with their Left Hand, becauſe they feed themſelves with the Right. The Moors think hard of them for this Freedom; nor do they conceive a better Opinion of our Women, when they ſee an Engliſhman ſalute them with a Kiſs, or walk together in a Garden to take the Innocent Diverſion there: So that the Jealouſy of the Moor muſt not reflect on the Modeſty of our Indian Women.

And Cleanlineſs.

As ſoon as they are gone, the Cows come and lick up their Ordure (which they watch for), being nothing but Herbs, Roots, or Pulſe, digeſted without any other mixture either of Fleſh or Strong Drink: If they unload themſelves out of the Town, they make towards the River-ſide, or Brinks of their Ditches, and leave a filthy Stink behind them, notwithſtanding they eat nothing Carnous, which remains upon their Excrements; and for that reaſon it is ſomewhat ſtrange the Kine ſhould be ſo fond of them: And hence is it that in their Streets, and near the Towns and Cities, it is but ill taking the Air. Yet however Natural this becomes to them, as well as the reſt of Mankind, they are not in this particular to be taxed with Sloth and Sluttery in reſpect of their Bodies; for beſides their conſtant Waſhings at the Times of their Devotion, they never eat nor drink before they have cleanſed themſelves with Water poured all over them from Head to Foot; nor will they ſuffer their ſecret Parts to harbour any Naſtineſs, they uſing Depilatories for Breaſt, Arm-pits and Groins, are always ſhaving their Heads and Beards, cutting their Nails, waſhing their Mouths, and rubbing their Teeth, whereby they look like Ivory.

Their Waſhers and other Craftſmen work well for little Money.

And ſince Cleanlineſs is the next in eſteem to Godlineſs in Human Society, I will conclude with their Waſhers, which are Women as well as Men; they are hired at eaſy Rates, and are the beſt in the World, as our Calicuts tranſmitted hither declare; they have each a little Pit, into which the Water ſprings, and near it a great ſmooth Stone, on which they beat their Cloaths till clean; and if for Family mily-uſe, ſtarch them with Congee, and ſo carry them home when dried; if for Sale, they lay them a Whitening, and after Congee or ſtiffen them, and ſo deliver them to the Packers, Labour being to them inſtead of Soap, for were they at much Expence therein they could not live, their Pay being inconſiderable. And by this ſmall Taſte of their unweariedneſs in Pains-taking, their Cheapneſs of every thing, and their faring hard, all their other Craftſmen may be valued, who work for nothing, comparatively with our Europeans; though in many things they exceed them for Curioſity, as in ſtaining of Calicuts, and fine Work either in Gold or Silver. Chap. VI.

The Language

At Court is Perſian, that commonly ſpoke is Indoſtan (for which they have no proper Character, the written Language being called Banyan) which is a mixture of Perſian and Sclavonian, as are all the Dialects of India: A good Argument to me of the peopling the World this way originally from the Scythian Mountains after the Deluge; their Speech containing many Words agreeable enough to ours in Sound, as well as Figure; more Scraps whereof may be found when we come to Perſia.

The World peopled after the Flood from Scythia.

CHAP. VII.

COLLECTIONS OF THE Coins, Weights, and Precious Stones, Uſual in thoſe Places of Trade within the Charter of the Honourable Eaſt-India Company.

Coins of Surat, Amadavad, Agra, &c. in India.

THere are divers ſorts of Coins in Gold, ſeldom uſed in Payments among Merchants, ſome of a greater, others of leſſer Value; ſo alſo in Silver; but the Rupee is the moſt ordinary, whereof there are;

RUPEES { Cazzanace, Hundea, Magarree, Chillannee, } All valued at Mamoodoes 2 ¼; the latter is of greater Weight, but courſe.

MAMOODOES are current only in Surat, and Parts adjacent; they are worth ſomewhat leſs than an Engliſh Shilling, but are ſo accounted in the Company's Books; and among Merchants in the Countrey, 2 ¼ Mamoodoes is reckoned a Rupee. Yet to change Mamoodoes into Rupees, there is ſometimes given 3, ſometimes 8 or 10 Mamoodoes on the 100 Rupees, according to their Plenty or Scarcity, or as the Governor or Banyans pleaſe to advance the Cambio, which is called among them Vattaw: In Anno 1663. was given 20 Mam. per Cent.

PICE, a ſort of Copper-Mony current among the Poorer ſort of People; of theſe, ſometimes 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 19, to 24, make, or are reckoned to a Mamoodoe; therefore becauſe they riſe and fall, the Company's Accounts are kept in Book-rate Pice, viz. 32 to the Mam. and 80 Pice to the Rupee, for that without any reaſon the Rupee is by the Accomptant rated at 2 ½ Mam. whereas if it were rated at Mam. 2 ¼ per Rupee, then in Book-rate the Rupee would fall to be 72 Pice.

As in Anno 1660, 61, 62, 63, when Copper was dear.

Weights and Meaſures of Surat, Agra, &c.

The Surat Maund was formerly 18 Pice to the Sear of 40, and made 33 l. Averdupois: At preſent it is 40 Sear, of 20 Pice the Sear, which is 37 l.

The Maund Pucka at Agra is double as much, where is alſo the Maund Ecbarry, which is 40 Sear, of 30 Pice to the Sear, whereby Indico, Silks, and other fine Goods are ſold.

M^d Surat, 40 S^r, is 37 l.

Elephants Teeth.

Elephants Teeth of Mozambique, are bought per Weight, whereof are three ſorts, viz.
Muyn, ſuch are the greateſt, free from Flaws.
Muyda, which are the leſſer, or the great ones with Flaws.
Sera, the leaſt, or worſt ſort.

The Weights by which they are bought, are Baharrs and Fraßlees; each Baharr 20 Fraßlees, each Fraßlee 12 l. and they call the Baharrs Groſs.
Of Muyne, ½ Baharr of 20 Fraßlees, makes 1 Baharr Groß.

Directions for Knowledge of Bezoar-ſtones, &c.

BEZOAR.

THE Monkey Bezoars which are long, are the beſt; thoſe that are rough prove commonly faulty, breaking with Stones in the middle: Others in form of Tares, ſomewhat flat, which break in ſmaller Stones in the middle, are better than the rough ones. Bezoar is tried ſundry ways: As the rubbing Chalk upon a Paper, then rubbing the Stone hard upon the Chalk, if it leave an Olive-Colour it is good. Alſo touch any with a Red-hot Iron, which you ſuſpect becauſe their Colour is lighter than ordinarily they uſe to be, and if they fry like Reſin or Wax, they are naught. Sometimes they are tried by putting them into clear Water, and if there ariſe upon them ſmall white Bubbles, they are good, and if none, they are doubtful. The uſe of the Hot Iron is eſteemed infallible.

MOSK.

It is beſt to buy it in the Cod, for ſo it will be preſerved; that which openeth with a bright Mosk Colour is the beſt, and will yield per Ounce. When taken out of the Cod, if a little being chawed, and rubbed with a Knife on clean Paper, do look ſmooth, bright, or yellowiſh, it is probably good, but if the Colour be as it were mixed with Gravel, it is bad. The Goodneſs is beſt diſcerned per Scent.

AMBERGREECE.

The Grey is beſt; for Trial thereof, if a little be chewed, and yield an odoriferous Fragor, feeling in ſubſtance like Bees-Wax, then it is good, otherwiſe not.

The DIAMOND

IS the hardeſt, and when Cut, the moſt beautiful of all Stones; in knowledg whereof there is great difficulty, having a Cruſt on them before they are Cut; therefore Caution is to be uſed in buying them, before-hand to make a Patern in Lead: Their Waters are White, Brown, Yellow, Yellow, Blue, Green, and Reddiſh; whereof take notice, rating them according to their Waters: In our Climate the perfect White Water is moſt eſteemed. Chap. VII.

Rough, Brute, or Uncut Stones, are in Value half the Price of Cut, or Poliſhed Stones. Brute Stones.

Neither the Thick nor too Thin in Subſtance is beſt; a Thick Stone, which is high and narrow Table, not making a ſhew anſwerable to its Weight, muſt be valued at leſs than that which is well ſpread, hath its Corners perfect, and a pure White Water: Without Spots or Foulneſs, is called a Paragon-ſtone, and in full Perfection. Of Perfection.

Uncut Stones are diſtinguiſhed into two ſorts, Thick or Pointed, which are called Naiſe-ſtones, and Flat Stones: The Flat Stones are to be cut into Roſes or Thin Stones, the Naiſe into Thick Stones; and thoſe Rough Stones which will bear a good ſhape, without leaſt diminiſhing in cutting, are in beſt Eſteem.

The Names of Rough Stones, according to their Forms and Subſtance.

A Point.

An ½ Point.

A Thick Stone.

An ½ Ground Stone.

A Thin Stone.

A Roſe Stone, if round; if long, a Foſſel.

A Naiſe.

The Rough Diamonds that ſeem Greeneſt, prove of a good Water when cut; and thoſe that ſeem White when rough, prove often Bluiſh being cut.

Care is to be taken likewiſe in Choice of Rough Diamonds, to avoid thoſe that have Veins, for they will never cut well, ſeeming as if they were filed with a rough File.

For vending, Stones of ſix Grains and under, to one and a half, are beſt.

For Trial of a Diamond, take a Pointed Diamond, ſuch as Glaziers uſe, try it on any Stone but a Diamond, and it will cut the ſame.

The Diamond that is Sandy, or hath any Foulneſs in it, or is of a Blue, Brown, or Yellow Water, is not worth half the Price of a perfect Stone of a White Water.

For cutting of Diamonds, you muſt never mould any Diamond in Sand or Cuttle-bone, but you muſt uſe the ſecond Lead to make a Patern of, becauſe the firſt will come ſomewhat leſs than the other.

Never caſt it off but of the perfect Lead; for if you ſhould caſt it with Tin, it being the lighter Metal, you may wrong your Judgment thereby, but in Lead you will find the Experiment to be good; viz.

Take the Mould of the Stone you would buy, which having moulded, caſt it off in perfect Lead, then make a Patern of it; but before you go about to make a Patern (of the Stone you would cut) weigh the Lead, and and ſet down the Weight in a Piece of Paper; then form the Piece of Lead to what faſhion you think beſt and moſt advantagious to the Stone; then re-weigh the Lead ſo formed, and ſetting down the Weight, you may find what the Stone will loſe in cutting. The Lead will weigh three times as much as the Stone, which is a ſure Rule; and commonly it loſeth one third part in cutting.

Letter IV.

To make Diamonds clean; if you ſee a thick Table Diamond in a Ring, a Jewel, or in a Collect for a Jewel, you muſt firſt make it clean either with a little Pumice-ſtone, or with a few hot Aſhes, or with a little Oyl, and boil it, which will make it very clean.

Valuation of Diamonds.

There is a Rule acurately to be obſerved, which is this; A Stone of one Carrack is worth 10 l.; to value 2 Carr. multiply per 2, which makes 4, and that 4, per 10, the Price of 1 Carr. which makes 40 l.: So for 3 Carr. 3 times 3 is 9 Carr. and 9 times 10 l. is 90 l. This for even Carracks comes neareſt the true Value; but for $\frac{1}{2}$ or $\frac{1}{4}$ of a Carr. although a Stone of 2 Carr. be worth 40 l. yet in this Rule and way of reckoning (meaning $\frac{1}{2}$ a Carr. ſo valued) it is valued at but $\frac{1}{4}$ of a Carr. which is 50 s. and $\frac{1}{4}$ of a Carr. but at $\frac{1}{4}$ of 50 s. although a ſingle Stone, containing a Grain, or $\frac{1}{4}$ Carr. is worth 30 s. As for Example: You would know what a Stone of 6 Grains is worth; 6 Grains is 3 $\frac{1}{2}$ Carr. 3 times 3 is 9, and 9 times 50 s. is 22 l. 10 s. which is the Value of the Stone of 6 Grains. So of 5 Grains, 5 times 5 is 25, and 25 times 12 s. 6 d. is 15 l. 12 s. 6 d.

To make a Foil for Diamonds.

A Foil to be ſet under a thick Table Diamond, is to be made with Black Ivory and Maſtick, picked and made very clear, with a very little Oyl of Maſtick to incorporate them.

Black Ivory and Turpentine heated on the Fire is good, but the former is better.

For a thin Table, Black Ivory ſcraped very fine is good; or take a little of the ſaid Ivory with a little Oyl of Maſtick, and dry the ſame; or Ivory with a little Gum; fair Water is alſo very good.

If you ſell a thin Diamond that hath high Biſalls, then you may ſet it upon full ſcraped Ivory, which graceth the Play of the Stone.

A Roſe Diamond that is very thick, it's good to ſet it cloſe upon the Ivory, and it will play very well; or Black Velvet is good under a thin Table-Diamond, ſcraped as you do Lint.

The RUBY.

There are four ſorts of Oriental Rubies; that which is the hardeſt, the beſt, and faireſt Colour, if it be very fair and cut Diamond-Cut, is no leſs eſteemed than a Diamond for the Weight, (or of the ſame Weight), but it is rare to ſee ſuch an one.

The ſecond ſort of Ruby is White, Oriental, and Hard, which alſo is of good eſteem, if cut of a Diamond-Cut, but not of ſo high Price as the perfect Red Ruby; but yet if it be in Perfection, 'tis very rare, becauſe there are but few of this ſort.

The third ſort of Ruby is called a Spinell, which is ſofter than the former, and is nothing of like eſteem, becauſe not ſo hard, neither hath it the Life of the other, nor of ſuch perfect Colour; it's naturally ſomewhat greaſy in cutting, becauſe of its Softneſs.

the

The laſt ſort is called a Ballace Ruby, which is not in ſo much eſteem as the Spinell, becauſe it is not ſo well coloured: This alſo is a Stone naturally greaſy, and will ſcarce take a Poliſh: This looks like a Garnet.

SAPHIRE.

There are three ſorts, one perfect Blue, and very hard, which if cut of a Diamond-Cut, and without Calcedone, is of very good Eſteem, and worth a good Price, if it be in perfection.

The ſecond is perfect White, and very hard, which if without blemiſh, Diamond-Cut, is likewiſe in Eſteem.

The third, called Water-Saphires, are of ſmall Eſteem, being not ſo hard as the other, and commonly of a dead Wateriſh Colour; they are of a ſlender Value.

CORNELIANS.

Cornelian Rings, of pure Red Colour, without ſpots:
Seal-ſtones of the bigneſs of 6 d. or 1 s. well coloured, are eſteemed.

TREE-STONES.

Stones with the lively Repreſentation or Form of a Tree thereon, are eſteemed.

EMERALD

Is a Stone of good account, and if in Perfection, 'twill bear a very good Price, eſpecially if it be cut Diamond-Cut, which is very rare; for naturally they are foul, and ſofter than the Saphire or Ruby.

There is a paler ſort, but not affected, being baſe.

The TOPAZ

Is a Stone very hard, full as hard as the Saphire; ſome are very yellow, and like the Colour of Muskadine, pleaſant to look on, which bears a good Price if good and without fault. The Stones may be burnt white in the Fire, and look very well. Another ſort are ſaid to be white naturally, which would bear a good Price if perfect, and cut of the Diamond-Cut. There's another ſort of them ſoft, yet ſhew very well, but have not the quickneſs of the other, and therefore of low eſteem; trial of their hardneſs may be made by a Saphire or ſuch a Stone.

The HYACINTH

Is a Stone Yellow and Tranſparent; it's of the hardneſs of the Emerald; theſe Stones are naturally foul, and full of little Sands like Gold; if they be in Perfection, and of a very good Colour, they bear a reaſonable Price.

The

Letter IV.

The AMETHIST

Is a Stone of three ſeveral Colours, ſome of them are of a Violet Colour, ſome are of a more Oriental Colour, therefore called (Amethiſt Oriental) which bears a very good Price, few of theſe being to be found, but are the pleaſanteſt Colour of all Stones. Another ſort being Pale is called the White Amethiſt, or Amethiſt of Carthagena: This naturally is of a quick or ſparkling Water, and very good Colour, having for the moſt part a Bluſh of Red, which Stones in Perfection bear a tolerable Price.

AGATS for Hafts of Knives, white and well marled are good.

TRAVELS

TRAVELS INTO PERSIA.

LETTER V.

CHAP. I.

Of our crossing the Sea to the Persian Gulf, Arrival at Gombroon, and Stay there.

SIR,

THE Agent of Persia representing how highly conducing to the Company's Interest one of my Profession would be there, I was easily won upon to embark on the Scipio African, which with the Persian Merchant were sent out this Year for the Gulf, as well to support the declining Credit of the English there, for not complying with their Articles of Agreement, as to try if a Trade of English Cloth and Tin might be promoted on this Side, as well as in India; but with a fruitless Attempt, as in fit place may be made appear. Chap. I.

The 22d of February, $167\frac{6}{7}$ from Swally-hole the Ship was dispatched alone, and the Persian Merchant sent into the South-Seas; the Council judging it needless to send two such Ships on such an Errand as they could not repeat for the future, without incurring a Reprimand from their Masters: And for the Traffick of that Place, the Scipio African was enough, and more than enough, it only carrying a Gawdy Outside, having Gilt Galleries two Stories, rounded with Banisters after the French Mode, more for Shew than Use; which was taking, till the bottom of the Business was enquired into, Whether it came as by Capitulation, to be a Guard to the Gulf? Which not answering that design, it could expect to be received with a Welcome only suitable to such a Pageantry, and no other. The Scipio African sent to drive a Trade in Persia, not to guard the Gulf.

Letter V.

Whereupon it was laden like a Merchant-man more than a Man of War; though at the ſame time we carried with us a Portugal Fidalgo, Emanuel Mendos, to appear for their Royalties, which are little inferior to ours, they ſupplying our Defects in a conſtant maintaining a Squadron, not ſo much to defend the Perſian, as to annoy the Arab, their ſworn Enemy; yet by that means gain both the Honour and Reputation due only to us, did we not neglect it.

With Emanuel Mendos was ſhipped a Young Friar of the Order of St. Francis, who had undergone the Diſcipline of the Goa Phyſicians with that Severity, that his Mouth was full of backward Bleſſings for their having exhauſted almoſt his Heart-Blood by their unmerciful bleeding him; inſomuch that he ſeemed to have little more left than would ſuffice to make him a walking Ghoſt.

Few Chriſtian Ships without Friars.

There are few Chriſtian Ships on the Seas, or Caphalaes on Shore, move without theſe Paſſengers, they finding not only ſafe Conduct among them, but courteous and inexpenſive Entertainment.

Diu bravely defended againſt the Turkiſh Force.

Having quitted Surat River's Mouth, we kept the Coaſt of India on Board, till we had weathered the Flats of Diu Point, the Eaſtermoſt Point of the Bay of Cambaia, in whoſe Bottom the Mouth of the River Indus opens, and the moſt Northern Fortification the Portugals poſſeſs on this Coaſt, as Ancient and as Strong as any they have. It was ſignally famous for the defeat given Sultan Badur the Emperor of Cambaia, and all his Forces, when at the ſame time it was beſieged by a numerous Fleet of Turks from the Red Sea, as well as Arabs from the Perſian Gulf; thus aſſaulted on all ſides, it ſingly bore the Fury of the Barbarous Nations, till relieved by a Fleet raiſed when the Exchequer at Goa was impoveriſhed, the Militia diſpirited, the Eccleſiaſticks were forced to ſerve as Volunteers, and the Gentry to take up Arms in Perſon, under the Command of Don John de Caſtro, Viceroy; to whoſe Virtue even the Females were ſo devoted, that they willingly parted with their moſt precious Jewels for no other Pawn than an Hair of his Beard; which he held to be ſo ſacred an Obligation, that he could not be ſatisfied till he had redeemed it at the Expence of all his Wealth; ſo that in that profitable Station, lying on his Bed of Sickneſs, he had not left himſelf wherewithal to provide common Neceſſaries.

This City is placed under Twenty one Degrees and an half of North Latitude.

Pirates infeſt all the Indian Seas.

And now launching into the Main Ocean, the Wind at North-Eaſt, we braced our Sails cloſe, in expectation of the Southern Gales, which met us about the Nineteenth Degree of North Latitude, ſooner by Ten degrees than uſual. Here in this large Field of Water the Sindanian Pirates wreak their Malice on the unarmed Merchants, who not long able to reſiſt their unbounded Luſt, become tame Slaves to their lawleſs Rage, and fall from the higheſt Hopes, to the humbleſt degree of Servitude: Theſe are alike cruel, and equally ſalvage as the Malabars, but not ſo bold as to adventure longer in theſe Seas than the Winter's Blaſts have diſmiſſed them, retiring with their ill-got Booty to the Coaſts of Sinda, where they begin to rove nearer their Dens of Thievery, not daring to adventure Combat with the Malabars, or ſtir from thence till the Seaſon makes the Malabar retire. No part of theſe Seas are without theſe Vermin, the Bay of Bengal being infeſted as much as the Coaſt of Coromandel by Outlaw'd Portugals, and a mixture of that Race, the moſt accurſedly baſe of all Mankind, who are known for their Baſtard-Brood lurking in the Iſlands at the Mouths of the Ganges, by the Name of Buccaneers. Of the two former we had often ſight, neither of which ſort were ſo fool-hardy as to come nigh us, being content to gaze on what they durſt not ſeize, and to wiſh us Impotence inſtead of Force.

The Tropick Birds.

When we had made Way Three hundred ſeventy four Miles to the Weſt from the Shore, at Sun-ſet we ſaw the Tropick Birds, which all day long had ſhewn us the Recreation of the Sea, they being a kind of Sea-hawk, and ſomething bigger than a Lannar, mount upon the Train to a lofty Pitch; and ſtooping to their Game (which is the poor Flying Fiſh, when raiſed by thoſe that hunt them in the Water) they perform it at one down-come: When they fly for Pleaſure they are more free than the beſt Falcon: They being now a pretty way from Land, and not to be ſuppoſed to reach it e're dark, 'tis believed they make the Sea their Home, unleſs in moulting time. Here is another ſort follows the ſame Game, but not ſo cautious where they alight, the other being fearful of the devouring Inhabitants of the Deep, but theſe fly cloſe to the Water, and turn about every Wave, ſo that they often eſcape our view, and ſeem to be overwhelmed by the ſwelling Surges, by the Giddineſs of their Flight being oft given over for loſt, when by a pleaſing Surprize they appear, contrary to all hopes: Theſe have White Bodies and Grey Wings, their Beaks are Red, and two Feathers ſtand at diſtance for the Tails, by which they guide themſelves to their Prey. In Calms theſe Birds reſt themſelves upon the drowſy Tortoiſe, ſupinely floating in the Sea, ſo that we could take them by our Long-Boat mann'd, and bring them captive tamely aboard Ship; which was often done, the ſtupid Tortoiſe only lamenting with deep Sighs and piteous Tears the Condition their Heedleſsneſs had brought them into: The Sluggards helpleſs and utmoſt Effort, to bewail what a timely Care and active Endeavours might prevent.

The Cuttle-fiſh.

The Princely Dolphin and the brisker Train, afforded more Sport to take, while they purſued the Chaſe themſelves through the Watry Plains, and more Invention to elude the Crafty Cuttle-fiſh its dark Politicks, if what Geſner writes were true; Stomachi ſeu earum Ventriculi putridâ quadam ſanie quam Græci σπεδόνα dicunt, quâ atrum cruorem atramenti inſtar aquam effundunt quum ſe peti animadvertunt; That it emits a black and cloudy Liquor, to diſturb the cunning Angler; the Truth whereof I could never obſerve; only what was more certainly miraculous, its monſtrous Figure: The Body was of a duskiſh Colour, all one Lump with the Head, without Scales; it was endowed with large Eyes, and had long Shreds like Gorgon's Hair, hung in the manner of Snakes, beſtuck with Snail-like Shells reaching over the Body; under theſe appeared a Parrot's Beak; two Slits between the Neck are made inſtead of Gills for Reſpiration; from the loweſt part of the Spine are taken the Bones Druggiſts ſell for Oſſa Sepiæ; the Inky Matter is bred in the Stomach, if we believe Naturaliſts; to which Conceit Claudius inclining, relates its Tricks;

Naturam juvat ipſa dolis, & conſcia ſortis

Conſcious of her ſhiftleſs Plight,
She Nature helps by Artful Slight.

With the Pleaſure of theſe, and innumerable other Objects of the pliant Elements, we had ſufficient Meditation to admire the diverſity of the World's Creation, which how differing ſoever in Shape, yet agree to compleat a Symphony of Praiſe to the Great Author; and though uttered by an Heathen, yet it was a Divine Saying, Jovis plena ſunt omnia; Productive Nature is all full of God.

Cape Rouſelgaot a Promontory on Arabia Fœlix.

March the 9th we were Weſtward off Cape Rouſelgaot, which lies in Twenty two and an half North: It is that Promontory in Arabia Fœlix which gives Entrance to the Mouth of the Perſian Gulf, and riſes high, being moſt notoriouſly Sandy. This Country in General was deſervedly by the Hebrews called Arabia, ſignifying Barren; yet how ſpeciouſly this part may bear the name of Happy, I determine not. And now we are in the opening of that Gulf, into which Euphrates and other Rivers of leſſer Note diſcharge themſelves.

The Imaum is Caliph.

At Night we ſaw Muſchat, whoſe vaſt and horrid Mountains no Shade but Heaven does hide, though they cover the City with an horrid one; reflecting thence the Heat ſcorching us at Sun-ſetting and aboard Ship; within their fiery Boſom the Pilots find ſecure Harbour for their weather-beaten Ships, the Water moderating the Air. The Prince of this Country is called Imaum, who is Guardian of Mahomet's Tomb, and on whom is devolved the Right of Caliphſhip, according to the Ottoman Belief: Wherefore the Indian Princes of that Perſuaſion ſend every Year Rich Preſents by thoſe Veſſels ſet out to carry Devotees to Mahomet's Tomb, which are wholly his, and at his diſpoſal, whereby he heaps up more Wealth than accrues to him from the Income of his Barren Soil.

Sailing Weſtward, the City and the Caſtle lye open to our View; it is much frequented by Merchants over the Deſerts, and no leſs by thoſe from Mocha in the Red Sea, and by the way of Grand Cairo; it vends all Drugs and Arab Steeds, and pays Gold for Indian Commodities: Here they keep ſafe thoſe Ships they ſteal or purchaſe, for Wood, no Timber growing here: They are a Fierce Treacherous People, gaining as much by Fraud as Merchandize.

Breach of Faith the Loſs of Muſchat.

The Matchleſs Outrages, after Faith plighted, committed in that Place by the Portugals, was not only the Occaſion of their being quite beaten out thence, but of an eternal and irreconcilable Quarrel between them: For where Religion, backed with the greateſt Intereſt, ſtrives for the Prize, I know not whether is moſt concerned, to gain a Conqueſt, or to perpetrate Barbarities, the common Event of ſuch a War, where to kill their Fellow-Creatures is eſteemed a ſervice to the Creator. And thus it proved here; For while that bold Nation perſiſted in its Diſcoveries, Navigation perfecting fecting their Geography, they began to enquire into the courſe of Profit, as well as their Ships way, and found that all their Inland Trade tended to this Sinus and the Red Sea; wherefore they bent themſelves to be Maſters of their Keys that unlocked the World's Treaſures, for which Muſchat, is very commodious, of which becoming Poſſeſſors, had not a too hot Zeal thruſt them on, they might to this day have enjoyed it with a juſt Commendation due to their Induſtry; but ſacrificing to Luſt and Rapin what ſhould have been to the Glory of God and True Religion, which is Pure as well as Peaceable, they ſoon were driven out thence to Ormus; where we ſhall conclude what belongs to this Story.

Enter the Streights of the Perſian Gulf.

In the mean time we had gained the Tropick of Cancer, the very day the Sun had gained the Æquinox; when the North-Weſt Winds envied our entry into the Gulf, and drove us out for Sea-room on the Perſian Coaſt, nearer the Shoars of Sinda, ſo that we ſpent a Week in toſſing up and down, and ſtriving againſt a mighty Stream, before we reached Muſchat again; but then the Winds were ſpent, we calmly paſſed by ſome Iſlands in the Gulf, and a South Wind gently blowing, we ſtemmed the furious Current, till we could ſee on each ſide Land from Perſia and Arabia; on the one ſide St. Jaques his Head-land, on the other that of Muſſendown appeared, and afore Sun ſet we entred the Streights Mouth, not above a League wide: It lies in Thirty ſix Degrees North Latitude; a Mile within its Neck on a row, are Four or Five Rocks, or Iſlets, by Mariners called the Coines; from the reſemblance of thoſe Leavers of the ſame Name, wherewith they raiſe, or lower the Breeches of their Guns.

About Midnight we were between Ormus and Larack, Forty four Miles from the entry of the Streights, the biggeſt not above Four Mile in Length; the leſſer is Ormus; great indeed for Name in time of yore, now only famous for its Clifts of Salt (which though pierced by extream Heat, yet are a cure for the moſt burning Fever, the only known Remedy for ſuch caſes in this Climate) and the Caſtle built by the Portugals, the chief ſtrength of all theſe Seas.

Paſſing both theſe Iſlands, we made Kiſmaſh, and leaving it a-ſtern, we turned off ſhort to the Port of Gombroon, or Bunder Abaſſee; in which Road we found Two luſty Dutch Ships, Two great ones of the Moors, and One ſmall one from Bombaim; it is good Riding for Ships in this Harbour, though an open Road, by reaſon of the firm Anchor-hold; it is otherwiſe ſubject to hot Blaſts from the adjacent Hills, which move the rowling Sands between, in ſuch ſort, that in the ſtation near the ſhoar when theſe are raiſed to Clouds, the Ships cannot be ſeen.

Wafted aſhoar at Gombroon.

The 22[d] of March in the Forenoon we were wafted aſhoar juſt to the Engliſh Factory, the Sea waſhing the very Sand afore its Doors; upon our Landing we were Welcomed with a Civility more eſſential to the Temper of the People, than what could proceed from any Demerits of ours, for they are naturally the moſt Courtly of the Eaſt: So ſtrange an alteration in Three hundred Leagues as paſſes admiration! for whereas we left a Sullen, Melancholy, Sunburnt Nation; an Open, Jovial, and a Clear Complexioned Race of Mankind is offered in exchange.

The

Letter V.

The Houſe the Engliſh reſide in, was formerly a Caravan Seraw, and built after the beſt manner, with upper and lower Piazzo's, flat atop, with a ſtately Portal; where every Morning the Servants belonging to it make a profound Reverence, and the Puritannical Banyan will Kiſs the Threſhold, Adoring that for his God that brings him moſt Profit, though pretended to be done out of reſpect to their Maſters. It bears St. George his Banner at one Corner, as do the Dutch and French their Flags, between whoſe Factories it is ſeated; Ours was the Emperor's Gift, both theirs purchaſed; the firſt Beautified and Strengthened with good Stone Building; all the reſt, but the Caun's, being moſt of Mud and Stone, the uſual Materials for Building in this Town, without either Lime or Mortar.

The Structures.

The Structures are all plain atop, only Ventoſo's, or Funnels, for to let in the Air, the only thing requiſite to living in this fiery Furnace with any comfort; wherefore no Houſe is left without this contrivance; which ſhews gracefully at a diſtance on Board Ship, and makes the Town appear delightful enough to Beholders, giving at once a pleaſing Spectacle to Strangers, and kind Refreſhment to the Inhabitants; for they are not only elegantly Adorned without, but conveniently Adapted for every Apartment to receive the cool Wind within. The Streets are generally Narrow, eſpecially where Merchandiſe are expoſed to Sale, the better to receive the advantages of Umbrello's extended from ſide to ſide to keep the Sun's violence from their Cuſtomers: It reaches more than a Mile along the ſhoar, has Three Block-houſes, and one old Caſtle diſmantled; the other ſtored with Guns, the Portugals left behind them.

The Governor's Palace fronts the Sea, and is a ſtately Manſion; a Mile from the ſame is a Garden as good as can be imagined in this ſandy Deſart; whither the Merchants, as well as the Caun reſort to Feaſt, or upon any publick Solemnity go in Cavalcade for the more pompous obſervation thereof.

The Cuſtom properly belongs Half to the Engliſh.

The Shawbunder has his Grandeur too, as well as receipt of Cuſtom, for which he pays the King yearly Twenty two thouſand Thomands, every Thomand making Three pound and a Noble in our Accompt; Half which we have a Right to, were our Company as good as their words, the Perſians having not failed in theirs before the defection on the part of the Engliſh; which I reſerve for a more proper place; the Agent ſitting content only with one Thouſand Thomands paid out of the Cuſtoms yearly, and the Cuſtom free of all the Agent protects as Engliſh; which was but lately granted, by the earneſt and repeated Requeſt of the preſent Agent, they before only giving us good words inſtead of Payment.

The Chief Cuſtomer obliged to ſecure the Roads.

This great Officer, or Farmer of the Emperor's Cuſtoms, is obliged on the Roads to provide for the ſafe Travelling for Merchants by a conſtant Watch, inſomuch that they are in no fear either of Robbers or Loſs of Goods, they upon entry into the Cuſtomhouſe being ſecured through the Kingdom without Oppreſſing the Subject, the Shawbunder being obliged to make ſatisfaction; for which Rhadorage, or high Impoſts, are allowed by the Merchants, both at Landing and in their paſſage Inland.

From

Chap. I.

The English Free of all Impoſts.

From which we have Immunities, the Agent only Preſenting an handſome Piſcaſh, to the ſeveral Cauns in his Journy, of Europe Rarities, placed to the Company's Account; and in requital have Proviſions of Fruits and all other Neceſſaries, ſent in Gratis to the Agent, though the Company pay dearly for the Civility, while the Agent is only Benefitted thereby; they carrying not only Goods, but great returns of Money unmoleſted; for which reaſon the Natives caſt themſelves upon his Management, rather than ſuffer the Exactions of the Rhadarage, for which reaſon the Agent has no ordinary Recompenſe, it being the chief Emolument of his Place: The Natives ſtill paying their Reſpect to his Character, which is, one of the Emperor's Friends, not daring to Offend him whom the King delighteth to Honour.

And therefore it is that at Port no ſmall care is taken to carry fair with the Governor of the Province, (who is a Caun, or Duke) and the Shawbunder; and on this ſcore we were no ſooner on ſhoar, but we muſt Compliment both theſe, where we were received in their open places of Audience, and entertained with Coho, Tea, or Roſe-Water, Boiled with Cardamoms, and ſweetned with Sugar-Candy, Plates of Perſian Fruit dried, and Sweetmeats; while the Room is Perfumed with Rackbeet, a Compound Sweet Water, Wood of Aloes ſmoaking, or Glaſſes of Roſe-Water poured on our Garments to exceſſive ſlabbering; and if leave be deſired to Smoak Tobacco, they will offer Wine of the Country, and at laſt diſmiſs us with Pawn; which Viſit they fail not to return, nor muſt it be forgotten to beſtow on them Preſents of conſiderable Value. The Rooms are ſpread with Carpets as in India, and they have Pigdans, or Spitting Pots of the Earth of this Place, which is valued next to that of China, to void their Spittle in.

The Water is preſerved in Jarrs, and drank out of Puckeries, that keep it Cooler than any where elſe.

The Hollanders Abſolute in the Spice Trade.

This Port receives moſt Ships going or coming from Buſſerah, as they find the Markets anſwer their deſigns: But the greateſt Traffick, next Indian Cloth, comes from the Spice Trade; which the Dutch engroſs, beſide Sugar and Copper formerly; for which they carry off Fifty thouſand Thomands worth of Velvets, Silk, Raw and Wrought, with Rich Carpets, beſides many Tunn of Gold and Silver, Yearly; ſo Great and Abſolute is their Trade from the Moluccoes, and South Sea, hither, that they are reported to have brought Six Ships laden with Spice, which the cunning Merchants thought to make advantage of; but the Hollanders, being Crafts-Maſters, ſent for the Cargo on ſhoar of Two Ships, and piled it up before the Factory Gate, where they not coming to their Price immediately, ſet Fire thereto, and conſumed it all; which the Buyers neglecting, or laughing at, they cauſed other Two to be ſerved in the ſame manner, knowing ſo great a quantity had cauſed a Glut, when they asked the ſame Rate for the remaining Two; as the old Sybils did Tarquin for their Oracular Writings left unburnt; whereby the Perſians were Taught, that their Extravagance was not Madneſs, but Policy, they being obliged to Bid Higher for fewer Commodities; the Hollanders landers being well assured none could furnish them with others than was brought by them.

Letter V.

The English Trade more in Shew than Reality.

The English Company's Trade is but small here, only carrying off some few Drugs, Carmania Wool, Goats, Dates, and Horses; though they make it worth their while to keep their Agent in good Port, as well from the Allowance from the Shawbunder, as by Consulage of 2 l. and ½ per Cent. for all Foreign Goods that seek their Protection; on which score they seem to drive a Trade, and send up every Shipping Three or Four hundred Camels laden with Indian Wares; as many as the Dutch bring down to Ship off on their own Stock and Ships: But this Year a great Bluster was made with English Cloth and Tin brought by our Arrival; which, however, the understanding Traffickers smile at, knowing it comes better Cheap by the Caphala's in Exchange of other Goods from Stambole, i. e. Constantinople, Smirna, Scanderoon, and Aleppo; and that Suffahaun is already over-full of London Cloath, or Sackcloath Londre, as they call it.

The French have nothing to do.

The French have as little to do at this Port as in other Places; and were it not for the Credit of their Interpreter, who gets good Profit by Wine, (he being priviledg'd with a Wine-press for that Nation at Siras, as well as the other Europe Nations), they could not subsist: But Monsieur makes an outside, lives retiredly, and without more Business than to visit and be visited (which Courtesy passes interchangeably among the Christians as well as Natives) lounges his time away.

The convenient Situation of our Factory Butting fartheſt out on the open Strand, yields a Prospect over the Sea to the Arabian Coast, and on a clear day Ormus Castle might be discovered by the naked Eye, it being not above a League from our House, as all the Islands interspersed in this Gulph; though the most diverting was of our Europe Sailors mounting their Starts or Asses, the briskest, neatest, and nimblest of that kind I ever saw; so that they seemed both by their Mettle and easiness of their going, to lose the Epithet of dull affixed to their Nature: For their Masters waiting here their Fare, no sooner had left them to the Guidance of the Seamen, who would prove their Skill in Riding, where many times they would cast them on the Sand, both to the Sport of the Standers-by, and Mirth of their Companions; letting them know a Yard was more squared for their Cavalcade, than these Headstrong Creatures: Though for this Diversion afforded from the Seamen on their accustomed Element, they are quit, when these Asses forsake their surer Footing on Land, to stagger on board Ship; which was often attempted for the Gilded Outside of the beautiful Scipio, where the Captain entertained the Governor and all his Train, and as many as would venture out of Curiosity the Laughter of the Roguy Mariners: Till on the 15th of April, 1677. it returned to the Indian Coast; but not before the Sailers had stigmatized this Place for its Excessive Heat, with this sarcastical Saying, That there was but an Inch-Deal betwixt Gomberoon and Hell.

The Scipio dispatch'd for India.

The excessive Heats.

And to speak truth, when the raging Dog-star reigns with us, it is not half so hot as it is now here; wherefore all People of any Quality are preparing to leave this Place; and the Caun had been gone

gone e're now, had not the King ſent him a Collat or Robe of Honour, he having by his Male-Adminiſtration of his Office not long ago provoked his Maſter; for which, large Sums of Money have hardly made Attonement, even to his utter Impoveriſhment, had he been diſplaced as he expected. But a Goloomy Shaw, or Meſſenger, arriving with the joyful News of his Reſtoration, he invited all the City to be a Witneſs of this Grace.

The manner of receiving a Meſſage from the Emperor.

The Goloomy Shaw ſtaid at the Garden without the City ſome days at the Expence of the Caun, till things could be provided for his Reception, which was thus; Early in the Morning the loud Trumpets and Drums gave notice that the Caun and all his Troops were ready to take Horſe, and waited the Attendance of all Ranks to the chief Moſque, thence to the Garden; where coming and ſeeing the Meſſenger with the King's Letter advanced on the Top of his Turbat, with his Back towards the Caun, he alights, and after Three Obeyſances and Thrice kiſſing the Ground, he approaches and takes it in his Hand, ſealed up in a Sarbaff Bag, or Cloth of Gold, and firſt kiſſing it, gives it to the Mullah, or Chief Prieſt, when he retires to Prayers, and veſts himſelf with the Robe of Honour; in which time all ſeat themſelves in a decent Poſture, and at his appearance riſe till the Mullah have read the Emperor's Pleaſure, when every one pays him their Congratulations, and after a Diſh of Coho or Tea, mounting, accompany him to his Palace; the Ships in the Road on this Occaſion diſcharging their great Guns, and the ſeveral Forts and Blockhouſes ſaluting him as he paſſes: Where alighting, a Noble Banquet, and truly Perſian, was uſhered in, to which the ſly Banyans were invited with the reſt; who durſt not but be preſent, though only to make their Honours, and return; for they will not eat with any but their own Tribe, leſt they ſhould be defiled: Yet here they live not ſo exactly up to their Pythagorean Rule, as they of Guzerat do, though the very next Neighbours to them, coming from the Province of Sinda; for theſe indulge themſelves in Goats-Fleſh, Sheep, Pullen, and almoſt every thing but Cows-Fleſh, for which they willingly pay 350 Thomands Yearly, to ſpare them alive; and for this reaſon is it the Shambles have none; but of every thing elſe, both Fleſh and Fiſh, here is as great Plenty as the World has beſides.

Plenty of Food.

The Oyſters of this Gulph are the beſt, next the Britiſh; which I purpoſe to treat of in their turn. Amidſt this Fulneſs of every thing, it is wonderful to conſider where they fetch them, or how they are bred; for theſe Sandy Meadows produce little more than Shrubs (neither Graſs nor Corn being to be ſeen near this Town); yet on theſe, both Goats, Sheep, Oxen, and Camels, Mules, and Aſſes, brouze and grow fat; were not the Food of the Commons Dates (which this Soil is propereſt for) and Fiſh, and ſo the Merchant is furniſhed for his Money good cheap.

Their Water.

The Water ſerving this Town generally, is of two ſorts; the firſt and moſt brackiſh ſtrained through the Sands into Pits from the Sea, with which they boil Meat, and give it their working Cattle to drink; the other is immediately from the Heavens, reſerved in Ciſterns built by the Charity of well-diſpoſed Perſons; out of which, the Poor, the Covetous, and Slaves, the Flocks and Herds too, are often ſupplied, when a plentiful Rain has made them overflow. For here are neither Freſh-Water Rivers nor Springs to be found nigher than four Pharſangs (whither the Rich load an Aſs, Mule, or Camel, and ſend a Servant to fetch every day's Store); ſo that did they not lay up ſuch Proviſions Yearly, they would ſubſiſt very poorly. Theſe Ciſterns or Storehouſes for Rain are digged out of the Ground deep into the Earth, beyond the Surface of the Sand, and are curiouſly covered above with Stone, and plaſtered within with excellent durable Plaſter; ſome Spherical, others Tranſverſe, cutting one another in manner of a Croſs; others, and the largeſt, Oblong, Square, Orbicular, or Oval; which being once finiſhed, like their Caravan Seraws have no Endowment to maintain them, either to keep them clean, or from falling to Decay; ſo regardleſs are they of Futurity, that no one is ſuffered to repair them: On which account it is, that about their great Cities ſo many of all ſorts are found, newly built, ſuperannuated, defiled, (which they eſteem ſo, if either Man or Beaſt have dropped in and been drowned), unfrequented, and full of Naſtineſs; ſo pervicaciouſly Vainglorious, that they will have the Repute of an entire Founder, or none.

Letter V.

It rains but twice a Year, and then not long.

To repleniſh which, two Seaſons ſhower down their Benedictions; the one about this time in May or June, and the other at or near Chriſtmas; and then not of a long continuance, by reaſon the intenſe Heat of the Sun permits not the Vapours to condenſe themſelves into Clouds, but expands them into Air: For this cauſe is it that the Rains do not always fall, or if they do, more ſparingly in this Month than in December; which gives more opportunity by its Retrograde Courſe, and longeſt diſtance from this Circle, than when that great Luminary approaches neareſt.

The Winds.

The Periodical and ſtated Winds of the Gulph are the Northweſt, by the Inhabitants termed Shemauls, which begin when the Cowſhees or South-Eaſt leave off, which is not before the Heats are entred, when the Shemauls blow from the Sea to aſſwage them; this Climate, otherwiſe uninhabitable, would become more miſerable than the Veſuvian Plains, or Tops of Ætna, ſince it is not above Three Degrees and an half beyond the Tropick of Cancer, towards the Artick Pole, and floored with vaſt Sands pent in by the ſurrounding Sprouts of Taurus and Imaus continued hither: By either of theſe Winds when they blow impetuouſly, the Sands are whirled about, to the obſcuring of the Day, and burying all alive in darkneſs, as Proſper Alpinus relates to happen ſometimes in Egypt; which, as he obſerves, occaſions ſore Eyes and Blindneſs in all Sandy Regions, from the inflammable Particles kindled by the Sun-beams ſtriking on the Sands, which here is verified in an high degree on the Natives; nor are they leſs afflicting to Strangers newly arrived, chafing and fretting their very Skin to Rawneſs, and then vexing them by their freſh aſſailing with Botches and Blanes. To theſe Winds we may add the Diary, or Terrheneos from the Mountains, which breathe a gentler Air all the Morning, hardly curdling the Ocean; in the Afternoon ſtronger from the Sea, refreſh the Fiery Plain.

The moſt unhealthy of theſe are the South-Eaſt, for that then the Air is thicker, by reaſon of the Seas Vicinity, and the Sun's departure ture towards its Southern Progreſs; for upon its return the Skies do clear, and the Clouds, which uſed to hang about the Mountain-tops till Mid-day, vaniſh earlier at the Sun's approach; whereupon this Climate is not ſubject to the greater part of Diſtempers a more Watry Country may abound with; though it be to ſome; to wit, to Rheumatiſms, Numbneſs, and Periodical Fevers, ſuch as are Tertians and Quartans, but chiefly to Quotidians; rarely incident to Dropſies; oftner obnoxious to Jaundice, Obſtructions of the Spleen, Meſentery, and Windineſs of the Hypochondrias: They dread not a Lask, but are concerned when they cannot go to Stool.

The Inland ſtifling hot.

The Fury of theſe were not over at our Arrival; to avoid which I was forced in the beginning of May to betake my ſelf to Aſſeen, a Country Village Three Miles from Gombroon, than which it is not much better, only remoter from the Sea, wherefore it labours under the Incommodity of a ſtifling Air, it being ſo near the Hills that the free Blaſts are thereby intercepted; only it enjoys a greater benefit of limpid Water, for which it is highly valuable; and by the Induſtry of the Hinds ſome things do ſprout here, and the Date-Trees are nouriſhed by the unwearied drawing of Water, which flouriſh the better for their Pains.

The conſtant Din of a great many at this Work together, like the creeking of ſo many Cart-Wheels ungreas'd, afford the Sick little Reſt; and without this obſtreperous Noiſe no Water could be had; for they uſe only the Indian Wheel, drawn up and let down by Oxen, with as little Intermiſſion Day or Night, as Syſiphon's repeated Trouble is reported.

Locuſts come in Armies.

In the day, beſides the Heat and Sands, the Winds brought with them another Plague, the Locuſts, to benight the day, and fly in Armies to devour the Greens wheree're they find them, gnawing the Palms and other Trees, both Leaf and Fruit, ſpreading where they alight as thick as Bees drove out to ſwarm a new Colony; no other Charm than Fire can expel this Peſt, when kindled with Wiſps and withered Boughs they run up and down from Tree to Tree, making an hideous Clamour, yet ſcarcely make them leave, where they once beſet: Thus Salamander-like theſe People live in Fire, making a Remedy of their Diſeaſe; for here all things ſeem as if they had undergone a General Conflagration, or that Phœbus with his Solar Rays had like another Phaeton ſcorched this part of the World; or rather this unhappy Soil retains the Curſe of Adam's Fall, for being once ſo nigh that Terreſtrial Paradiſe; concerning which I am not ignorant that it is left undetermined among Divines, and for that cauſe there is always adminiſtred matter of diſpute to the Interpreters of Geneſis. Elias the Thesbite is poſitive that the Garden of Eden is ſtill in being, not doubting many ſtill go thither, and that the Paſſage to it lies eaſy and open, but that overcome with the Delights thereof they never care to return. Origen and Philo, tenacious of their Allegories, have fancied a Myſtical Paradiſe, the true Ideas of Plato; and are imitated therein by Pſellius, who ſays, that Chaldean Pardyſe (ſo he calls it) Εμπυρία καλὴ τῶν δημιουργικῶν πηγῶν, is nothing elſe but a Choir of the Heavenly Virtues which illuſtrate the Ætherial Father, and the Rays of Holineſs flowing from the firſt

This Earth accurſt for the ſake of Adam.

Letter V.

Creator. Some ſituate this contended-for Place in Meſopotamia; others in India, between both which we now are; but there remains the difficulty of reconciling the Four Rivers, which admits of no other ſubterfuge than to have recourſe to the General Inundation.

But I leave this, and proceed to acquaint you, that nothing is left here but a ſenſible Map of Purgatory, if that may pleaſe ſome to be a Road to Paradiſe; to ſee how the Fiery Element makes the Mountains gape, the Rocks cleft in ſunder, the Waters ſtagnate, to which the Birds with hanging Wing repair to quench their Thirſt; for want of which the Herds do low, the Camels cry, the Sheep do bleat, the barren Earth opens wide for Drink, and all things appear calamitous for want of kindly Moiſture; in lieu of which, hot Blaſts and Showers of Sand infeſt the purer Air, and drive not only us, but Birds and Beaſts to ſeek remoter dwellings, or elſe to periſh here; for which purpoſe 'tis familiar to behold the Crows and Sparrows take their flight to Upland Countries, as alſo Dogs and other Vermin to remove, to avoid the Tyranny of this Seaſon.

The Caun and Shawbunder were gone before us; at length by their Example we left the Port, tho it was not before the latter end of June.

The Caun of Bunder

The Governor of this Province is ſtiled the Caun of Bunder Abaſſæ, either for the ſtore of Abaſſes ſhipped off here, or that it more immediately reſpects the Abaſſeen Countrey than any other: The adjacent Iſlands, with the Soldiery, are annexed to his Juriſdiction; though Northweſt beyond Gombroon his Rule extends not far, nor much Inland, yet along the Gulph to its very Mouth he poſſeſſes a large Tract of Ground for many Leagues together: His Metropolis is Gombroon, where he reſides till the ſoultry Summer makes him fly beyond the Hills, to breathe in cooler Air. Which we betook our ſelves to, after I had returned from Aſſeen, whither I went for the ſake of the Water, as welcome to our parched Throats, as a drop of that cool Liquor to the importunate Dives, who was involved in the Center of thoſe Flames which we on the Brink of the Abyſs only had a Taſte of.

Sent us a Preſent of Apples candied in Snow in the middle of the Heats.

Nor was a Preſent at this time from the Caun, of Apples candied in Snow, leſs grateful, though more feaſible, the Meſſenger being impowered, for all the ſcorching Gulph interpoſed, at Night to bear them to us; and by Break of Day we drank a Glaſs of Wine quenched with a Lump of Snow and Ice, to the Caun's Health. Nor had we leſs hope to paſs this dreadful Lake of Sulphur, ſince he had ſent us a Token of his diſcovery of a more Temperate Climate, by a Fruit not unknown to us (Genetins), being Natives of a calmer Region; with theſe we cheated our Thirſt for a while: In the mean time it fared not much better with us, than with thoſe groaning under a burning Fever, who by large Draughts endeavour to quench their Appetite, till it enrage the Diſtemper to an higher Fit: For now we ſaw (what before we believed) the tardy Fowls pay for their lingring here, and leave their dead Bodies to be mummied in the Sands: Nor does this proceed from Heat alone, but the Seas nearneſs, which now furrs the Shore with diſcoloured Foam, poyſons the Air as well as its own Inhabitants by its Corruption, ſtaining the Strand with Moſſy Green, and evaporating thence a Noyſome Scent, by the putrifying trifying of Fiſh left dead at the Ebbing Tides. Whence the Air breeds Inſects, their Water-ſtores grow unwholeſome, and a languid Habit ſeizes Human Bodies, diſpoſing them, though not to Scurvies, yet ſomething analogous thereto; for few eſcape without depaſcent Ulcers feeding on their Limbs, which creep out into long Worms our Idioms hardly find a fit Name for, unleſs we may reckon them a-kin to Wolfs, κόμη, Phagadænæ, or Cacoethicks.

Worms breed in their Bodies: How they muſt be treated.

Upon their firſt appearance they carry with them the preſence of Impoſthumations, but preſently after ſuppuration a long white Filament like a ſmall Gut comes forth, which gently caught by the Head is wound on a tender Twig, which while it increaſes is turned round, and fed with Roſe Water, by a Clout dipped therein to keep it moiſt, leſt becoming dry it ſhould dye; this by Congeſtion of Humours cauſes great Pain, and as long as it continues, the Part affected ſwells into an huge Tumor; and if by chance the Worm be broken or ill handled, that it come not entirely forth, it breaks out in other places with more ſevere Symptoms; wherefore great Care is taken to bring it out whole, leſt it ſhould reduce the Patient to a worſe Condition: It is rebellious to all common Medicines, and muſt be nouriſhed with Milk and Butter, or elſe a Poultice of the Patient's own Ordure.

Poultry dye ſuddenly.

At this time alſo the Pullen fare but ill, a Peſt among them killing them without the help of Cookery; nor do the Perſians care much for eating of them; whether ſuſpicious of the Ill Practice of their own Nation, who fancy Diſeaſes gotten of Proſtitutes are drawn out by buggering of them, or out of any other Superſtition, as that Worms and Scorpions are bred in their Guts, I know not; yet this is certain, they are often found to dye ſuddenly.

Here, if the Subtilty of the Enquiry could diſcover any thing to find the Reaſon of this Slaughter, 'twould be worth the while; but a ſimple Putrefaction muſt not bear the blame, for then all living Creatures would fall under the like Fatality, as well Sheep and other Cattle, as theſe; 'tis neceſſary therefore ſome more ſecret and peculiar Cauſe ſhould be rendred; which ſeems to be fairly hinted at by Virgil:

Hic quondam morbo Cœli, miſeranda coorta eſt
Tempeſtas, totoque Autumno incanduit æſtas:
Et genus omne neci pecudum dedit omne ferarum,
Corrupitque Lacus, infecit pabula tabo.

Here once the Air infected, did beget
A Plague which rag'd through the Autumnal Heat;
All kind of Cattel and of Wild Beaſts di'd,
The Graſs was tainted, Rivers putrifi'd.

Which whether it be done by the Influence of the Stars, or diſpoſition of Particles, I diſpute not. Certain it is, the Sun by its Ecliptick Motion determines generally the various Seaſons of the Year, as Summer, Winter, Autumn, and the Spring; yet all Summers are not equally hot and dry, nor do all Winters ſhare of the like Cold and Moiſture;

Letter V. Moiſture; whereupon ſome Summers bring Swarms of Flies and Gnats, others are clear from them; and on this account is it ſo many Armies of Locuſts have invaded theſe Quarters (which though often, is not perpetual), that they have devoured all things as they bud, unleſs where the Husbandmen have drove them away by Fire; ſo that I am willing to incline to the unaccuſtomed Alterations of this Year, which by the more conſtant blowing of the South Winds has filled the Air with a longer time of Moiſture, and thereby impreſſed ſomething more Mortal by ſome unwonted Conjunction of Planets, than other Years: For theſe South-Eaſt Winds as they are the moſt unhealthy, ſo uſed they to be the leaſt durable; but hitherto they have hovered with Clouds without Rain, and kept off the Northern hot ones, which reſtore Health to the too haſty perſpiring Spirits by the dewy Southern Gales.

CHAP. II.

Our ſetting forth from Gombroon, and leaving Lhor.

AT laſt the Heavens drop Fatneſs, and the Showers refreſh the Earth, and fill the Tanks with purer Water, waſhing away the old Filth and Naſtineſs contracted by the former indiſpoſitions of the Seaſons.

The Ceremony at our Departure. And now we having this Opportunity, ſet forward towards the Evening of the 28th of June, the Ships in the Road Saluting us, and the Merchants, both French and Dutch, Conducting us onward of our Way, with Pomp and Ceremony, till we came to the Garden out of the City, where we entertained them with a Sumptuous Treat, and took our Leaves; they returning to Gombroon, and we going on Three Pharſangs that Night to Band Ally, Inhabited only by Poor People, in pitiful Cabbins covered with the Palm-Tree Boughs, by the Sea-ſide, expecting Profit, as well by Strangers as by Fiſhery; theſe Houſes are placed on Wheels, to draw up and down at their Pleaſure.

Band Ally, a Caravan Seraw. Band Ally is the Chaſt Ally, to whom this Caravan Seraw is Dedicated, in the ſame manner as we our Churches and places Sacred, to our Saints in Commemoration of them: Caravan Seraw, ſignifies nō more than an Inn, viz. Se, the Head, Raw, of the Way.

For this Journy we have no Wains for our Baggage, or Chariots for our ſelves; we Ride on Horſeback, and our Sumpters are Loaded on Mules, Aſſes, or Camels, which march toward Evening and Travel till Morning; We go but ſlowly by reaſon of our Beaſts of Burthen, though a greater part of them were diſpatched a Month before us by another Road, leſs Mountainous, though farther about.

GOLFE OF PERSIA

Chap. II.

Coming to our Inns, we have no Hoſt, or Young Damoſels to bid us Welcome, nor other Furniture than Bare Walls; no Rooms Swept, nor Cleanly Entertainment, Tables neatly Spred, or Maidens to Attend with Voice or Lute to Exhilarate the Weary Paſſenger; but inſtead of theſe, Apartments covered with Dung and Filth; Muſick indeed there is of Humming Gnats pricking us to keep an unwilling Meaſure to their Conſort: So that here is neither Proviſion for Man or Beaſt, only an open Houſe, with no enlivening Glaſs of Pontack, or Poinant Cheer to encourage the Badneſs of the March; but every Four or Five Pharſangs, i. e. Paraſangæ, a German League, on the King's High way, a Caravan Ser Raw, as dirty as Augeus his Stable, thoſe before always leaving the next comer work enough to cleanſe where they have been; that after coming in Tired, they are more intent to ſpread their Carpets for Repoſe, than remove the incruſtated Cake of Sluttery, the conſtant Nurſery of Flies and Bees, they often bringing their Horſes into the ſame Bed-Chamber.

Our manner of Travelling, and how Provided.

Theſe Houſes Built by Charitable Perſons, are always ſupplied with Tanks and Ciſterns, which now run over ſince yeſterdays Rain, and are commonly very Fine and Coſtly; but other Commodities we muſt bring with us, otherwiſe we are likely not only to go to Bed on the bare Ground, but depart more Hungry than we came thither (very few Places maintaining Sutlers for Horſe-meat, or Diet for the Wayfaring Man): Therefore when we undertake this Journy, we carry not only all our Family, but Houſholdſtuff too; for which every one has a ſeparate Allowance for his Servant and his Baggage, and a Butler in common, who Mounts the Trojan Horſe, ſupplied with Bread, Wine, Salt, Cold Meat, Knives and Napkins for the Viaticum, in Two Caniſters, or Cheſts hung on each ſide one, under whoſe Belly is girt a Metarrah, or Goat Skin full of Wine, and another of Water; a Metarrah full of the latter every one ties to his Horſes Saddle, in the faſhion of a Leathern Bottel, and a Silver Toſs, or Cup, in a Caſe at the Bow of the Saddle: In the middle of the Munſel (i. e. a whole Day's Journy) the Butler alights, and by ſome advantageous Brook, or Tank, ſpreads a Table on the Ground, while the whole Caphala refreſh: (We generally make our Munſel from Four in the Afternoon till before Four in the Morning) when after a Glaſs of Wine, and the Fragments of yeſterdays Proviſions, we betake our ſelves to Reſt with much eagerneſs, if it be poſſible among ſo many ſtrange Cuſtoms at firſt; as Noiſe of Carriers Bells, Feeding, Neighing, Breying, and Noiſe of ſo many Creatures, Loading and Unloading, with the Singing, Chatting, and Din of Servants, Horſe-keepers and Muliteers; but Cuſtom makes all things familiar and eaſy, that we generally Repoſe till Two the next Day; when our Cook has provided not only our Dinner (which is as Sumptuous as if at Home, and brought in with the ſame Order) but furthermore, our neceſſary Provant for the enſuing Day's Journy; and after this manner are we fitted to meaſure out our future Hardſhips.

The Shotters, or Footmen.

Hither the Banyans, or Engliſh Brokers, Accompanied us, they taking their Leave for the Port, we keeping on our Courſe, Three Engliſhmen

Letter V.

Engliſhmen with our Retinue anſwerable to the Quality of each; we had with us Twenty Camels for Lumber, Fifteen Horſes, Three Mules, and Two Aſſes, beſides Three Shotters for our Guides, which are the only Men here alſo, who wear Plumes of Feathers in their Turbats, ſmall Bells about their Waſtes, Truncheons in their Hands, Horſe-Cloaths over their Shoulders richly Embroidered on Scarlet, Packthread Shoes on their Feet, and cloſe Jerkins with Breeches below their Knees; theſe are our Guides, and hold our Horſes while we Mount, look after them and the Equipments, as Bridles and Furniture, (the moſt mean of which are Silver) when we alight; and are not only ſwift, but laſting Footmen.

Beginning to ſet forward, neither Tract nor Road was followed, all being covered with Sand; but our Guides ſteered by their own Experience; this was not ſo comfortable, to behold nothing but a Sea of Sand; for now we began to turn our back upon the Gulf, and ſteer a more Northern Courſe, from whence to reflect what Suſtenance this barren Earth could produce, that, ſhould our Stores fail, we might want; yet even for this Jealouſy we had not the leaſt ſhadow of Reaſon, for had we been leſs provided we might have met with Plenty, every one ſtriving to Vend us Neceſſaries, to the no ſmall encreaſe of my amazement how they came by them.

Of the Palm-Tree.

After we had waded through Two Pharſangs of this Deſolate Way, we began to Clamber up thoſe Hills, which ſeem hanging over the Road of Gombroon, now beating the Hoof on more ſolid Rocks: In this Paſſage we could here and there deſcry ſome Groves of Palms, whoſe Fruit were tinctured with a Cherry Red, the conſtant forerunner of their full Maturity; at which time they look for the ſame Unhealthineſs we do in our Autumn; though I find them not ſo ſuperſtitiouſly addicted to Symbols, as the Egyptians to their Hieroglyphicks, yet they expreſs the Year by this Tree; becauſe this Tree, ſay they, of all others alone (which I before noted of the Coco-Nut Tree, and therefore I think it a kind of Palm) at every appearance of the New Moon procreates a freſh Branch, by which Twelve Productions the whole Year is reſembled and compleated; the Trees are Tall and Slender, bearing their Boughs all atop, like a ſhady Tuft, ſome ſtanding bolt upright, and others ſpread abroad, with others flagging and ready to give way to the Birth of more; when they are Young and in their Infancy, they no ſooner ſprout up but the prickly Leafs guard its tender Head, which is of a pithy ſubſtance, and when Wounded ſpoils the Trees Growth, ſo that it Dies; but while it eſcapes that danger, it riſes by degrees after the former Order, the under Branches bowing Archwiſe to their upſtart Youngſters; the Leafs are ſet in Rows like Ribs to a great Spine, ariſing from a Circular Baſe, till it end in a ſharp Point; under theſe Boughs the mighty Branches hang full of Dates in Cluſters, and which is more than ſay ſo,

The more they'r Burthened better do they Thrive,
Like depreſs'd Virtue better kept alive.

So patient under great Loads of this Fruit, that they ſeem to rejoyce with with a more chearful Verdure, and unconcerned reject the withered Boughs, whilſt a more lively Product makes them glad by a new Succeſſion; by which means it keeps Green the whole Courſe of the Year. Chap. II.

Nor when the old ones fall, are theſe only fit for the Fire; for they being orderly laid, and finely Gilded or Painted between the Beams of the ſame Wood, ſupply the Ceilings and other Adornments of their beſt Houſes; nor are they leſs ſerviceable to Thatch their meaner Cottages: The Trunk being deprived of thoſe Combings, from the main Head is beheld a flouriſhing Peruke of Palms, fit to be worn by the greateſt Heroes; from whence downwards without any Sprouts, it appears all in Coat of Mail Cap-a-pee, or like a Pine-Apple from its ſcaly Structure, cauſed by the falling of the precedent Branches, by which compactneſs it emulates its Conelike Figure.

Of theſe Trees there are Male and Female, and which is worthy our Notice, the Female Palms (which only Bear) will not Bring forth before they are Impregnated at the Roots with the Seed of the Male, firſt pounded into Meal and ſprinkled about them; which how true I diſpute not; but certainly Tradition has confirmed the Practice, and they are not to be perſuaded to neglect the Cuſtom.

In the midſt of this Days Munſel, among the Mountains we paſſed by the Mouth of an horrid Cave; where they entertain Travellers with Tragick Stories, and a Legend of Fables, as that it is the Road to Hell; for, ſay they, whoever Enters never Returns; as if thence had aroſe the Proverb, No Redemption from the Shades; or that of the Poet, Hell Gate.

——— Facilis deſcenſus Averni;
Sed revocare gradus, hic labor, hoc opus eſt.

Eaſy the Deſcent's to Hell, but back again
Our ſteps to call, this is the Work, the Pain.

But it ſtuck not on my Fancy, who had been informed of Pleaſanter Stages on that Journy, and an higher way to more open Doors.

——— Patet Atri janua Ditis.

Hell Gate wide open ſtands.

But it may more probably be an Invention to fright Paſſengers into the right Way, and that they ſhould avoid, by ſo ſad and terrible a Remark, the wrong, which would wilder them in an unlucky Maze; for here the Way was not only Intricate but Difficult; whereby I was encouraged to auſpicate a more Cœleſtial Path might lead us to Getche, in the Turkiſh Language ſignifying a Goat Village; which was on Wheels, as the other, being not Twenty Miles diſtant; it is in a Sandy Valley full of Shrubs, on which the Camels Feed, but the Aſſes, Mules, and Horſes, on Barly and chopt Straw; [the Perſians learn'd the Indians how to Treat their Horſes; where having declared Getche a Village on Wheels.

Letter V.

declared the manner, I forbear here, it being exactly the same] for these Eight or Nine Munsels they care not to House them, but only Cover them with Tawpengees, or Horse-Cloths, and expose them to the open Air; which is not so Unhealthy for them, as for Human Bodies, who carefully prevent such Lodgings for fear of Aches, and other Inconveniences incident thereupon; wherefore in the middle of the Vale we repaired to the Caravan Ser Raw, almost buried in the Sand, it being the only obstacle to their rowling Billows.

The next Morn we were waited on by the Country Women bringing us Cheese, and Butter made before our Eyes, with no other Churn than a Goatskin, in which they shook the Milk till Butter came; Fish, Roots, and Herbs, with all sorts of Pullen: In these Two Munsels we only meet with these Servitors, in other Places Men appear alone, not allowing their Women that Freedom; but were they no more tempting than these Swains, they'd have small cause for the Restriction; for they are Strapping Sunburnt Lasses, with little more Cloaths on than a dark coloured Smock, or Frock; and for their Meen it is not enticing; these bring us Water to Drink out of their Tanks, newly filled, which was Thick, Troubled, and Slimy; for which reason the Vapours, or rather Fumes from the Sun's violence, were very Offensive, and the more irksome, because we were constrained to tarry here another Night, for that the River Rute Conna Shure, or Salt-Water, was now overflown by the Waters falling from the Mountains beyond the Banks to that excess, that it could not be Forded by Travellers, and the Stream ran with that Rapidness, that it was unsafe to venture over till the descending Cataracts had left off pouring on the overswell'd Brinks, and emptied themselves into the wider Gulf, not many Leagues distant hence.

The Day after, as soon as we heard the Waters were abated, we set forward, and found it true what had been reported (Three Caphala's not daring to pass the Lake, where they had lain some Days, till we had led the way). It was sultry Hot when we assayed to go, but Delays in this case were dangerous; besides, we were uncertain whether it would hold up should we tarry, which made us confide on our Guides, who gave us assurance, that the Marshes were passable; we were more troubled with Waves of Sand than Water, both which, by Rain, or Wind, keep on their Course with some noise till silenced in the Persian Gulf.

A Great Bridge.

Athwart this Fen, which was upward of Three Miles, was Built not long since, as by the Modern Architecture may be guessed, a stately Stone Bridge with Arches, on which high Banisters with Niches, and a brave paved Cawsey Elegantly Built, which kept pace with us, but by the Negligence of these People, as well as Injury of Floods and Sands, it was broke down in several places, especially where the Torrent made the deepest Channel, so that though firm and strong in the greatest part of it, yet by its being ruined in the most needful, it is become impassable; and though a Work of extraordinary Benefit and Charge, yet already rendred of little Use.

The

Chap. II.

Caureſtan.

The reſt of this day's Journy was between the Mountains, where we were encounter'd by ſtrange Flaſhes of Lightning, the Foretellers of this Night's Rain, which we hardly eſcaped before we came to Caureſtan, in all Twenty Miles: This Caravan Ser Raw is named from a Tree growing here, and a Village properly ſo called (of which it is a Compoſition in Perſian), it being the firſt we met with whoſe Houſes were fixed.

The Place where Men and Beaſts have been deſtroyed by the Heats.

The following Day we continued going between two Chains of Dry and Burnt Hills, through a ſtony Valley, not without fear of ſuffocating, although it was near Evening e're we ſet out, and Yeſterday's Showers had benignly diſtilled on the Fiery Drought, to cool the parched Earth: But this is the dreadful Vale, where when the Hot North Winds blow at this time, it ſweeps both Men and Beaſts away, either by Night or Day, the Heat being as intenſe and as intolerable as that from the Mouth of an Oven: We were conducted through this Furnace by the Divine Protection (without being put to make uſe of the common Remedy in this Exigency, which is, upon perceiving of the hot Blaſts, to caſt our ſelves flat on the Ground till they are over, thereby to prevent the Fate attending thoſe who refuſe to ſtoop to this known Preſcription, which is, to fall down dead, never to riſe more alive), till we were mounted where theſe two Chains are linked to each other, and by their mutual Aſcent we were lift up on high, and then gently deſcending we were let down to Goorbazergum, Fifteen Miles from Caureſtan.

Goor Bazergum, the Merchants Grave.

In this Bottom is a ſolitary Inn, very commodiouſly ſeated; it is ſurrounded with Mountains, at whoſe Bottoms are ſtore of Water-Melons, a grateful Cooler in this Extremity of Heat: Goor-Bazergum is as it were to ſay, The Merchants Grave, in the Perſian Tongue.

Hence up Hill and down Hill, through broken Rocks and unſteady Stones, through kindled Fires from ſulphurious Caverns, and the more raging effects of the burning Orb, enlightening and enlivening all the World beſide; here it kills and conſumes the un-nurtur'd Plants, leaving them dry and ſapleſs; as if theſe great Heaps of Rocks were made for no other end but to counterpoize the more Fruitful Part of this Terreſtrial Globe; inſomuch that it had been utterly impoſſible to have drawn Breath in this Place, had not the late unuſual Rain ſomething allayed the Fury of the Heats, which yet were troubleſome enough by reaſon of the ſteaming Miſts ariſing boiling hot with the Sun; which ſo late in the Year are by the moſt Ancient of this Country eſteemed ſo far out of courſe, that their Memory fails them to relate the like.

Jehun.

Nor do the Publick Roads deny the Calamity of theſe Munſels, which are frequently ſtrewed with Bones of labouring Beaſts, expiring under their Burthens, many of which were freſh Examples of this Truth, lying reeking Carkaſſes in our Way from Goor Bazergum to Jehun, which is but Twelve Miles, where we were forced to ſtay to get more Camels, for Three had failed us in this Conflict; and afterwards with much Pain we meaſured ſix Miles more to Tangedelon, where we eaſed our ſelves at a Caravan Ser Raw, near a Stream of living Water ſweetly gliding through the middle of it, and waſh'd the Duſt off our ſweaty Bodies, in a Tank contrived to make a pleaſant Bath under the Roof of the Seraw.

Letter V.

Tangedelon and Cormoot.

Tangedelon expreſſes in its Mothers Speech, A Strait Paſſage, which hits exactly with the following Munſel; for we travelled long under hollowed Mountains, whoſe lofty Rocks hung over our Heads, threatning to ſtop our Career, which after Twenty Rocky Miles directed us to Cormoot, a Town of Dates, Cormoot being a Date, κατ' ἐξοχήν.

Sham Zangee.

Thus far we came directly in a Line; now we wander to and again in the Meanders of the Barren Hills, with indefatigable Induſtry, till we deſcend into a large Plain, at the End whereof Sham Zangee an Abaſſin, had built an old Caravan, Twenty Miles from Cormoot; where we met a Caphala of light Aſſes going for the Port; and here we were obliged to change more of our Camels, they being quite tired.

In this Plain the Heats increaſed upon us ſo, that we could not touch the Walls but they were like Fire, the Winds that ſhould refreſh us were ready to inflame us, nor was any thing cool but the Water, which they had kept in Earthen Veſſels dipped in their Wells or Tanks, where being drowned they came up ſhivering cold, which was all the Comfort we received here; wherefore at Sun ſet we made for Lhor, choaked with Duſt and Heat; half-way, at a new Caravan Ser Raw, we encountred three Caphalaes laden with Dry Fruit for the Port: This was founded by the Overſeer of the Building of the Long-Bridge over the Lake leading to the Gulph, who raiſed himſelf thereby, and begins (though covetous in other things) to beſtow his Mony on theſe Works, having laid the Foundation for another at Sham Zangee.

From this Place to Lhor the Ground is more Even, and fit for Cultivation, the Husbandmen having planted their Cottages along the Valley, on each ſide of a gliding Brook, here and there beſet with Tamerisk Trees.

Phor.

About Nine in the Morning we came to Lhor, near Forty Mile from Sham Zangee. The Hollanders have here a neat, but ſmall Dwelling, whither their Commodore comes ſometimes: In this we deſigned to have worn ſome days away, but neither the Heat nor Musquitoes would let us reſt long in this City; wherefore deſiring to fly from theſe, we changed our Camels for Mules, that we might make better ſpeed than theſe ſlow Animals would endure; for theſe intemperate Seats were too hot for us, ſo that the ſame Afternoon we mounted, and on Horſeback ſaw the remaining part of the City leading us on our Way. The Road from Bunder to it is ſpacious and open, through a pleaſant Campaign for near Twenty Miles, the Mountains obſerving a modeſt diſtance on that ſide, although behind it is begirt with enough for defence; at top of which is a notable Seat, fit for a Caſtle, being of difficult Acceſs, from whence thoſe that approach, may hear the Thundring Cannons roar among the Valleys, which were moſt taken from the Portugals in their being beaten out of the Gulph.

Lhor is a City of an Ancient Date, and ſtill retains its Name, which for that it was ſo guarded by Nature that it could not eaſily be be conquered, held many Ages the Majeſty of a Kingdom; but now it is governed by a Puritanical Caun (for that he has viſited Mahomet's Tomb) under the Perſian Emperor; yet ſtill it extends its ſelf far in its Province, reaching almoſt to Bunder Abaſſee, and has two eminent Ports tending to the Mouth of Euphrates, viz. Bunder Congo and Bunder Reek, with half the Pearl-fiſhing, divided between the Arab and Perſian. He is in ſuch Vogue at Court for his Probity, that his Neighbour Caun was ordered to ſubmit to his Judgment, before whoſe Tribunal he appeared to anſwer the Crimes objected to him in his Government. Chap. II.

However he is not ſo great a Bigot as to abſtract himſelf wholly from the Pleaſures of this World, ſo as to deny himſelf his Paradiſe here: For his Palaces ſhew not only ſtudious Contrivances, but are Luxurious both for inward Furniture and outward Beauty, with which Pleaſures he oftner indulges himſelf than he is at Leiſure for Publick Affairs.

Before his Palaces a Fourſquare Piatzo takes in a large Space of Ground, with Gates to every Quarter; over which his loud Muſick are placed, either to entertain Strangers, or by their Noiſe to give the Time of the Day at every Three or Four Hours: At the Gate entring the Palace is a conſtant Guard: Within are ſtately Apartments, with Lakes and Gardens, equal to the Roman Pride in its Age of Wantonneſs; but ſo much the more to be extoll'd, by how much more this Soil is incompatible with the Italian Mold.

Magnifick Buildings ſhortly will allow

Now may be ſeen huge Pools to make,
Of much more wide Extent than Lucrin Lake.

The Orange now to Phœbus piercing Eye,
Through his thick Branches Paſſage doth deny.

Beſides all theſe, there is an Exchange, or Burſe, full of Wares, in the Figure of a Croſs, reared with poliſhed Stone on a large Area before the Duke's Houſe.

The

Letter V.

The Water in uſe for the common People is chiefly Rain; wherefore the Ciſterns are more coſtly than in other Places; of the ſame Figure as at Gombroon, only ſome few are tubilated and built of Mud.

Many Merchants poſſeſs Princely Edifices in this Town, it being a Place of ſome conſiderable Trade both Inland, and from the ſeveral Ports.

Brimſtone the moſt refined here.

The Earth is productive of Sulphur, whoſe Chymical Spirit is extracted here, and is preferable to any other, I never having met with more refined Brimſtone; they generally diſtil it per Campanam.

The Bezoar-ſtone its name.

The Bezoar-Stone is purchaſed at this Mart, being ſaid to be found in the Stomach of the Mountain-Goats hereabouts, occaſioned by ſome Plant they delight to feed on, to which they attribute its Growth: On which Subject more may be ſeen in Bontius Junior's Animadverſions on the Second and Sixth Paragraph of Garcius ab Ortâ: Whoſe Words are to this Effect;

'This Stone I find not only to be generated in Perſia, but alſo in 'other Parts of the World; and becauſe none as I know of befote 'my ſelf have given the true Etymon or Derivation of this Stone, or 'how it grows, hear the Buſineſs in a few Words.

'The Perſians then call this Stone Pazahar, being a Compound of 'Pa and Zahar, the firſt of which is againſt, the other is Poyſon; as 'much as if you ſhould ſay in Greek, Antidoton, in Engliſh, Counter-'Poyſon.

How bred.

'It grows after this manner; there is a Place in Perſia called Ste-'banon, as Bontius writes, the Perſians Shabanat, Three Days Jour-'ney beyond Lhor, in whoſe Fields there ſprings up an Herb like 'Saffron and Hermodactyls, on which the Flocks of Goats (or 'Sheep) feed, and by their eating thereof theſe Stones concrete 'and become an hard Subſtance; but I ſuſpend my Vote, whether 'in the Stomach, Reins, or Bladder: However, that Belief may be 'gained for any of theſe, ſeeing them halt and complain as much as 'Men under the ſame diſtreſs, would more than incline the moſt in-'credulous. They are not, ſays he, unlike the Europe Goats, only 'they have longer and ſtraiter Horns: They are not of divers Co-'lours, as he affirms, neither go they in Flocks or Herds together; 'though I have eaten of their Fleſh more than once, hunted by 'Greyhounds, being turned looſe from the Mountains, they having 'much of the Nature of Veniſon both in their Taſte and Aſpect. 'Moreover theſe Creatures (rather Sheep than Goats) as they breed 'greater or leſſer Stones, they diſcover it by their Gate, of which 'both the crafty Armenian as well as Perſian are well adviſed.

Other Creatures as well as theſe are ſubject to this Diſtemper, as Cows, Sheep, and Apes; which laſt is reckoned the moſt excellent Bezoar by more than a few.

Its Trial.

To the Directions already given, I ſhall add, That the true Bezoar Stones have a Straw, or ſomething in reſemblance thereof, which never fails but in the Adulterate; and if the upper Coat being ſhaved off, there ſucceed not another Round, as is viſible in Onions, till you come to the Straw, without doubt it is Counterfeit.

But the following Method will better betray the Cheat, becauſe they leave nothing unattempted to impoſe upon the Buyers: If you rub

rub the Stone with a little Lime, and if in the chafed Part there appears a Purple Colour, it declares it true and genuine, without ſophiſtication. Or if you caſt them into a Baſon of Water, after an exact Account is taken of their Weight, and they be taken out Three Hours after, and weighed again, and it anſwer the firſt Account, neither loſing nor gaining by their ſtay in the Water, then pronounce them right: But if being rubbed with Lime they chance to crack, or a Flaw be made in the Trial, or that they alter upon their Immerſion in the Water, you ſlander them not, if you ſay they are Falſe.

Aſſa Fætida.

In this Country Aſſa Fætida is gathered at a Place called Deſcoon; ſome deliver it to be the Juice of a Cane or Reed inſpiſſated; others, of a Tree wounded: It differs much from the ſtinking Stuff called Hing, it being of the Province of Carmania: This latter is that the Indians perfume themſelves with, mixing it in all their Pulſe, and make it up in Wafers to correct the Windineſs of their Food, which they thunder up in Belchings from the Crudities created in their Stomachs; never thinking themſelves at eaſe without this Theriac: And this is that they cozen the Europeans with inſtead of Aſſa Fœtida, of which it bears not only the Smell, but Colour alſo, only it is more liquid.

The Civility of the Perſian Governors ends in Covetouſneſs.

It is uſual on the News of our Approach to theſe great Cities, or Populous Towns, for the Governors or their Deputies to expect the coming of our Agent a Pharſang out of Town, bringing the Men of Note with him to attend us to our Lodgings, and bring us with Pomp through their Streets, and at the ſame time lay in Store for us and our Horſes, uſhering in huge Courſes of Proviſions, both ready dreſs'd and undreſs'd, as alſo Services of Sweetmeats dried and undried, ſending in Sheep, Goat, and Pullen, Barley, Rice, and the like; and at our departure Preſent us with Perſian Steeds for our Journy: For which we muſt not ſtir till we have paid ſufficiently, by return of our Country Manufactures, as Scarlet, Watches, or ſomething of greater Value: Tam citò in avaritiam excurrit ſua humanitas; quommodo enim beneficium eſt quod in quæſtum mittitur? cum à beneficio abeſſe debeat negotiatio, &c. Senec. lib. 3. de Benefic. So ſoon their Humanity is turned to Avarice; for how can that be eſteemed a Gift, which is beſtowed with an intent to gain? Since any manner of Profit, which is ſordid, makes void an entire Benefaction. But being rewarded for their forced Courteſy, upon our mounting they conducted us on our Way, as far as they waited to bring us in.

Letter V.

CHAP. III.

We Meaſure the utmoſt Bounds of the Provinces of Lhor and Gerom, to the City of Siras.

BEING now advanced upon the Mountains, among whoſe Tops and Turnings we make our Progreſs; freſh inſtances of the Convulſions which this Sulphurious Soil is ſubject to encounter us, as by the Cloven Hills and Rocks we may be convinced could be effected by no other means than by terrible Earthquakes from the Bowels of the Earth: Among theſe droughty and uncouth Paths, having wearied our Steps for Three Pharſangs, we came to a Caravan Ser Raw, by Name Pokutal, at the foot of theſe Mountains, and the beginning of a ſpacious Plain, where we found the firſt alleviation from the fierce Heats of the Noon of Night, though at Noon Day we could not think our caſe much amended.

Pokutal. Po is interpreted the Baſis, Kutal of the Hill; this Inn was a new, ſtrong, ſquare, large Inn; the firſt we ſtabled, or rather ſhut our Doors in a-Nights, it being Built after the beſt Form, and Capacious of a great Number, both in the outward Square and inner Stables; to this belonged Three ſtately Tanks with a deep Well, ſome an Hundred Fathoms down to the Bottom, with a Pond, either to Water or Waſh the Cattel in, hard by it; the perfect proof of our being paſſed the Sands, which hold not digging ſuch a depth, this being White Marble; and the whole Plain promiſed a more fruitful Clay.

Bury. Hence to Bury metes out Twelve Miles more, where the beſt Caravan Ser Raw is on all the Road, it being not only well Adorned with White facing Stone, but is both a Large and Convenient, as well as Stately Fabrick.

A Peor, or Prophet's Tomb. Hard by this is a Peor, or Burying-place of one of their Prophets, being a goodly Monument, with an Arabick School Founded in his Honour, and Endowed with a good Penſion for to maintain the Devotion of their Prieſts.

Bonaru. The next Munſel we hardly Went, but Crept onward to, through almoſt impaſſable and dangerous Precipices, with all the heed imaginable, for a Trip here could not have been retrieved without the loſs of our Lives; but by the Divine Providence we came to Bonaru, an Eight Cornered Carouſan, Eighteen Miles from Bury; there on an Hill are the remains of a regular Fortification, with a ſuppliment of Outworks on every ſide, without any Avenue, unleſs on one ſide; between this Village and Bury, the Inhabitants reckon a many Caſtles on the Mountains with large Tanks of Water, and Store-houſes for Proviſions of Corn, Cut out of the main Rocks with indefarigable Coſt and Induſtry, which Works were they to be begun now (ſay they) could not be Finiſhed by the Experteſt Artiſts in Fifty Years. They yet retain a Warlike Diſpoſition, being ſtill accounted the beſt Gunners here of any other places in Perſia; at the Entrance into this place are unſizable Heads of Mountain-Rams with their Horns, Horns, ſet up as the Trophies of their Skill in Shooting them; and as a farther Argument of the cruel ſlaughter made among their Fore-fathers, for more than Three Days Journy together, the Fields are every where filled with Graves. Chap. III.

What ſhift they make for Water.

And now we began to be acquainted with the ſhift they make for Water in theſe dry Countries, where there is little Rain, and no Rivulets; they Dig for Springs, and when they have found one, they follow the Water-Courſe which way it directs under Ground, Hollowing the Ground, and at every Thirty or Forty Yards, caſt up a Mole-Hill, where they make a Pit to Ventilate and let in the Air to Purify the Water, as well as to Cleanſe the Channel, and this Courſe holds on many Pharſangs together for the advantage of the Vallies; and this I look upon to be as much the cauſe of the Generation of the Bezoar-Stone in the Animals aforeſaid, as the reaſons alledged there by Bontius for their Production; for by the conſent of all Phyſicians, nothing contributes more to the Breeding of the Stone in Men, than ſuch things as are Undigeſted and create Obſtructions; nor can any thing be more Obſtructing than ſuch Water as is drawn from Wells and deep Caverns, where the Sun has little influence, as we may have occaſion to manifeſt afterwards; and therefore we may probably Conjecture, theſe Unconcocted Waters to be a main inſtrument of their production, ſince where theſe are in uſe, this Accident is more general than in other places.

Mouſar the utmoſt extent of the Province of Lhor.

From Bonaru to Mouſar, another Eight-ſquare Caravan, are Fifteen Miles, fine, plain, and eaſy way; near the Caravan Ser Raw was a pleaſant Garden, the utmoſt extent of the Caun of Lhor's Dominions on this Road.

And as a Boundary thereto, is oppoſed the ſteepeſt Hill we have yet met with, inſomuch that we found it a notable Task to gain the Top by the Morning of the following Day, contenting our ſelves to ſit down at Chawtalk, but Nine Miles from Bonaru, being adviſed of a more troubleſome Day's Journy the Munſel after this; not ſo difficult for Acceſs as this, but a more continued Labour by the multitude of Mountains we were to Maſter, and on that account it was highly neceſſary to Feed our Caphala's well before we undertake ſo great a Work.

Chawtalk.

Chawtalk, (by the moſt valuable Munificence of the Benefactor, yet living to Overſee this good Deed compleated) is a noble new Caravan, an Ample and Princely Building: Near to it was, not long ſince, only a Well of Bitter Water, which gives Name to the Place; but by the Coſt and Inqueſt of this Pious Benefactor, Sweeter Waters are at this time produced, ſomething more remote, for Men to Drink, though the Cattel refuſe not generally the other.

Manna.

On theſe Mountains the Maſtich Tree brings forth plenty of that Gum, of which the Country People make good Profit: Nor does leſs Benefit accrue by the Mellifluous Dew a-Nights turn'd into Manna, from the Leafs and Shrubs, as well as Plants, upon the ſides of theſe Mountains, which are not altogether ſo Barren as thoſe we have hitherto paſſed; this Manna is White and Granulated, and, what I have found my ſelf, I think not inferior to the Calabrian.

Letter V.

Maſtick.

As for the Maſtick Trees, they bore Red Berries, and if wounded would ſpew out the liquid Reſin from the Branches; they are not very tall, of the bigneſs of our Bully Trees: Whether they bring forth a Cod or not, this Seaſon would not inform me, nor can I ſay it agrees in all reſpects with the Lentisk Tree of Cluſius.

The Bitter Almond.

Here alſo grows the Wild or Bitter Almond, the Wands or Sticks of which are in Eſteem, for that Tradition of their being of the ſame Tree with thoſe of Aaron's Rod, which budding brought forth Almonds, and for that reaſon are worn by thoſe of the higheſt Rank among them: More of this anon.

And now the time approaches we muſt paſs over in one Day as many Mountains as we have hitherto been conquering, ſome of whoſe Clifts could never be gained, had they not been joined together by vaſt Arches from Rock to Rock, their diſmal Pits otherwiſe being rendred impaſſable: Thus by inexpreſſible Endeavours we ſtrive to clear this formidable Chain of Hills, all in the Heat of the Sun (not daring to truſt our ſelves in the Night), whereby we had our Skins flead off of thoſe Parts expoſed to the Solar Rays; and thoſe that fared beſt had Bladders raiſed, as if ſcalded or burnt by the Fire; for which, when we had travell'd One and twenty Miles, we found at Gerom a ready Medicine of the Butter of the Seed of Gourds made into an Ointment, which appeaſed the Inflammation by its cooling Virtue, and immediately aſſwaged the Pain by Baſting our ſelves herewith, being half Roaſted.

Gerom.

We refreſhed our ſelves one entire Day at Gerom, where a ſmall White Grape, without any Stone, was an excellent Cordial; the Wine preſſed from it is white alſo, and the ſtrongeſt by Natural Fermentation only, that I ever drank; they are called Kiſmas Grapes, and the Wine is known by the ſame Name farther than where they grow, it being of ſo ſtout a Body that it is not ſubject to decay preſently; though their beſt Wines when they begin to turn, are fit for nothing but Vinegar, they being inexpert either in their Cure, or to preſerve them; that which we drink is pure, without any Sophiſtication.

The ſtrongeſt Wine and beſt Dates here.

There grow no where better Dates than at this Town; and packed up dry are preferred before others all the World over.

The People that dwell here are for the moſt part blind; for of Three you meet, Two ſhall not ſee, and it may be a Third ſhall have but half an Eye.

The Cauſe of their Blindneſs.

The Occaſion whereof, as they report, is, becauſe little pretty coloured Mice and Weaſels by their poyſonous Stale infect the Trees ſo, that they produce Worms, the Parent of this Diſtemper; more truly fancying than proving this Secret, for want of that Microſcope whereby Kepler aſſiſted this enquiring Age to diſcover, That no kind of Plant whatſoever but procreates of its ſuperfluous Juice ſome putrid Humour, which by active Nature is enliven'd into Vital Motion, forming to every one their proper Inſects.

Whether any Virulency may be aſcribed to theſe, or the immoderate eating of Dates ought to be accuſed of their exceſſive Heat, as we do Wormwood, which for that reaſon we account offenſive to the Eyes, I know not; following herein the Prince of Phyſicians, Calidis enim qui

ſæpè

Sæpè multumque utuntur, nervorum infirmitatem adferunt, in Aph. 16. Hyp. lib. 5. who says, They who accustom themselves to eat Hot things, bring on themselves the Weakness of the Nerves, and consequently decay their Eyesight, the Optick Nerves being signally affected, through which Organs, Spirits ought to be conveyed principally for the service of the Eyes. Chap. III.

To which Evil no doubt Sympathy makes a great Addition, whether in the Individual, or in respect of others: Wherein the Poet Philosophized, when he sang, Cum spectant oculi læsos lædunter & ipsi.

But above all, the Sands, which have here the same effect as elsewhere.

This is a Free Town, enfranchis'd with Liberties peculiar to its self, being independent on any other Governor but its own; though he be but a Calenture or Bayliff, giving Laws, and ruling by his own Power, being accountable to none but the Emperor: His Jurisdiction spreads a great way, for that he is not inferior in Wealth to many Cauns, only somewhat less in Dignity.

This Town is Mr. Herbert's Kirjoth-Jerom.

Mr. Herbert in his Itinerary relates Gerom to have its denomination from certain Jews who took up their Abode here, and gave it this Name in honour of their Kirjoth-Jerom: But whether more of that Nation dwell here than in other great Towns, I am not thoroughly advertised, and therefore forbear determining.

A Mile from the Town had been a Coloss, now half ruined by Age, bearing still some Marks of its pristine Majesty, it being more than Sixty Foot high, and Thirty in Circumference, raised in Memory of some departed Saint; it overlooks a great many more humble Tombs, not liable therefore to such Dilapidation.

Wheat.

Leaving these, we pass through plough'd Fields, sowed with Wheat and almost mowed, it being Harvest time.

Liquorice.

In this Plain abundance of Liquorice grows wild; and by the Brooks sides are planted Country Mansions, with store of Sallows and Willows. At Midnight we came to Mocock Sugta (i.e. a dry Clove) Twenty two Miles, having forded several Plashes where flourished lascivious Shrubs, more like Southernwood than Osiers, till we were inclosed again in the Mountains.

Theft punished with immuring.

The Rhadars here had apprehended a sturdy Thief, who had set upon a poor Merchant, and drove away his Ass loaded with Indian Cloth: These sort of Vermin are rare, either for the exemplary Punishment inflicted, which is Immuring, when detected, or for the former mentioned Satisfaction to be made by the Shawbunder, who employs these Rhadarees, restoring to every one their proper Goods, or else giving them the full Value.

I shall not deviate much to give a credible Instance from our Agent, who upon the Road by the Remissness of the Shotters had his Gold Bridle and other Furniture stole out of a Caravan Ser Raw, after they had come tired in. As soon as they were missing, upon notice given to the Captain of the Rhadars, a strict Search being made presently, it was not long e're the Criminal was detected, and taken with his Prize,

Letter V.

Prize, the latter reſtored, and the other left to the Mercy of the Agent, who might have cut him to pieces without any other Formality of Proceſs, had he not delivered him over to be chaſtiſed by his Accuſers, who were not wanting to inflict what Puniſhment his Fact deſerved, the next Caun adjudging him the Severity of the Law.

Monſtrous Perſian Rams.

Here again over the Portal of the Inn, were advanced the Creſts to the Perſian Arms, I mean huge Rams-heads, Horns and all, which declare what would ſeem monſtrous to relate, they ſurpaſſing in Bulk as well as Courage all thoſe of other Nations; not for their Heads alone, but their Tails, which ſometimes prove ſuch Incumbrances, that unleſs ſmall Carts were ordained for their Carriage (eſpecially the tame ones), they would trail upon the Ground, and wound themſelves againſt every ſharp Stone and rough Piece of Ground: But theſe exalted are the Offspring of the Mountains, ſheltring themſelves among the Rocks and untrodden Paths of the Hills.

Polium.

Where, and in our Paſſage, grew the Mountain-Poly, which ſtruck our Scent, till we deſcended a Fruitful Valley, abounding with Springs of Water, which gave Increaſe to many Furlongs loaded with Rice or Paddy, being courſer than the Indian; from whence not only Perſia, but all the World beſides, muſt fetch the beſt and fineſt Rice.

Caiſer bounds Gerom, and the Growth of Palms.

This Valley led us to Caiſer, ſome Five Pharſangs, a Village bleſt with all Fruits Perſia glories in, but above all, the choiceſt Oranges; but this unſeaſonable Year, with the help of the Locuſts, had blaſted them all. This Town, as it terminates the Bounds of Gerom, ſo it puts an end to the genuine Growth of the Palm-Tree, it being barren beyond this Place, and therefore only ſet in Great Mens Gardens for Shew, it delighting rather in Hot and Dry Ground, ſuch as Sands, and ſuch as come nigheſt in Nature to them: Moreover, the Climate beyond this Place admits of too cold a Winter for their Nouriſhment, which I impute to be the chiefeſt Cauſe.

This Town is planted in the Boſom of two Rows of Hills, reaching Siras, which delivers us to a delightful Plain, adorned with Cypreſs-Trees on each hand, and plenteouſly ſtored with Villages and Running Water on every ſide.

And now it was pleaſant to behold the Harveſt-men labouring with their Sythes, the Wheat blading low; the Ruther Beaſts with diſtended Bags grazing in the Meadows, the Sheep with their broad Tails gathered into Folds, and the wary Shepherd on his Guard to defend them, as well as to dreſs them when infected with any Maladies; the Groves look'd Green, as in the midſt of Summer's Pride, whoſe Bowers the Winged Choriſters made chearful with their unconfined Notes, their Mirth as free as their Melody untaught, being actuated by no other Rule than Inſtinct.

Firaw.

Theſe gave us hopes of future Moderation; nor were they flattering; for we had not traced Ten Miles of this pleaſant Way, when we came to Firaw, (The Foot of the Way,) where Aga Tocke had placed a Caravan Ser Raw; but here we were forced to gather thoſe Garments cloſe about us, the wearing of which we hitherto rather thought an uſeleſs Decency, than a real Requiſite.

From

From hence to Muſſaferry we toiled through rugged and uneaſy Ways to a very ſplendid Caravan Ser Raw, ſome Fourteen Miles more, where we took our Reſt: And thence along a ſweet Campaign, watred by a delicate Rivulet on the Left, at the Bottom of the declining Hills, beſtowing its Bleſſing on the adjacent Villages and Country Towns. Chap. III. Muſſaferry.

We continued journying all this Night; wherefore the Sun had gilded the Firmament with his Vermilion Red, before we took up at Bobba Hodge, Thirty Miles compleat from our laſt Stage. Where intending to have been quiet, we were interrupted more than ever by impertinent Gnats and Flies, by reaſon of the Concourſe of Waters nouriſhing abundance of Ruſhes and Fenny Plants, which harboured theſe and gave them Refuge in the Day, but at Night they broke out of their Lurking-places, and beſet us with that Rage and Force, that no Reſiſtance or Fence can be made againſt them; for, ſay they hyperbolically, They will bite through Armour; the beſt Perſian Boots (which are low-heel'd and good Cordavan Leather) being not Proof againſt their Aſſaults. Bobba Hodge.

Wherefore the Eve to the ſame Day, to avoid theſe invincible Aſſailants, the diſturbers of our Repoſe, we held on our Pace through Paſture-Grounds, ſuch as our Commons, where they are down-fed, that little more than Green-Sod appears, in which were wanton Foles and unback'd Colts, with Mares for Breed, and unbridled Stallions, ſporting on the ſpacious Downs, which brought us onwards to Siras Twelve Miles more, viz. to the Beggars-Garden (but one Pharſang ſhort of the City) called Udgewally. Udgewally.

Here we had ſcarcely alighted, but the French Agent having notice of our coming, beat up our Quarters, and broke us of our Sleep.

By Break of Day the Armenian Chriſtians, which are numerous, came to congratulate our Arrival, and brought Banquets of Wine, Fruit, and a Cold Treat, with Led Horſes of State, and loud Muſick, to make our Entry the more Pompous. In order whereunto, about Eleven in the Morning, conducted with much Ceremony, we approached Siras, where we found Spectators anſwerable to the Novelty of our Appearance, and the Greatneſs of our Train, with which we were paſſing through this City nigh Two Hours, before we were enclos'd within the Walls of the Engliſh Houſe, which is a Noble one, in the middle of a ſtately Garden. Our Entry into Siras.

Hither came the Fathers of all Orders to bid us Welcome, that were reſident in the ſeveral Convents allowed them in this City; all which, and other Chriſtian Attendants, were not diſmiſs'd till after a Splendid Dinner provided by our Interpreter, who makes ſome Thouſands a Year by the Licenſe of our Winepreſs, the Profit whereof is wholly his.

The Wines of the Growth of this Country are eſteemed the moſt Stomachical and Generous in all Perſia, and fitteſt for common drinking, when allayed a little with Water, otherwiſe too heady for the Brain, and heavy for the Stomach, their Paſſage being retarded for want of that proper Vehicle: It is incredible to ſee what Quantities they drink at a Merry-meeting, and how unconcerned the next The Wines of Siras generous.

day they appear, and brisk about their Buſineſs, and will quaff you thus a whole Week together.

The People good Companions.

In which Exerciſe when they engage, they obſerve this Maxim, Always to lay in Ballaſt, they eating heartily; and all the time that Healths are paſſing about, they have Cucumbers, Melons, and other Fruits before them, which muſt be acknowledged to receive the moſt perfect Ripeneſs, and therefore are more innocent here than any where elſe. Tobacco is a general Companion; and to give them their due, they are Converſable Good-Fellows, ſparing no one his Bowl in their turn; and to be ſure none ſhall eſcape a Noſegay, Orange, or ſome ſuch Mark as paſſes with every Health; ſo that ſometimes when they mind Diſcourſe more than the Buſineſs in hand, a whole Neſt of Poſies wait on one Man, who muſt clear himſelf, or diſguſt thoſe whoſe Healths remain unpledg'd.

Having diſcharg'd the Fatigue of this Day, it remained incumbent on our parts to return theſe Civilities, which was to renew the Trouble again, each ſtriving to outvye others in their Entertainments: In theſe Courteous Viſits we ſpent a Week, nor was that ſufficient, but we being late in the Year for this Journey to Spahaun, our Interpreter excuſed our Neglect.

CHAP. IV.

Of Siras, and the Ancient City Perſepolis, and our Journying quite through Perſia.

IN our Stay here we had Opportunity to obſerve Siras, not only by Fame, but indeed to be, ſecond to none, except the Royal City, in the whole Empire: And in this Country, the Country which is properly Perſia (extended from the Gulph to Eſduchos, which parts Parthia from it by a great Ditch made for a Boundary on that Side to this Ancient Kingdom) it is the principal Metropolis.

Siras the chief City in Perſia.

It is delivered as a Tradition, That it aroſe from the Ruins of Perſepolis: Others will have it as old as Cyrus, who contend for him to be the Founder, for that the nearneſs of the Name intimates as much: But that he ſhould raiſe it as a Monument, ſeems not ſo probable, who would not permit it at his Death, as that theſe People, devoted to his Memory, might on the Miſcarriage of Perſepolis, raiſe this in Honour of him, whoſe Remembrance might at once revive the Glory of the then fallen Monarchy, and bury the hated Name of the new Conqueror in Oblivion, who had ſullied all his Lawrels by hearkning to the unlimited Revenge of a Proſtitute, to lay the moſt flouriſhing Perſepolis in Aſhes, from whence, Phœnix like, this is ſuppoſed to ſpring.

And when we enter its Wealthy Markets, or Buzzars, Baſilick Buildings, ſupported by Rows of vaſt Pillars covered at top, of which there are innumerable, large and ſplendid, abounding with Rich Rich Merchandize; the ſtately Palaces of the Caun and other Nobles; the pleaſant Walks and Gardens, Colleges and Temples, the Tombs, and Water-Courſes; we may afflict our ſelves with the Loſſes magnified by Hiſtorians, but at the ſame time do Injuſtice to ſo valuable a Reparation, which, for ought I know, exceeds the worth of the other: And what adds to its Eſteem, it is reckoned by the Perſians an Holy City, wherefore it's Endowed with Schools and Convents, with Allowance for Students; nor do they in any place excel, (for the Concinnity of Harmony in Chorus from the high Towers of their Moſques at their ſtated Hours for Devotion) theſe ſweet Singers of Siras: It boaſts therefore of its being an Univerſity; which it truly merits from the confluence of all the Learned Tribe coming hither for Education. Chap. IV.

Their ſtately Gardens and Summer-Houſes are out of the Town, whither reſort thoſe Invited either by Curioſity or Recreation; the moſt famous of which we Viſited, under whoſe ſhady Bowers we were Feaſted, from the Heel of every Day till Midnight, while we remained here, by the interchangeable Solicitations of our Chriſtian Friends. Their Gardens.

Among which, that, honoured with the Royal Claim, and therefore ſtiled the King's Garden, deſervedly carries the Luſtre from the reſt, and though every one ſhare in ſome Excellency or other, yet this comprehends them all in one, being a large Map of the whole: Here grow the loftieſt Cypreſs-Trees in the Univerſe; nor do they want Bodies proportionable to their Height, one of which is ſaid to be Set by Shaw Abas, their Beloved Emperor, Meaſures ſome Fathoms round: So addicted are theſe People to Loyal Heartedneſs, that what is Great, or Magnificent, they offer up as a grateful Teſtimony to perpetuate the Fame of thoſe Princes who have deſerved well in their Annals; for which reaſon theſe Trees keep the Name of Token Cyr, even down to this our Age; willing thereby to Immortalize the Grand Cyrus, tranſmitting an unalterable Tradition as laſting as Poſterity its ſelf. The Cypreſs Trees the biggeſt in the Univerſe.

Theſe ſet in Order make Majeſtick Walks, under whoſe ſhelter thrive the Underwoods; which were they removed from the firſt Rank of the Quarters, whether our Countrymen would allow the reſt to be Wilderneſs, Orchard, or Garden, would be a Queſtion; ſince theſe, with the Water-courſes, make the whole Deſign of the Perſpective; in which promiſcuouſly are included Philberts, Haſlenuts, Piſtachias, Sweet Almonds, Cherries of both ſorts, Peach, Apricot, Prunello's, Figs, Prunes, Grannet, Cheſtnut, Nectorines, Quince, and all thoſe we call Wall-Fruit, without any Aſſiſtance: Oranges and Limes begin to flag here, rejoycing more where Cold is leſs felt; for though it is very Hot now, it has a ſhort but ſevere Winter; for which cauſe, Roſes, Lillies, and Jaſſemin, are Shaded under all theſe to defend them from each Extreme; and below theſe the Violet and Primroſe, with what exalt not their Heads above the Graſs.

In the midſt of all a Banquetting-Houſe, or Houſe of Pleaſure, with this Conveniency, that which ſide ſo-ever we caſt our Eyes, moſt grateful Greens refreſh our Proſpect, and cooling Springs feed ſpouting ſpouting Fountains, till they unite in a full Sea, and thence are diverted into pleaſant Streams, both for Diverſion and benefit of the Place.

Letter V.

Here is beheld the Trembling Poplar, the Tall Sicamore, and the Humble Elm, contrary to what we ſee in Europe; the Pine and Aſh are Natives of this Soil, by the diligence of the Skilful Planters; but out of theſe Encloſures, no Woods, nor Thickets of any of theſe accoſt us.

The Nightingal.

The Nightingal, the ſweet Harbinger of the Light, is a conſtant Chearer of theſe Groves, Charming with its Warbling Strains the heavieſt Soul into a pleaſing Extaſy.

We return'd back to the City, Lighted by Torches and Flambeaus over a noble Bridge, from whence the Street enlarges gracefully a good length, till we were received into ſtraiter Allies, the reſt of the Streets being moſtly ſuch, or elſe covered Buzzars; this Bridge ſerves only to paſs over, when the ſudden Showers, and Water falling from the Mountains, raiſe a Flood, at other times it being dry under it, here being no River; though Water is not lacking every where there, flowing plentifully in Rills or Brooks, taking their ſource from the Mountains, with which it is inveſted on every part, except the South-ſide, which lies plain and open a great way.

The Vineyards.

Theſe Mountains, as well as Vallies, are ſtocked with Vineyards, being diſpoſed to bear good Grapes, out of which they preſs their Wine, and from the Wine-fat ſet it to Work in great Earthen Jars, from which it is drawn off into Flasks, and ſo packed up in Cheſts.

Glaſs only made here.

In this place only theſe Glaſſes, and ſome courſe Drinking Glaſſes are made; as alſo Roſe-Water Bottles, the beſt Water whereof is Diſtilled here; they likewiſe rectify Spirit of Wine very well: Moreover this City has the noted'ſt Copperſmiths in all Perſia.

No Fortification.

It has neither Fortification nor Walls, neither Ditch nor Mounds, nor other Guard, ſave its own Soldiers, which are the only Bulworks.

The Chief Magiſtrate was the Caun, Governor of the City and all the Province; but he, poor Man, lately by the King's Tyranny, is Depoſed and caſt into Priſon, laden with Irons, as a Capital Offender, for no other reaſon, but that of abounding with unheard of Treaſures; all that he could not convey away the King Seized, and in his room has Nominated the Steward of the King's Houſhold's Brother (who is Chief Favourite at Court) as Delegate for the time being, but not wholly Deprived the Caun, giving him hopes of Releaſe, provided he confeſs his Wealth and conſign it for the uſe of his Maſter.

The Caun Impriſoned.

Some ſay the King took occaſion to quarrel with him for neglecting to ſend his Annual Tribute of Limes to the Haram, he expecting to be ſerved firſt, with the Product of every Province for the Expence of his Houſe, by the Governors thereof before any other; which as it appears reaſonable, it is unlikely the Caun would have been defective in that point; but it is an eaſy thing to find a Staff to Beat a Dog; Facile eſt invenire baculum Canem ut cædas.

By

By which ſingle Inſtance it is viſible how it fares where Arbitrary Power bears ſway, and how Monarchy is defaced when it takes upon it to be Circumſcribed by no Sanction, and what a Monſter it looks like when all Laws are ſwallowed in the Abſolute Authority of Diſpenſing with them; by which means the Godlike Government becomes an inſupportable Thraldom.

The Kindred of Mahomet Diſturbers of their Societies.

In all the Cities of Perſia, as well as this, there are abundance of the Jewiſh Nation (known only at Lhor, where the Caun is an Hodge, by the upper Garment, marked with a Patch of Cloth of different Colour); Banyans alſo, and Armenian Chriſtians, with Europe Roman Catholicks; driving a Trade, and exerciſing the Superſtitions of their ſeveral Religions with freedom, being diſturbed by none unleſs ſometimes by the Bigotted Kindred of Mahomet; who preſume on that account (knowing the Reverence every where paid to that Impoſtor) very often on open and extravagant Injuſtice, ſetting poor People at Work and never ſatisfying them; entitling themſelves Lords Paramount, and all others by a ſervile Tie of Conſcience to be their Slaves; which ſort of People (though Curſed by all) muſt be appeaſed, or elſe all will be in a flame: Which ſort of Behaviour of theirs, has wrought the moſt underſtanding among the Perſians to a Diffidence of that Doctrine with its Author, they ſo mightily preach up, yet practiſe ſo little.

Their Houſes.

The Houſes of Siras are Built with Brick, not Red, but better Hardned than they are, I mean theirs of the Better ſort, not of the Common People, they agreeing with the reſt elſewhere moſtly, being compoſed of Mud and Clay. Pipes, or Conduits for Ventilation are not ſo requiſite here as in other parts, and therefore not ſo univerſal as in the Sandy Countries; here they are more Expenſive on the Beautiful Adorning the Porches and Gatehouſes leading to their Houſes, taking care to Encloſe them with huge high Walls, ſo that they are hid from the Streets; to which they are admitted by double Gates, over which are Folding Doors opening into Balconies.

Their Temples.

Their Publick places of Worſhip are illuſtrated with Moſaick Work: Painted and Glazed Slates grace the outward Caſe, artificially diſpoſed into Convex Towers, repreſenting the bending Heaven about them: Panes of Glaſs for the more ſolemn Light, are fetched from Venice, Tinctured with divers Colours; the Portuco's and lower Walks ſhine with poliſhed Marble, ſupported by ſubſtantial Pillars of the ſame.

The Caun's Palace.

The Midan, or open ſpace before the Caun's Palace, is an Oblong and Stately Piatzo, with real, not belied Cloiſters.

We take our leave at the Armenians Burying-Place.

Taking our leave of this City, we were uſhered out as we came in, the Armenians compelling us to take a Treat in their Garden appropriated for the Burying of their Dead, where were many Neat Tombs; but the Oddeſt, becauſe New, was one beſet with Young Cypreſs Trees, and Trimmed to that advantage, that they ſtood like deep Mourners Clad with Sable Green; pretty Attendants by their Tapering Figure to ſo ſad an Office.

Letter V.

Repositories for Snow, Ice, and Tobacco used by the Vulgar.

Zergoon.

The River Araxes, now Bindamire.

On the outside of this City are Repositories for Snow and Ice, which they preserve to Cool their Wine with, and Sell it constantly in the Market for such uses; these are fine Buildings. Ice dissolved in their Liquors, is as prevalent, even among the Vulgar, as Drinking Tobacco. When we had crossed the fruitful Valleys and Hills of Vines, we turned out of the high Road to Ispahaun, to a poor Village called Zergoon, Inhabited by Mulateers, in the plain of Persepolis, Fifteen Miles distance from Siras.

From hence to the River Bindamire, or the River Araxes, (famous for its untraced Windings upon the Mountains, and sometimes under their very Bottoms, till by its rapid course it vents its self into the Sea), were Twelve Mile more; which having passed, I began to revolve whether ever Alexander, the Macedonian Victor, had been over it or no; which because it is Recorded he passed his Army over Araxes by a Bridge of his own Building, I know not if that be proof enough of this being that River, or of his passing this place more than that; the Stream runs with a Torrent whereby it is unsafe Fording the River without such a Suppliment.

Though as if that were too Trite and Common, I cannot forbear without some Mirth, relating what I had from a Persian in this Journy, pointing to an Hill; There, quoth he, stands the Monument of a Miracle performed by Band Haimero, the Prophet who gave Name and Credit to this Plain, and consequently to the Bridge athwart this River, which is a thing beyond Human reach to effect, otherwise too mean to exact our Belief.

This Prophet was one of the Twelve Apostles, or Successors of Mahomet; nor was this Fact unworthy of so great a Title; for he leading an Host this way, after a notable descent of Rain, which caused this place to overflow, the progress of his Forces was thereby impeded; which he peceiving, thus bespoke that Mountain, March into the middle of the Waters Confluence, and lay thy self in that manner, that there be sure Footing for my Host; to whom it readily obeying, became an high Road for his Soldiers to pass over dry shod: But when after this device he had Ferried over his Multitude, it was told him an huge Casm, or Hell-Kettle was left where the Mountain had emptied its self; not being much concerned at the Accident, and meeting a Country Fellow who by chance had a Cheese, he cast it into the Well; which was not filled so, but that it gave occasion to the Satyrists of that time to Lampoon it in their own Language,

Band Haimero has Agger hau tauk koonet As Colobe Painer has.

What wanting is to fill the place,
Not from Band Haimer is, but the Cheese.

Why called Bindamire.

Band was the Epithet to the Prophet, which signifies Abstemious, a Virtue more admired than followed, and Haimero his Proper Name, wherefore both the Bridge and Plain, as well as River, by Boterus is corruptly called Bindamire, as appears by this ridiculous Tale, Tale; which I mention for this end, that the true Appellation the Perſians now give them, and their Reaſon for it may be recovered. Chap. IV.

The Bridge over the River is very old, raiſed high by four Arches, in the middle a Watch-Tower for the Rhadars to look out on, to apprehend ſuch as ſhall by By-ways attempt to deprive them of their Cuſtoms, as alſo to be at hand to ſecure thoſe that Travel the Road.

We ſuſpect the Rhadars to be Robbers at Meergoſcoon.

Unleſs ſometimes they connive at Excurſions for their own Booty, as this Day we had cauſe to ſuſpect; for this Evening the Rear of our Caphala we had taken with us, being only Servants with Arms (the other coming more leiſurely, kept the direct Road), were ſet upon twice; but finding them in a condition to receive them, they wheeled off in the Dusk, but with an intention to take us napping when we were in our Lodgings at Meergoſcoon, Twelve Mile off the Bridge, ſmooth Way, full of Farms and Country Towns; among which Plain dealing ſeems moſt an end to be their only Guard; for they being alarmed by the Rogues that dogged us, roſe immediately in our defence, and gave us notice of our Danger, after one of the Villains, on pretence to light his Pipe, had rudely broke in upon us, to diſcover in what Poſture we were, who perceiving their Pains would be only Blows, gave us no farther diſturbance.

Perſepolis now Chulminor.

However we were the more willing on this account to get up by the crowing of the Cock, to purſue our Journy to Perſepolis, whoſe Ruins we had reached by Break of Day; when having compaſſed its Marble Foundations (being above, an Area of a large Extent, on the Plain an high Wall, giving ſome Pains to the attollent Muſcles of the Neck, to give the Eyes leave to reach its Height), we clambred a ſpacious Staircaſe united ſome part of the Way up, when on each hand it led to the ſeveral Apartments two different Ways; at top were the Portals, and the Heads of the Columns worn with Age (damnoſa enim quid non imminuit dies) which conſumes every thing; whoſe Bodies were Corinthian, but the Pedeſtals and Capitals of Dorick Order, as might be gained from what had reſiſted the corroding Jaws of Time, hardly lifting up their Reverend Crowns, though of moſt durable Stone.

Being entred the Pomærium of Cambyſes Hall (if Faith be to be given to the moſt Learned of theſe Relators), at the Hall Gates we encountred two horrid Shapes both for Grandeur and Unwontedneſs, being all in Armour, or Coat of Mail, ſtriking a Terror on thoſe about to intrude; their Countenances were of the fierceſt Lions, and might paſs for ſuch, had not huge Wings made them flying Gryffons, and their Bulk and Hinder-Parts exceeded the largeſt Elephants.

Storks build on the Pillars.

In this Auguſt Place only Eighteen Pillars of Forty remain, about Fifty Foot high, and half an Ell Diameter, of the diſtance of eight Paces one from another, though we could count the Twenty two Baſes; which agree with the Perſian Memoirs, who therefore ſtill call it Chulminor, The Palace of Forty Pillars: Theſe may be ſeen on the Plain a great way, and at preſent are the Reſidence only of the Tyrants of the Lakes and Fens, Storks only keeping their Court here, every Pillar having a Neſt of them.

Letter V.

Nutrit ubi implumes peregrina Ciconia fætus,
Ad nidos abies conſita primo fuit.

Which may ſerve to contradict the received Opinion, of Storks abiding only where Commonwealths are; this always having been an Empire, and at this time is the moſt Abſolute in all the Earth.

Beyond theſe, many Pieces and Scraps of Antiquity offer us a View, and great Coloſſus's ſupporting vaſt Giants, as if they had been Yeomen of the Guard in the Anti-room to the Preſence-Chamber, which was Eighty Foot Square, where on the Fragments of Walls ſtanding, and over the Porticoes eſpecially, were moſt curiouſly cut out of delicate White Shining Marble, Men in Military Habit, like the Old Grecian Phalanx (if there be leave for Conjecture) encompaſſing a Monarch repreſented ſitting on his Throne, with a Moving Canopy, ſuch as the Eaſtern Kings have carried over them: On other parts Bucephalus, or if that pleaſe not, ſome Perſian Steed priding himſelf to carry an Emperor, or ſome Demi-god. Becauſe neither Quintus Curtius, nor after him Plutarch, mention the reedifying this Palace either by Alexander or any of his Captains, yet I cannot let it paſs without this Remark, That they are habited more like the Ancient Grecians, than Perſians now are; beſides, the Hair of their Heads is hanging down, and not tied up, which is different from the Modern Faſhion of this Country.

In this Apartment Eight Doors ſeem to anſwer each other, Two on each ſide of every Square; which Conformity is attended with extraordinary Elegance and Workmanſhip; the Roof ſeems never to have had any intervening Pillars, and whether the Beams were of Cedar, it is not ſo fortunate as to have a Voucher of its own Nation. Many other Parts declared Coſt and Pains enough, but nothing more worthy Study than the Characters fairly impreſſed and engraven, which would unfold the Truth of the Founders of this Building, were they as Intelligible as Legible; for they remain like the Hand-writing on the Wall (Mene Tekel), till ſome Divine Expoſitor interpret them; yet I muſt needs ſay, many of the Characters may be found in the Greek Alphabet.

This vaſt Fabrick is made bigger, by being joined to a great Mountain, out of whoſe Entrails were worn, rather than digged, Noble Caverns with Stately Sculptures, and wide Ponds of living Water conſtantly diſtilling from the Marble Rocks, either for bathing or neceſſary uſes: It is an admirable Piece, overlooking all the Plain, where we took this day's Repaſt, and over Head ſaw the Corniſh of the Frontiſpiece embelliſhed with the Royal Arms of the Perſian Emperor, immediately on the Union of the Medes and Perſians into one Empire, which was a Ram's Head delineated as far as the Cheſt.

A Ram's-head the Arms of Perſia.

In the Afternoon we ſaw another of the ſame Make, anſwering the other part of the Palace, and underneath on the Plain took notice of Two Pillars at a fit diſtance, the one for the Goal, and the other for the Starting-place of their Courſers when they run Races. Having thus finiſhed our Perambulation, we deſcended on the contrary trary ſide we came up, and found there Goats and Sheep grazing on the Graſs between the Joints of the Pavements; but on the Walls of the Staircaſe (which conſiſted of an Hundred and twenty Stairs of Black Marble on each ſide, till they united to Forty more, which delivered us to the Plain) were the Portraictures both of Men and Beaſts on each ſide, and more of this Ancient Writing diſtinct in large Panes; at the Bottom whereof our Horſes waiting us, we mounted, and returned to Meergoſcoon, not a full Pharſang from hence.

Ruſtam a Prince of the Gaurs.

The following Day drove us, out of the ſame Curioſity, over ſeveral Branches of Bindamire River, to enquire for other Structures of the like Nature, of which theſe Mountains afford plenty, bating the great Area of Perſepolis, which diſtinguiſhes it from theſe; but we did not alight for theſe, ſatisfying our ſelves to ſtare on them from beneath, they being fit only for Atlaſſes, or for Winged Folk to look into, there being no paſſage to them, appearing like Dens or open Holes on the ſides of the Rocks, from their very Mouths perpendicular to the Ground: Only one above the reſt attracted our Sight and Animadverſion, reported and ſtill averred to be of old the Court of Ruſtam, an Ancient King of the Gaurs or Gabers (the true Original Perſian Race), whoſe Statue was of a Gigantine Stature, on as large a ſized Horſe, triumphing over his Foes at the Front of his Cave, with many Attendants clad down to the Heels, with Caps on their Heads (not Turbats) and their Hair looſe about their Shoulders.

Uncertain whether it be Perſepolis.

From whence obſerving frequent Numbers of theſe, I was apt to collect, that even what goes now for the Perſepolis which Alexander gave leave in a Drunken Fit to be ſet on Fire at the Requeſt of the Coſtly Thais, may be the Ruins of ſome Heathen Temple, having ſeen of the ſame Receſſes among the Idolatrous Indians, which they ſtill pay Adoration to, and own to be the Temples of their Gods.

But that that City might ſtand in this Plain, not only the received Tradition among all European Travellers, but the concurrent Opinion of undoubted Hiſtorians, certify with all the probable Conjectures.

From hence under theſe high Hills we kept our Courſe, proving it to be a Wealthy Plain, ſtored with all Cattel, Corn, and Wild Fowl, by the plentiful Afflux of Water to the River from the Mountains, and Cuts from the River into the Plain, whereby it might be a fit Situation for the mighty Perſepolis, as it now is for ſtore of Country Towns, beſides whole Armies of Nomades, or wandring Shepherds, who pitch their Tents with all their Families, wherever they find a Soil ſuitable to their Employment. Not far from whom were multitudes of ſuch Tombs as we met with at Bonaru Level, which perhaps may give ſome ſurer Account than that more Romantick one in appearance we met with there, of their being the dying Trophies of former Battels; though here wants not matter to countenance ſuch Tales to thoſe of eaſy Faith. For two Mountains ſhut up this happy Campaign ſo, as if Nature had taken ſpecial Care of its Security; which as formerly they terminated the Territories of the contending Gaurs, by their oppoſite Poſition, that nothing could creep between them them unexamined, ſo it is not unlikely that theſe were the Strongholds Artibazanes defended againſt Alexander, when he repulſed him, and had put a Stop to the Torrent of his Victories, had not a Perſian Ruſtick ſhewed him an unknown Paſſage by the Pylæ Perſicæ, or Poſtern-Gates on the back of theſe Mountains, which opened a Way to his farther Progreſs, as well as to the raviſhing this thus baſely betray'd Country to the Lawleſs Rape of an ungovern'd Ambition. To conclude therefore from hence, That theſe Burial-Places took their beginning ſo long ago, as it would ſavour of ſmall Judgment in the Affirmative, yet it may leave ſome ground to the credulous, that it is poſſible ſome as notable Fights might ſucceed, for the gaining ſuch a Key to ſo Rich and Spacious a Valley, as well from time to time after Alexander, as that not a Century ſince, this Part remained almoſt unſubdued, till Shaw Abas the Great brought it to perfect Obedience, when there might be occaſion for ſuch Interments, if their Piety extended to ſuch a Care of the Dead.

The Straits where Artibazanes repulſed Alexander.

Letter V.

But theſe Field-Inhabitants incline me to think it their Work, being far from any Town; though the common Fame give it to the other Report, as well to aggrandize their foregoing Anceſtry, as to caſt a Luſtre on the preſent Poſterity. This may ſerve alſo to prove their Scythian Antiquity; for as the Worthy Mr. Sheringham obſerves, Sacæ opiliones Aſiam incolentes; that the Sacæ were wandring Shepherds; whoſe Names, to ſhew their Original, he derives from the Hebrew סבכה, i. e. Tabernaculum, or Tent in Engliſh; from whence came the Getæ, as well as preſent Perſians, from their frequent diſburthening themſelves by Colonies diſperſed both into Scythia, ſo to Europe as well as Aſia, where they firſt inhabited.

Maijm.

From Meergoſcoon to this Strait is meaſured Twenty Mile, which finiſhes not this Stage, for now we were encompaſſed again with Rocks and Stones among the Mountains, (which we know whoſe Inſtigation it was to command they ſhould be made Bread), our Proviſions being ſpent which we had taken for this Deviation; wherefore we were forced to march Twenty Miles farther, to Maijm, before either we or our Cattel baited; where we arriv'd before our Caphala we had left at Siras, they pretending they had loſt their Way, but more truly lingred, not having us to ſpur them on; wherefore we were obliged this Night to make the Earth our Lodging, our Arms our Bolſters, and the uneven Stones our Feather-beds; which though we Travellers often do in this Journey out of choiſe, yet we found it diſagreeable, becauſe the Nights now were as intenſely Cold, as the Days were Hot. In the Forenoon to the next Day the Caphala came, which created us this Day's Stay at Maijm, a Town where grows the beſt Walnuts, of the ſame bigneſs with the Spaniſh, and the choiceſt Tobacco Perſia affords.

After a ſweet Night's Repoſe, early in the Morn between the Straits of the Mountains, we traced the Source of the River Araxes, purling under ſlippery Pebbles, which no ſooner removed, than the Cryſtal Water bubbles forth, by which means, though a little ſuppreſſed at firſt, in Half a Mile's ſpace it emits a Stream able to drive Three Mills, which notwithſtanding were not forcible enough to reſtrain the impetuous Blaſts of Heat pent in between the Hills:

Although

Although on the other ſide when we approached in the Night, all the Cloaths we had, wrapped about us, could hardly preſerve the innate Warmth, when the Sun had ſhrowded its ſelf under the Horizon. Chap. IV.

At Noon-day we overcame an high Mountain after a troubleſome Luctation, this delivering us to another Golden Plain of Ojoan, gilded over with Ripe Wheat, being no more than Five Miles from Maijm.

This Ojoan glories in the Sepulchre of another Royal Prophet, which is well endowed with neat Dwellings and Orchards for the Mullahs, who take their Service by turns to officiate in their Prieſthood, by loud Exclamations and Muſick calling People to their Devotions: In this Manſion we were permitted to make our Abode this Day; which becauſe it was ſo ſhort a Munſel, and theſe Gardens ſo delightful, I could not but give my ſelf the Pleaſure to reflect as well on thoſe Plants we had met wild, as theſe more cultivated which grew here. Ojoan.

The Bitter Almond-Tree we met formerly in the Highways wild, if it may be called a Tree, and not a Shrub; the Body reſembles an Haſle, but ſlenderer, from whence come Stalks like Broom, on which ſprout Leafs ſynonimous to our Privet; it brings forth Fruit in March or April, and delights in Hot and Barren Countries.

The Sweet Almond grows on a taller Tree, whoſe Leafs are like Aſh, and ripen about the ſame time. The Sweet Almond.

The Piſtacia ſends forth its Branches on high, and renders its Nuts edible in Autumn, whoſe Leafs are as big as a Walnut's, covered underneath with a ſoft Grey Down; all theſe are covered with a ſucculent Green Shell like a Walnut without, which includes an harder within, in the Shape and Subſtance we have them brought: Though I find them differently deſcribed both by Gerard and Lobelius. Piſtacia Nut.

The Capper-Shrub accompanies us in the Valleys from Caifer hither, and is encompaſs'd with Prickles ſomething emulating our Goosberries; the Leaf is ſhaped like Purſlain; the Seeds or Fruit, which we call Cappers, have a Cod not different from the Cod of the Major Cardamom, in which they are incloſed: In May the Flower is white and open, like a Sweet-Briar's. The Capper Shrub.

The lofty Pine, the Top of the Woods, as well as of thoſe floating on the Main, is not ſo Tall in Aſia as in Europe, though ſtrait up to the very Top, and is not bunched till the Boughs aloft thruſt out the Leafs to embrace the Woody Subſtance of its Cone-like Apple; the Body is ſcaled like the Palm-Tree. The Pine.

The Peach by way of Excellence is termed, The Perſian Apple; nor does it leſſen the Repute, it far exceeding here what can be ſaid in its praiſe in other Countries. The Peach.

The Pomgranat is paſſing good, being the juicieſt and biggeſt I ever met with, nor does any parallel them, unleſs thoſe about Babylon. The Pomgranat.

Early the next Morning we departed from Ojoan, beginning to alter our Courſe, the Air being more moderate, croſſing a River (by a Bridge) running the whole length of the Plain, in whoſe Boſom great ſtore of Corn was nouriſhed, it looking yellow, and fit for the Sickle: On the other hand, in the Meadows and Marſhes were were Droves of Fat Cattle, and all things appeared with the ſame Face as in England; we enjoyed this Accommodation till we came to Aſpaſs, four Pharſangs; it is a Village ſhelter'd by the Mountains on the North, from whence ſpring many Rivulets of Fountain-Water, diſperſed among the Under-Grounds a little too much; by whoſe Exuberance, Flags, Reeds, and Oſiers offer Covert to Wild Boars, and Habitation to ſome Water-Fowl.

Letter V.

Aſpaſs once governed by an Engliſhman.

Here a Countryman of ours is remembred to be Governor of a Caſtle (whoſe Ruins ſtill are extant) for Shaw Abas the Great, in the beginning of King James the Firſt's Reign; viz. Sir Anthony Shirley, who took Pay under the Emperor to defend this Paſs: It is now inhabited by Georgian Chriſtians, who are Tillers of the Ground and Planters of Vines, which are very productive on the ſides of the Hills: They are Whiter than the preſent Perſians, and of a florid Complexion, being Portly well-limb'd Fellows: Many of them have embraced the Mahometan Faith after the Perſian Sect, being Vaſſals to the Emperor.

Cuſcuzar.

By the favour of the riſing Moon, Auguſt the firſt, we brought the higheſt part of another Mountain under our Feet, it dividing this Plain from another Rich Valley cloathed with Green Graſs, and therefore dedicated to the Paſture of the King's Breed of Horſes, among which were Choice Ones of very great Value: We paſſed two Pharſangs to Cuſcuzar, giving both Name to the Valley and Village: Here is a ſmall but delicate Caravan Ser Raw, though ſomething improvidently built, the Upper Part being too heavy for the Foundation, it being paved with large Square Stone over the Cloyſters, which already begin to preſs down the Walls, which are moſt elegantly adorned with Painted Bricks and Poliſhed Marble, both too weak for ſo great a Weight.

The Mountains capped with Snow.

As we ſtrove early the next Morning to reach the end of the Plain, being Thirty Miles, and very wide withal, our ſhivering Joints made us as ſenſible of Cold, as if the Frozen Bear had hung over our Heads: Nor muſt we wonder, ſince the Air is rarified, being ſoiled by no Lake, River, or Standing Pools, nor near any Sea or Gulph for ſome Hundreds of Miles; and to this Thinneſs of the Air another Reaſon is joined, the Mountain-Tops around this Plain all the Year long are capped with Snow; from whoſe Ribs the Sun diſſolving them, is the only occaſion of watering this Valley, where no other Supply can be had, or not ſo frequent as this; and his hotteſt Rays are not powerful enough (as 'tis credibly reported by all, though my Eyes I muſt confeſs were too ſhort-ſighted to inform me, the Summer being far ſpent, and this more extremely hot than uſual), to melt all that fell in the Winter-Seaſon; to which I appearing unbelieving, there was preſent a poor Ruſtick, who for a ſmall Reward proffered to bring me a Piece to convince me; but having ſeen it nearer the Port, I did not think it impoſſible.

Degurdu.

We kept on to Degurdu, ſignifying the Walnut Town, where grew never an one, and lodged our ſelves here before Noon, the Sun not in the leaſt annoying us.

The

Chap. V.

A Ditch at Esduchos parts Persia from Parthia.

The Day after we Marched Two and Thirty Miles to Esduchos: But before we exchanged Degurdu for this place, we accosted a Black Marble Mountain, worn as smooth as Glass, and as slippery as Ice, by the constant footing of all sorts of Animals, so that we slode step by step, as our Horses do in deep Way, with this only advantage, that we had sound Bottom: Beneath this a small Plain led us to the brink of a vast Precipice, the utmost Limits of Pharsestan, or the Old Persian Realm; here a deep broad Ditch, through which a troubled muddy Rivulet runs under a Stone Bridge, (the whole being not Broader than our Thamesis) parts this Country from Parthia: We remained this Night on the Persian side, in a Magnificent Brick Caravan Ser Raw, Built on the descent into the Trench, which Westward on the dry Banks was stored with fine Gardens and fruitful Orchards; over which on the other side was truly verified what might be Fabulously delivered of Semiramis's Pendulous Gardens and Summer-Houses, there being Tenements made over this Moat out of the ancient Fortifications, barring the Persian Incroachments on their Confines, whose Mouldring Sands have left the jetting Rocks the bare supporters of these hanging Buildings. The finest Wheat of all the Emperor's Dominions is of the growth of this Soil, the Bread whereof is in highest Esteem.

CHAP. V.

Our Progress into Parthia; Entrance into Spahaun, and Reception there.

ENTRING Parthia by this Mound, or heap of Earth, seemingly cast up on purpose to make this hollow Gulph, we were opposed by no other Mountains till we came to Moxutebeggy, though we encountred almost in every Village with old Castles made of Mud and almost turned to Earth again; in whose stead, at the Emperor's Charge, are maintained many Dovecots, pleasantly seated in Gardens, for the sake of their Dung, to supply the Magazines with Salt-Petre for making Gunpowder, they having none else but what is Foreign.

Old Castles turned into Dovecots.

These Dirt-Forts might lie buried in silence, were it not for the worthy Memory of the Person who first undertook to demolish them, thereby expressing his Faith and Loyalty to his Prince.

The Tragical fall of Imaum Cooly Caun.

For the Renowned Shaw Abas being placed in his Throne by the Valour and Conduct of the Trusty Imaum Cooly Caun, Maugre all the opposite Factions of Court and Empire, he could not be reckoned to sit firm on his Throne, so long as these Impediments remained in the Hands of either Friend or Foe, because that they not only enabled the Possessors to stand on Terms with the Emperor, but were a sure Refuge, not only to Villains and Traitors, but to Thieves and Robbers, as well as Fugitives that fled from the hands of Justice; whereby they became at once an Obſtacle to Trade, Preying on the Subjects at their own pleaſure, and became Lurking places, as well as Sanctuaries, to the King's Enemies, bidding Defiance, and many times oppoſing the Forces of the Empire.

Letter V.

To Suppreſs which Inſolencies, and Revenge himſelf on Offended Majeſty, none under the Imperial Banners appeared a more vigorous Chaſtiſer than this General, behaving himſelf with that Proweſs, that he overthrew the Neſts of Robbers, releaſed the People from their Fears, and reſtored an entire Tranquility to the Monarchy: For which mighty Deeds he received a Reward altogether Injurious and Undeſerved; for at his return to Court, being Courteouſly received with all the Marks of Favour and Royal Complements, his Jealous Maſter Invited him far from the City into the Woods to Hunt, remote from the Army, whoſe Life and Delight he was, the better hereby to Intrap him, not being able otherwiſe to perform his Deſign; but even here, when he was Seized by the Command of the Emperor, he was proffered his Eſcape by his Keepers, which he refuſed, knowing his Innocence; but this ſerved to enrage Shaw Abas the more, ſo that he could not be quiet till he had the Death of this Great Man; who fell for no other Cauſe, than Virtue emulated and envied by his Lord, he being too much the People's Darling; which makes that Maxim true, Kings Hate where they Fear, Reges ut oderint dum metuant; he having obliged beyond Retaliation.

Shaw Abas being otherwiſe a great Hero, ſtrictly bound himſelf to the obſervance of the Rules of Virtue, only where a Jealouſy of his Honour was tainted by Popular Air, according to the Axiom of Julius Cæſar, Si violandum eſt jus, regnandi cauſâ violandum, cæteris rebus pietatem colas.

Moxutebeggy.

Moxutebeggy is near Twenty Miles from Eſduchos, and admits us into a Caravan Built on the Road; through whoſe Gates all that Travel this Road muſt paſs as under a Buzzar, where we took up in a Convenient Room, formerly deſigned for a Coffee-Houſe, having a Tank of Water in the middle, with broad Seats around, either to Lie or Sit on.

Here among the Tombs I took notice of ſeveral Figures on the Grave-Stones; which, becauſe repugnant to the Command of their Prophet, I had a mind to be informed the meaning of, which they told me was only to expreſs the ſeveral Ages of the Departed; as one that Died in the ſtrength of his Age (ſpeaking of whom, they term King of the World) had a Lion Deciphered on his Grave-Stone; many of which I found in ſundry places; whereby I am confirmed, that Repreſentations, or Emblems, were not wholly abdicated by the Perſians; which I ſuppoſe alſo to be a Relick of their Scythian Extract, what Power, notwithſtanding Religion ſince introduced, may have over their Conſciences, yet this ſhews their natural Inclination to their Primitive Cuſtom; for Getæ ſiquidem Hieroglyphicis ex diverſis animalium figuris ſepulchra decorabant, quibus tacite vel res geſtas, vel officia adminiſtrata, vel mores, vel virtutes, aut vitia mortui notârunt: Lupo tyrannum, Agno tranquillum, Porco ſordidum, Equo generoſum, Leone Regem, Aquilâ fortem exprimebant. Shering. p. 472. Annot. ultim.

Come Shaw.

From this Town to Come Shaw (i. e. the King's Friend) is reckoned Twenty four Miles more, which was a Town of Caravan Ser Raws, made of Mud and generally tubilated atop; in which we refuſed to take up this Summer time, deſiring more Air; and for that purpoſe choſe the Mauſolæum of another Prophet of theirs, Shaw Rezin, in the middle of a great Grove of Elms.

The Superſtition of the Perſians.

Under theſe ran a purling Brook, which fed a Sacred Fiſhpond full of Fiſh Dedicated to this Tomb, as appears by their Noſes and Finns being hung with Gold Rings; with which odd, and doubtleſs to them unvalued Adornment, they Swam up and down in the clear Water, and tamely would viſit all Comers, for Meat; beſides theſe, here were Ducks devoted to as foppiſh a Maintenance; which no one dare meddle with under pain of Excommunication and dreadful Anathema's: Which Superſtitions I could not but admire to be Licenſed among the Moors.

Dovecots for Salt-Petre.

As we drew nigher Spahaun, the Dovecots were more thick and more ſtately, they being covered over with a white Plaiſter, and neater than thoſe we firſt ſaw: Of ſuch concern is it to the King to preſerve theſe.

Mayar.

The next Day brought us to Mayar, Twenty Miles farther, (another Town of Country Caravans) through Gravelly, Unfruitful, but Plain way, and good to Travel.

Mirge.

In the Afternoon therefore, we went to Mirge, Eight Miles more, to an old lonely Inn, where was the laſt place we ruſticated. The Morning following being met by the Citizens of Spahaun beyond the Urchin Hills, Three Miles from Mirge, who Congratulating our Arrival, ſpread in the Highway a noble Table on Carpets furniſhed with the Delicacies of this Country, which is enough to commend it both for Cold Treat, Fruit, and Wine.

Met by the Citizens.

After we had received their Complements, they undertook to be both our Guide and Guard to Iſpahaun, Three Miles farther, defending us againſt the unwary Inſults of Thieves, with which this place is infeſted; being a fit place for Robbery among the undiſcovered Mazes of the Mountains, eſpecially while the Emperor is Reſident with his Army; who living beyond their Pay, are often attempting to maintain their Luxury by ſuch unlawful Enterpriſes.

A Proſpect of Iſpahaun.

From this Avenue we had a fair Proſpect of the City, filling the one half of an ample Plain, few Buildings, (beſides the High Towers of the Moſques and Palace Gates) ſhewing themſelves, by reaſon of the high Chinors, or Sicamores ſhading the choiceſt of them; yet the Hills begin to keep a more decent diſtance, and we paſſed part of a ſpacious Field before we Saluted the City; into which we entred by Two fair Rows of Elms, on each hand one, planted by the ſides of the Chryſtal Streams, reaching a long way through a broad Street, whoſe Paved Cawſeys Conducted us to the River;

Sic Anguſtiis à nobis devictis ad Auguſta ferimur.

Letter V.

Which River was Fifty Ells wide, but not Navigable; this Summers drought having made it Fordable in many places, especially now the Emperor fills this place with his Court and confluence of Military Men; the great Commanders and Ministers of State diverting the Channel to their own private Commodity, and for want of this Years Rains, it is hardly sufficient, (they Watering their Gardens therewith) by reason of which unkindly Nurture, both the Beauty and Goodness of the Fruit and Trees do Flag this Autumn.

A Stately Bridge.

Here at the Foot of the Bridge waited to bid us Welcome the Jelfeline Christians, with the several Europe Residents, as Dutch, French, Portugal, and Russian, with their respective Trains, Trumpeters with their Ensigns, and Led Horses richly Trapped, with Shotters and Pages, besides those of our own, appearing in their greatest Glory; thus Attended we were brought over a most Magnificent Bridge with Arches over our Heads, and on both sides Rails and Galleries to view the River, the Cloysters whereof were Paved with broad Marble, in which were several Niches and open Portals; the upper part was all Brick, the Foundations Black Marble with gradations to the bottom.

Covered Buzzars.

Which led us to a stately large Street, continued on the other side with equal Gallantry of Buildings and Trees, till we were carried under their Lofty-Ceiled and Stately-Erected Buzzars; these Edifices running into all the busy parts of the City in an almost-joined Stack of Structures, (sometimes directly, other times interfereing) not much unlike our Westminster-Hall, with Shops on either Hand, just like them, which is, I confess, the surprizingest piece of Greatness in Honour of Commerce the whole World can boast of, our Burses being but Snaps of Buildings to these famous Buzzars.

Yet to let you know I am not so foppish an Admirer of Foreign Splendour, as to forget to give the due Reverence to my own Nation; they, as they exceed any thing of that kind with us, the extremity of Heat and Cold which this Country is subject to, obliging them to this Contrivance, for their Customers sake as well as their own, to defend them from the Injury of the Weather; so it would be vain in our Countrymen to attempt it, who enjoy better Houses than these dare seem to Erect; and have a Warehouse in every Shop, when these, at best, have no more to shew than their Stalls, however specious Fabricks they are shrowded under; admitting Lights by Lanthorns a-top, or open Holes, not on the sides, the better to Illustrate their Goods, and cast False Lights on them.

The Midan, or Hypodrome.

Through these we were directed to the Midan, or Hypodrome, an Oblong Square Court, where the Horses are Exercised before the King's Palace, and where are upper and lower Walks, with open Arches for Spectators; not Inferior, though of different Shape, to the old Amphitheatres.

The Royal Mosque and Throne over the Palace Gate.

At the Entry the Royal Mosque, with its variagated Marble Pillars, possesses the highest end, on whose left hand runs the Front of the Palace; the Gates whereof are guarded by several Brass Basilisks, where several Chevaliers Mounted, as well as Foot Soldiers, stood on Duty, over which is the Imperial Throne, all Covered with Gold : Chap. V.

Regia cujus erat ſublimibus alta columnis
Clara micante auro.——

From whence the Emperor beholds the Combats between Lions and Bulls, or Perſian Rams ſet to run at one another ; the Tournaments of the Nobles Tilting at each other, or on Courſers full Speed, ſtriving to Shoot backward with Bow and Arrow, (after the Parthian Cuſtom) at a Golden Bowl fixed on an high Pole, which who Hits by Fixing his Dart, is not only extolled with threefold Praiſe, but carries the Prize away, and is taken notice of as a Candidate for the next Preferment: Where the Inferior Citizens have a ſhare in their Diverting their Prince, by entring the liſt to Wreſtle, and Gladiators ſometime have the Honour to Kill one another.

A Clock-Houſe.

Over-againſt this Baſilick Seat, a Clock-Houſe anſwers it; as if it had relation to Homer's Fancy, who makes the Hours to preſide over Heaven Gates, the Abode of his mighty Jove.

The Exchange and Engliſh Houſe.

At the lower end the Royal Exchange, or Queſhery, (filled with Plate and Jewels, like our Lombardſtreet) opens its folding Doors, over whoſe riſing Porch, in ſtately Turrets, the King's Muſick alternately reſound and compleat this Noble Square, whoſe Court is ſo large, except on ſuch Days as theſe, as to make room enough for a great Fair. Through this Queſhery we paſſed under many Fine Buzzars, till we came to our own Palace, which was a noble one, both Siras and this being the King's Bounty ; nor are theſe mean, being as high as any beſtowed, under the Blood-Royal ; the Porches ſhining with Gilded Foliages, Architrave and Marble Pillars, as all the Palaces of their Nobles do ; here being reſigned we returned Thanks with the beſt Entertainment this City could afford, before our Friends departed.

Thus we accompliſh'd, on the Seventh of Auguſt, a tedious Journy in the hotteſt Seaſon of the Year, over deſolate parching Sands, and naked Rocks, through all Perſia into the heart of Parthia to Iſpahaun, not only the Chief City of this vaſt Empire, where the preſent Emperor ſets up his Standard, with all his moving Forces, but of Parthia eſpecially; in which Itinerary the Mountains never forſook us, nor for the greateſt part met we with other Water than what was Impure and Filthy, being devoid of the ſhelter of thick Woods, or Foreſts to ſhade us from the ſultrineſs of the Sun ; which was the worſt inconvenience that purſued us till within a few Days Journy of this City ; which though it appear a large Wood ſpread over the Plain by reaſon of the abundance of Orchards and Gardens, yet it wants more on that account than any other, (ſending at leaſt Twelve Days Journy for their Fuel, which is dearer than Victuals) and is Built with Brick and Mud for lack of Timber.

To the Store of Proviſions we carried with us, we never failed of a ſupply in ſome part where-ever we came ; and for Deer, Antilope, Wild Goat, and Sheep of the Mountains, moſt places places made us Preſents of them, which with Young Kids is not only a Noble, but Pleaſant Food.

Letter V.

The Diſtance of Iſpahaun from Bunder Gombroon.

From Bunder Abaſſee, or Gombroon, to Spahaun, is Seven hundred Miles, or an Hundred ſeventy five Pharſangs; which we performed in Thirty two Days, abating the Time for Refreſhment, and One Day for our Excurſion to Perſepolis.

A Pillar of Skulls.

We were not long here, but we muſt return the Civilities of thoſe who had honoured us with their Company; when riding through the Town, we lighted on an huge ſtupendious Pillar, compoſed of the Skulls of all ſorts of Creatures, occaſioned by an Oath of Shaw Abas the Great (of whom they hardly ſpeak without Idolizing his Memory, his Name being invoked when any Commendable or Famous Action is performed; ſaying, Shaw Abas, or Shabas, as we are wont to ſay, Well done;) for that the Great Men of this Place ſtanding out againſt his then unſettled Authority, he vowed, That if they perſiſted to diſpute, he would rear a vaſt Column of their Heads, to the eternal Reproach of their Diſobedience; who after ſome ſmall Capitulation, ſurrendred upon diſcretion, conſidering his implacable Revenge to the Obſtinate, and his Natural Propenſity to Clemency towards the Submiſſive; which was not effected ſo ſoon, but that he was forced to make uſe of an Equivocation to ſalve his Oath, commanding every one of them to bring a decollated Head of ſome Beaſt, and lay at his Feet, which accordingly they did; and he placed them into an entire Coloſs, as a Monument of Obloquy to their Indifferency, and an everlaſting Trophy of his ſubduing them. It is more than Sixty Feet in height, with a proportionable Circumference enlarged about the Baſis, which we could not meaſure, by reaſon of Market-Sheds built about it.

Romiſh Friars.

Here by the King's Permiſſion are not only allowed, but nouriſhed from the King's Table, all the Begging Friars of the Romiſh Order, with a ſmall Annuity to maintain them in a Pious Manner of Life; this ſame Shaw Abas beſtowing on them pretty Dwellings for Convents, with Orchards and Gardens, which they cultivate with their own Hands, live meanly, and up to the Rules of the Poverty preſcribed them; gaining for that reaſon a Reputation and Reverence not only from the Emperor, but the well inclined Subjects; who often by the King's Example ſend them Meat, Bread, and other Proviſions for their Suſtenance, and pay them a Reſpect equal to their own Devotes: And I muſt needs confeſs ſome of them are not only Holy Men, but Diſcreet and Learned, the Chief of whom is Father Raphael, a Capuchin, who has lived exemplary among them many Years, and is well acquainted with the Country, from whom I muſt own I received the beſt and moſt Authentick Information: And this I ſpeak knowingly of him, That he is no Intruder on Mens Principles, when about to depart this Life, as moſt of them are, but recommends them to God with their own Conſcience.

Theſe walk humbly about the Streets and Markets, diſcalceated, and in their diſtinct Habits, none of them mounting an Horſe, only the Superior of the Dominicans, who being Reſident for the Portugals, bears a Port ſuitable to that Character, and lives in a Splendid Palace, with Noble Walks and Gardens: Therein is a Magnificent

Chap-

Chappel, beautified with good Painting, Sculpture, and Rich Ornaments.

Having undergone the Pompous Fatigues of Saluting, and being thereby taught the Formalities of Compliments, more than truly acquainted with the Current of Affairs here; I found it true, That an exalted Pitch of State is more tireſome than a meaner Condition, it being only a more conſpicuous Confinement; for not to move abroad without a Retinue, is to have a Superviſor to every Motion, and a Man is leſs free either to obſerve or act: Wherefore being tutored before-hand what a Diſrepute it was to the Nation whoſe Title we bore, to appear to its Diſgrace, I reſolved to avoid that Indecency, and change my European Cloaths for a Perſian Veſt and Turbat, that I might walk about undiſcovered, without any Reflection to the Publick Miniſter of my Country, and give my Eyes that Satisfaction my Ears were not capable of receiving; by which Expedient my View was leſs tranſient, and I had time to dwell longer on any Object.

Jews are Druggiſts.

The firſt whereof that attracted my Stay, was to examine the Druggiſts, whom I found to be all Jews, who are very numerous, and live apart, though their Shops are in common with the Natives in the Buzzars, mixed among a Crowd of other Tradeſmen; who ſell by Retail, and paſs without any Brand, having their Synagogues open every Sabbath day. Theſe are the greateſt Brokers, and as cunning, if not exceeding the Banyans, who alſo are in every Corner, lurking to make a Prize.

Fruiterers.

The Fruiterers place themſelves at the Entry, and in the wide open Places under the Chief Cupuloes of their Buzzars, vending, beſides Fruit, Sherbets of Pomgranats, Prunellaes, Limes and Oranges, with Ice and Snow to cool them. Ice diſſolved in their Liquors, is as prevalent here as at Siras, ſo that the Poor, have they but a Penny in the World, the one half will go for Bread, and dried Grapes, or Butter-milk, and the other for Snow and Tobacco.

Silk Buzzars.

Beſides theſe common Buzzars, there are others ſet apart for choice Commodities, as Silks and Velvets, Sarbaff, that is, Gold and Silver Cloth, Embroidery, Perſian Carpets, both Woollen and Silk, intermixed with Gold and Silver very coſtly, which are the peculiar Manufacture of the Country: In theſe we meet with Merchants of all Nations and Languages, brought hither for the ſake of Traffick, who furniſh this City with all Foreign Wares, and in exchange carry the Product of this Land into the utmoſt Parts of the World.

The Armenians ſubtle Dealers.

On which account it is, the Armenians being skill'd in all the Intricacies and Subtilties of Trade at home, and travelling with theſe into the remoteſt Kingdoms, become by their own Induſtry, and by being Factors of their own Kindreds Honeſty, the Wealthieſt Men, being expert at Bargains wherever they come, evading thereby Brokeridge; and ſtudying all the Arts of Thrift, will Travel for Fifty Shillings, where we cannot for Fifty Thomands; ſetting out with a ſtock of Hard Eggs and a Metarrah of Wine, which will laſt them from Spahaun to the Port; riding on a mean Beaſt, which they ſell or ſhip off for Advance, their only Expence being Horſe-meat; travelling with no Attendance, their Matraſs ſerving at once for Horſe-

Letter V.

Horſe-cloth, and them to lye on; they are a kind of Privateers in Trade, No Purchaſe, no Pay; they enter the Theatre of Commerce by means of ſome Benefactor, whoſe Money they adventure upon, and on Return, a Quarter Part of the Gain is their own: From ſuch Beginnings do they raiſe ſometimes great Fortunes for themſelves and Maſters.

London Sack-cloth, or Woolen Cloth as cheap as in England.

And from theſe expatiating the Terreſtrial Globe, together with the mix'd Concourſe of other Merchants from all Parts it is, that the Commodities of all the Earth are ſeen in diſtinct Buzzars in this one City, as cheap as in their ſeparate Homes. For beholding the Sack-cloth Buzzar, for ſo they call Engliſh Cloth, I thought it exceeded Blackwell-Hall, or any Cloth-Fair in England, being piled in huge Quantities both in their Shops around the Buzzar, and Heaps amidſt thereof, of all Sorts, Colours, and Conditions; where I bought a Coat of Broad-Cloth to line with Furrs againſt the Winter, for Fourteen Shillings the Cobit, almoſt equal with our Yard, for what I am ſure I have paid Twenty Shillings the Yard at home.

Engliſh Cloth and Tin come to a Bad Market.

Whereby it was eaſy to gueſs, that the Company's Broad-Cloth came to a Bad Market, the Merchants bringing it in Truck for their Goods cheaper from the Mediterranean, than the Company could ſend it, of which at preſent there is a great Glut: Nor will their Tin fare much better, for that Tuthinage brought from the South-Seas anſwers in all reſpects, if not ſurpaſſes the fineſt of that Metal.

The Caravans of the City.

From hence I went to the Caravan Ser Raws, ſtately huge Fabricks of Brick and Stone, bigger than our Inns of Court, but far more uniform, being Three or Four Stories high, with Walks and Galleries; every Country has a ſeparate one, where they lodge whole Caphalaes for Sale of Indian Cloth, Turkiſh, Arabian, European, and all manner of Goods from the Four Quarters of the Univerſe. Here they Rent the Warehouſes and Apartments, not Let them out at free-coſt, as upon the Roads: The King and Queen, as they have built Royal Ones, receive from them a great Annuity: Some of theſe Caravan Ser Raws with their Goods and Chapmen, reſemble moſt our Leadenhall Market and Market-houſe (not for the Shambles there, which is beyond any other, but) for Hides and Leather from Bulgaria, Turky, and of their own dreſſing, which excels that we call Spaniſh, or the beſt Cordevan for Fineneſs, and Shagreen for Durableneſs; for Bridles, Harneſſes, Boots, and Shooes, here are beyond compare.

Balneos.

The next great Buildings are the Balneos, to which they go with as much Devotion as to their Temples, not permitting any Heterodox to their Opinion, to Bathe with them.

Coffee-houſes.

Their Coffee-houſes, as they are more publick, are fine Rooms, ſhining with Lamps in all their Buzzars.

Necromancers.

Nor can we forget another ſort of Black Traders, burning Light at Noon-day, which are the Necromancers, whoſe Shops are beſtuck with Candles lighted in every Hole, who pretend to unravel the Secrets of Nature, to diſcover Things loſt, help the fooliſhly-inquiſitive to the Sight of their Abſent Lovers, and by their Art can command Fate, and propheſy all things to wheedle their Admirers; which is ſo general, that they have Proſelytes of all Qualities and Degrees.

In

In their high Buzzars no Bakers or Cooks are allowed; and from all but their own ſeparate Stalls, are baniſhed Poulterers and Butchers. Chap. VI.

Colleges, Schools, and Temples, are very Magnificent; which will admit of a compleater Diſcuſſion in the General Account of this Country.

CHAP. VI.

Carries us to Jelfa; where is treated of the Gabers, or Original Perſians, the Armenians, Georgians, and Europe Artiſans.

IN the Interim therefore I ſhall attend the Agent to Jelfa, the Abode of the Armenian Chriſtians, from whence they receive the Name of Jelfalines: We paſs to this City through two or three of the Palace-Yards, by a great Gate that brought us to a long Walk planted on both ſides with high Sycamors, aſpiring like the lofty Cedar, whoſe Roots are waſhed with two Streams all the length of it. In the middle is a neat Bridge, built more politely than the other (though the Water has long ſince forſook the Channel): Leaving the Bridge on the left, we croſs the old bottom of the River to the Town, ſituate in the ſame manner Southwark is from London. Here inhabit not only Armenians, but the Ancient Gabers, who remain here with their Tribes; with ſome Mechanick French (as Jewellers, Gunſmiths, and Watchmakers); and ſome few Muſſlemen, as Spies rather than Inmates.

Of the Armenian Chriſtians here are more than Six thouſand Families, beſides an innumerable Company of diſperſed Husbandmen in the Villages, following their Patriarch in the ſame Faith. 6000 Families of Armenians in Jelfa.

The French are all Calviniſts.

The Gabers, or Gaures, are the true Perſian Race, the undoubted Heirs both of their Gentiliſm and Succeſſion, attributing Divine Honour to the Fire, maintaining it always alive in their Delubriums, or Places ſet apart for their Worſhip; and if by Chance they ſhould let it go out, they muſt take a Pilgrimage to Carmania, where their moſt Sacred Fire was never extinguiſhed, as if it were a Piacular Wickedneſs to attempt the renewing of it elſewhere, that being preſerved by a more than Veſtal Care, from the firſt time the Sun, their Chief Deity, was pleaſed to enlighten it with Sparks from its own Rays. The Gabers the Old Perſians.

The Men and Women are clad with long Veſts and Breeches to their Heels, the Hair of the Men appearing under their Caps or Bonnets; the Women have a long Mantle, and are bound about the Head with an Hair-lace, like the Deſcription Curtius gives of thoſe conquered after the Ruin of Perſepolis, who bound their Heads with the Slings they uſed to ſlay the Veniſon they fed on, ſtraggling on the Mountains, and kept in Dens and Caverns of the Earth, which made it a matter of great difficulty to overcome them.

Letter V.

How degenerated.

These seem to me the most lively Representations of the Figures both on the Rocks, and on the Palace it self at Persepolis: These are Instances how momentary the Grandeur of this World is: These, once the Lords of all the Earth that the Ocean washes on this Side, and the Hellespont shuts in on the other, forgetful of the Everlasting Name of the Grand Cyrus, who first subjugated the Medes and Assyrians under the Persian Yoak, and established the Seat of the Empire among their Renowned Ancestry: These, unhappy for their Sloth and Cowardise, are the reproachful Relicks, nay, Dregs rather of the former Glory of their Name and Nation, which once gave her Laws, as Unalterable Decrees to all People, Nations, and Languages: These thus dwindled and degenerated, are the miserable Posterity of the Persians; who for so many Ages have with a tame Patience submitted by a sordid Servitude to those whom their Forefathers would have scorn'd to have admitted to be their Slaves; only that they might idely enjoy their Country Gods, Adore the Eternal Fire, and the Influence of the Sun upon their Altars, now Beastly and Impious more than ever, because they have contaminated them with the Impure Rites and Diabolical Customs of the worst of Pagans.

Their Impure Feasts.

For there are some of them Couple together in their Sacred Feasts (as they term them) promiscuously, when they meet in their Delubriums, where they spread a clean Table-cloth on the Floor, on which they place their Banquets to inflame their Lascivious Heat, which must be acknowledged to be set on Fire by Hell, whatever the Extract that they Worship as a Spark of the Sun, may be defended to be. When they take away, they strew the foul Cloth with Meal-Flower, and the better to perpetrate their Incestuous Lusts, they put out the Lights, and shifting themselves stark naked, both Men and Women, the Men cast their Breeches on an heap in a Corner of the Room: Which being done, the Women run in the dark to catch as catch can; and whatever Lot they light on, the Lamps being again lighted, they firmly embrace for their Lover, if it be Father or Brother, or any other Relation: And which is still worse, the Night being spent in Bestiality, the nasty Flower (which by their Filthiness either of Vomit or Excrement in which they wallowed like Brutes) is kneaded into a Past, and eaten as a Sacrament to repeat the same ungodly Festival Annually, as if it were a Sacrifice well-pleasing to their Deities. But Propagation after this kind is as odious to Mankind, as offering Children to Moloch, or making them run through the Fire is execrable and abhorrent to Nature: Which made an Ancient Heathen, in detestation of such horrid Crimes offered as grateful Services to the Gods, burst out into this Exclamation: Every one indeed ought to have a Sense of Religion, and a profound Veneration for their Country-Gods transmitted by Tradition; but that the Immortal Gods should be appeased or pleased with such Wickedness, is the highest Frenzy to believe.

From these, those of India have learnt the same Principles of Religion; and hence it is they agree in their Ceremonies of exposing their Dead in an open Sepulcher, to be torn in pieces by Birds of Prey, and to adore the Sun as a Chief Being, and, subordinate to it, the the Four Elements; and here, as there, they are Preferred to no higher Employments than to Cultivate the Earth as Villains, not Inheritors.

Their Women are Comedians.

Out of the Women are choſen Whores, or Dancers for the Court, and Comedians for the Emperor; who by Geſture, Voice, or Shew, are Licenſed to utter things Prophane, Lewd, and Ridiculous to Chaſt Ears; only to move the itching Vanity of the Courtiers, indulging themſelves in Obſcenity.

They Feed on Fleſh, Live Naſtily; whereby that of Ovid is appropriated to them, Trux caper in alis; being of a Goatiſh Smell, as well as of a Rampant Temper, that they are rather an Antidote than Provocative to Lechery; ſo much fallen are they from their primitive Worth, according to the Obſervation of the Lyrick Poet:

Ætas Parentum, pejor Avis, tulit
Nos nequiores mox daturos
Progeniem vitioſiorem.

Our Fathers Life much worſe than Grandſires Age, Sees us more Wicked to produce
An Offſpring fuller of Abuſe.

Contrary to what has been reported by a Laureat in their Commendation:

Ille penes Perſas Magus eſt qui ſidera norit,
Qui ſcit herbarum vires cultumque deorum,
Perſepoli facit iſta Magos ſapientia triplex.

He 'mong the Perſians was a Wiſe Man thought,
Who knew the Stars and Worſhip'd as he ought,
Was Skill'd in Plants, and Virtues of them Taught.

Proper Names among them, are Cuſſet, Biram, Ruſtam, but the moſt general is Aſa; whereupon I ſhall let them paſs with this Remark, Whether we mayn't here find the Induſtrious Mr. Sheringham's Labour in ſearch of Truth anſwer'd in his far-fetch'd Aſæ; Aſa being the Commoneſt Name among the Gabers, whom he makes the Companions of Woden in his German Expedition; which ſtill confirms our Aſſertion, both of the World's being Repeopled from the Scythian Mountains, and of theſe being Allied to our Firſt Planters, however Degenerate they now appear. Among this Off-ſcum left to upbraid their Predeceſſors, are placed the Armenians, who are forced to comply to an over-ruling Fate, out of the ſame neceſſity that attends the Chance of War, but with a better reſerve to their Virtue, which is not altogether ſo much depreſſed.

The Armenians have a Civil Governor of their own, as well as one of the Moors.

Though the State, for publick Ends, think it convenient to interſperſe Moors among them, as the Egyptians wiſely enough did Task-Maſters over the Iſraelites in the Land of Goſhen, to ſuppreſs, by a timely foreſight, what might prove irremediable by an overgrowing

Letter V.

Strength; wherefore one of the Suffean Creed is Conſtituted Governor, to put an end to thoſe Differences they cannot Compoſe themſelves; who have for that purpoſe a Civil Magiſtrate of their own, Elected Yearly, to whoſe Arbitriment, if they ſubmit not, it is their own fault, nor can it be by any means imputed to the Tyranny of the Government, who leave them freely to try their own Cauſes.

They are under Protection of the Empreſs ſince their Tranſplanting to Jeifa.

For ſo it was provided by Shaw Abas when he deprived them of their own Princes, and redeemed them from the Turkiſh Slavery; between whoſe Arms and the Perſians, they hung miſerably harraſſed, according to the Succeſſes of eithers Forces, for a long time; removing them from Erewan, Taberez, and Syria, their Native Soil, he Tranſplanted them to Jelfa, and ſhaded them under the Protection of the Queen-Mother, aſſerting thereby their Rights and Privileges in an higher manner (abating ſome little Circumſtances) than the Moors themſelves; by which they became not only ſafe from their Enemies, but they improved the Glory of Spahaun by their unwearied Induſtry, there being many of them Credible Merchants at this time, accounted worth an Hundred thouſand Thomand (each Thomand being Three Pound and a Noble); ſo mightily do they increaſe under this Umbrage, in Riches and Freedom; for whilſt they ſit lazily at Home, their Factors abroad in all parts of the Earth return to their Hives laden with Honey; to which Exerciſe, after they themſelves have been brought up, they train their Children under the ſafe Conduct of Experienced Tutors, who inſtruct them firſt to Labour for a Livelihood, before they are permitted to Expend.

Thus this Prince not only expreſſed himſelf a good Patron, but a prudent Emperor, by Favouring their Deſigns, and taking all Occaſions from their Adverſaries of Injuring them, expoſed as they were to open Violence; and at Home Securing them from the Treachery and Envy of his own Subjects; not only allotting them a place over-againſt his own Palace to Build their City, but encouraging them to Rear Coſtly and well Endowed Temples, without any Moleſtation, to the Honour of the Bleſſed Name of Chriſt; ſhaking off thereby the dreadful fear of Captivity, they began to hope for better things, than they could promiſe themſelves in their diſtreſſed Condition.

Atque illi primum ſperare ſalutem
Sic Auſi, afflictis melius confidere rebus.

Their being forbid Coleons the cauſe of Apoſtatizing.

Nor was this hope founded on a vain confidence; for he diſtinguiſhed them neither in Habit, Exciſe, or Cuſtom, from his own Perſians, only excepting in one thing, ſmall and inconſiderable in its ſelf, being but an exterior piece of Honour; for it is not lawful, even for thoſe of the beſt Rank, to Ride into Spahaun with their Servants bearing after them their Coleons, or Glaſs Veſſels, out of which they Smoak Tobacco, by a long Reed, or Cane, fixed into Golden, Silver, or Braſs Heads, with other Magnificent Appendices, carried ſtately behind them, invented to ſignalize Men of better Fortune among them; and only only forbid the Armenians; whereby letting them know, however Bleſſed they are with this World's Goods, yet they were to appear in the Royal City only as Merchants: Which thing, how ſilly and trivial it is in reality, and to Wiſe Men is but an wholeſome Admonition, yet it has been but too often the ground of Apoſtatizing from their Heavenly Inſtitution; it ſeeming a Curb to Ambitious and Aſpiring Spirits, who prefer the Pleaſures and Pomp of this Life, ſhort and uncertain as they are, before thoſe more Permanent in the Aſſurance of the Life to come; and are as little in love with their own Country Manners, as they are tenacious of the Religion of their Foreſathers; ſhipwrecking thereby, Faith and a good Conſcience, for the affectation of the adulterate and gloſſy Cuſtoms in eſteem among the Perſians, to which indeed they generally incline.

They Reſtrain their Women.

On which ſcore it is their Women are little converſant with the Men, ſo that Women here, (more than any where elſe) are truly Women, and nothing more; the Men here being unexpert how far the Friendly Offices, a Graceful Mein, and Innocent Diſcourſe, wins among more refined Chriſtians from the becoming Behaviour of that Sex.

Their Temper.

In heaping up Riches they ſtoop to any baſe means, for they ariſe from the moſt avaritious Temper: In their Profuſeneſs they are rather Specious and for Shew, than Generous.

They have ſumptuous Houſes, Enriched either by being Merchants, or Interpreters to Foreign Miniſters, they being addicted to Learn Languages; few care for Manual Arts, or Mechanick Trades, though ſome apply themſelves to Husbandry.

They are great Revellers, and like long Feaſting; have as much Religion as ſerves their turn: Their Ruſticks are truly ſuch; and ſuch as are employed in neceſſary Vocations and inferior Callings, are Sluttiſh and Slothful.

Their Speech, as well as Character, is their own, and if it borrow any thing, it is from the Greek; by which it is poliſhed from its Barbarity, and reduced to a more Modiſh Dialect.

Eſtabliſhed thus by the King's Favour, they cannot but be excited as a grateful return to the Diſpoſer of the Hearts of Kings, and the Giver of all things, to pay a Tribute of their Increaſe in Building and Adorning ſtately Churches to that God who is King of kings, and Lord of lords; beſtowing largely both towards their Beautifying in every kind, as being ſufficiently ſtored with the beſt Patterns, as well as precious Subſtance, by their conſtant Travelling and rich Adventures, as alſo towards a plentiful Allowance.

Thirteen Pariſh Churches, a Cathedral, and Convents.

By whoſe Munificence and Charge, beſides Colleges and Convents for Monaſticks, are Thirteen Pariſh Churches, and a Cathedral, whoſe Deſcription ſhall ſerve for all: The Majeſty of the Mother-Church at Jelfa, riſes not to that Loftineſs, either to Offend the Eyes with its Splendor, or to create a Jealouſy, from its prodigious Structure, of another Tower of Babel; but keeps the mean, as truly becomes the place ſeparated for the Service of the only True God; not ſo ſpacious as neat, leaning on Four Pillars, which bear an Oval Lanthorn, or Crown, over the Center of the Dome, by which the chief Lights are tranſmitted to the reſt of the Building, and by them them the Temple divided into four parts; the firſt whereof is almoſt all taken up by the High Altar, Garniſhed with the Images of the Bleſſed Mother, and the Holy Child Jeſus, unleſs a ſmall Aſcent left for the Singers, the Biſhops Chair, and for Perſons of Quality among them; the Side-Wings and the Middle half way down the Nave, being left for the Men; all the reſt is Occupied by the Women, even to the very Folding Doors of the Temple; the Roof or Vault of the Arches, the Side-Walls and Poſts of the Cathedral, are all Painted with Sacred Hiſtories; and had it not been for fear of the Moors, after the Deceaſe of their Patron Shaw Abas, who envied them ſo Magnificent a Pile, they would have known no meaſure to the deſire of enlarging, nor could have ever thought it venuſt enough, whilſt they abounded with Pious Benefactors; but to this Enterprize there wanted not Obſtructions, even in their own Bowels. For every perverſe Apoſtate, on any pretence of Quarrel among themſelves, to obtain an unjuſt Victory over his Antagoniſt, has no more to do, but throw away his Soul, Renounce his Saviour, be Cut, and made a Muſſelman; offering himſelf a Sacrifice to his Malice, Pride, and Revenge, and thence of a Convert, becomes an implacable Enemy to Chriſtianity; and endeavouring to ſhew himſelf a ſincere Proſylite, grows a great Bigot for his new Profeſſion, and the more to ingratiate himſelf with Antichriſt, ſtudiouſly bends himſelf to the Ruin of that Church he deſerted; whence follows an aſſured Spoil, and Sacrilegious Rapin, when he declares the exuberant Treaſure, the vaſt Profuſeneſs and Prodigality of the Chriſtians on their Churches, concluding all with an Invective againſt their Idolatrous Worſhip: However ſuch as pertinaciouſly adhere to the true Doctrine of Chriſt, and the received Ceremonies of the Armenian Church (their Nobility by the Hardſhip of War being long ſince extinct) acknowledge Three Patriarchs as Head in Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, though Anciently they had but one Patriarch, Primate of all Armenia, and Succeſſor to St. Gregory.

Letter V.

St. Bartholomew, and St. Thadæus, firſt Preach'd the Goſpel in Armenia.

For upon the Glorious Aſcent of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt into Heaven, the Holy Apoſtles, St. Bartholomew and St. Thadæus, in purſuance of the Commiſſion they had received by the Inſpiration of the Divine Spirit, with the reſt of the Apoſtles, to go and Teach the Goſpel to all Nations, had their Lot to be Miſſionaries in the Regions of Armenia; where they compleated their Martyrdom under Sanatrughio the King of the Armenians, who Slew them, not before they had gained many Diſciples.

St. Gregory the firſt Patriarch.

From which time, Two hundred Years being paſt, aroſe the Valiant Champion for the Chriſtian Faith, St. Gregory, the true Inheritor of the Apoſtolick Seat; in whoſe Days 'tis unſpeakable to declare what ſtreams of Blood of the Evangelical Martyrs watered the Armenian Earth, before the ever-to-be Canonized Patriarch St. Gregory could bring forth the budding Fruit of the Goſpel to perfect Maturity.

In Mount Ararat, under the Perſecution of Diocleſian and Maximinian, fell Ten thouſand to the Luſt of the Tyrants, beſides many others in other places. The Holy Patriarch himſelf is ſaid to ſuffer

Fifteen

Chap. VI.

Fifteen Years Maceration in a Well, where he was privately relieved by the daily Charity of a poor Godly Woman, who caſt therein a piece of Bread for his conſtant Suſtenance, when it was believed on all hands that he had been diſpatch'd by the cruel Commands of Tyridates; who reflecting afterwards with Remorſe on his raſh Precept, took him from that ſtinking Dungeon, and endured his Reproof for his Beſtiality towards the Good Man, and became an hearty Penitent for his inhuman Uſage, and other Prevarications of his Life, and from a Salvage Prince rendred himſelf a tame Follower of the Patriarch St. Gregory, who ruled the Church Thirty Years: From whom the Armenians received their Conſecrated Biſhops, Prieſts, and Monaſtick Orders, called Vortobeeds, who profeſs Celibacy, and are as much as to ſay, Maſters, going out with the Formality of a Paſtoral Staff and Bible; who are generally ſuch Teachers whoſe Cogency of Practice and Inſtruction no other Church ſurpaſſed, while they held the Orthodoxy of their Founder.

Which might ſtill have continued, had not that Inſtigator of Ills, and Stirrer up of Striſe, by his reſtleſs and miſchievous Machinations purpoſely forbid its Durance, by maliciouſly ſowing Tares among the Wheat: Whence ſprang up ſo many Monſters without Heads, blown up by Eunomians and Apollinarians, and that Peſtilent Arian Hereſy which ſpread its Infection over the whole Face of the Chriſtian Churches, maintaining, That God the Son was not of the ſame Subſtance, ὁμοούσιον, with God the Father; which after it was crept in here, Araſtarces, the Son and immediate Succeſſor of St. Gregory, although he was preſent at the Nicene Council for that purpoſe, could not by all his Pains and Endeavours repel.

False Doctrines ſpread among them.

After whom (the ſpace of Sixty or Seventy Years being firſt ſpent) St. Baſil illuminated the lower Armenia.

In the Time of Sourmach, falſe Patriarchs were foiſted on them by the Mandates of the Perſian Kings, when ſome began to celebrate the Nativity of our Saviour on one and the ſame Day with the Epiphany, which is on the Sixth of January; and that while John Chryſoſtom, the Golden-Tongued Orator, ſurvived.

About this time there flouriſhed in Armenia a Famous Learned Hermit, called Meſrob, who firſt diſpoſed the Languages of the Georgians as well as Armenians, into their proper Alphabets, with an admirable Exactneſs and Accuracy.

In the Year of our Redemption Four hundred thirty five, Four Years after the Epheſian Synod, (in which the Writings of Theodorus Mopſuiſtius, and Diodorus the Tharſian, from whom Neſtorius ſucked the Poyſon of his pernicious Opinions, were publickly condemned;) by Command of the Emperor of Perſia, Nierſes Pacriveruanus called a Synod at Thevin, where by a Decree paſſed by the greater Suffrage, it was confirmed, That the Nativity and Baptiſm ſhould be kept on the ſame Day; giving this Reaſon, That as Chriſt was conjointly God and Man, ſo it was fit the Feſtival of his Birth and Baptiſm ſhould be jointly obſerved on one and the ſame Day, and not ſeparately on two Days; which Synod alſo added to the Hymn of the Triſagium now uſed in the Greek Church, ἅγιος ἀθάνατος ὁ θεὸς, ἅγιος ἰσχυρὸς, ἅγιος ἀθάνατος ἐλέησον ἡμᾶς; Qui crucifixus pro nobis; Nierſes Pacriveruanus call'd a Synod, and ſeparated them from the Greek Church.

Letter V.

The Acephali Sectarians.

nobis; Holy, Holy, Holy, Almighty and Immortal God, who was crucified for us, have Mercy upon us: Forbidding the Armenians to go to Jeruſalem on Pilgrimage, or to unite with the Greek Church. Whereupon enſued the over-running of theſe Parts in thoſe Days with the abominable Weeds of Falſe Doctrine of the Acephali Sectarians, ſaid to be without an Head, becauſe none is known to be their Author, or elſe becauſe they owned no Biſhops: They acknowledged two diſtinct Natures in Chriſt, ſo confounding their Properties, as a Drop of Vinegar dropped into the Sea, loſes its Qualities: Which Headleſs Sect ſprung up in the Eaſt at firſt, and oppoſed one another with many Armed Heads; but afterwards confederated upon the Death of the Sacrilegious Diaſcorus, whom they villanouſly defended, contrary to the Sacred Synod held at Chalcedon. This Blaſt peſtered not only the inferior Syria, but ſpread its deadly Effects over all Egypt, by the Contagion Severus Biſhop of Antioch had ſucked in, from whom they were denominated Severians: And as the Saying is, Ill Weeds grow with ſpeed, ſo from the ſame Root grew that horrible ſhap'd and prepoſterous Julian Birth, from whom came the Julianiſts; and from their ſeveral ill-begetting Sires, the Gaunits, Theodoſians, Berſanians; and at laſt the moſt deformed of all, by the unhappy Labour of Jacob the Syrian, was produced the Jacobites, who jumbling together with the Acephali and Monoſyphites, they confeſs the One Nature in Chriſt to be compounded of Two after the Union: With the Theodoſian Theopaſſits, they aſſert the Divinity of our Saviour to be Paſſible; and with the Julianiſts, Gaianiſts, and Apthardocits, affirm the Body of Chriſt to be altogether Corruptible; from whence they are nicknamed Corrupticulæ and Phantaiſtæ.

The Georgians depart from the Armenians.

Under Abraham Ruſidianus, the Iberians, now called Georgians, departed from the Armenians, and embracing the Chalcedonian and Epheſian Councils, were reconciled to the Greek Church.

In the Year of our Redemption, 551, Moyſes Arcazuodanus placed the Turkiſh Computation in the Armenian Kalender, which began about this Time; which number, if it be added to the Thouſand of the Armenians, makes out their Gregorian Account, which they follow, and not that of our Lord. In the Reign of this Patriarch, while the Univerſal Church were buſied in corroborating the Four General Councils, to wit, the Nicene, Conſtantinopolitan, Epheſian, and Chalcedonian, Armenia was employed in reſiſting and oppoſing their Determination. When was revived that filthy Sect of the Manechites; which ſort of Hereticks had inhabited Armenia before, receiving their Name from a Perſian, who was called Manes; he denied the Trinity and the Old Teſtament, and held Two Principles, the one of Good, and the other of Evil: By whoſe Inauſpicious Influence, and the Incurſions of the Saracens and Tartars invading and ſubduing the Perſians, all the hopes of reconciling the Grecian Church, and extirpating thoſe Hereſies, vaniſhed.

The Patriarchate branched into Three Diviſions.

But on the contrary, in Proceſs of Time they withdrew from their Primitive Patriarch, into the ſetting up of Two more; ſo the See of St. Gregory became divided, and they deſpiſed the Holy Well of Vagarſciebat; for at Erewan, near Taberez, or Taurus, they tranſlated the Metropolitan; which gave occaſion to the Biſhop of Sis to ſet up up for Patriarch at Sis in Cilicia; and the Monaſtry of Cauſabar pleading Antiquity, lying towards Candahar, on that Preſcript refuſed Obedience to any but their own Patriarch. Chap. VI.

By which Seraphick Triumvirate they are now governed, owning no other Head of the Church.

But before we deſcend into the particular Tenents ſtill maintained by them, it will not be amiſs to note, That from the Time of St. Gregory to this Diviſion, was Four hundred twenty five Years, in which there were Thirty three Patriarchs, agreeable to their own Annals; I having herein conſulted their own unbiaſs'd Chronologers, and by their Authority corrected Galenus, when tripping in Partiality to the Papal Authority.

The Succeſſion of their Patriarchs.

The Series after this Succeſſion of Patriarchs, as it was immediately puddled with the Mud of Hereſy, ſo it often was diſturbed by the Impoſition of the Secular Power, forcing not only Ignorant but Ungodly Men upon them; who now at this Time have their Conge d' Eſlire from a Prince of another Religion, and many times purchaſe it by Simoniacal Contracts: So that the Purity of Chriſtianity cannot be expected, where Gain is made of Godlineſs, and theſe high Cures of Souls are bought and ſold; entring upon them with the Emperor's Licenſe, not the Approbation of their own Clergy; not by Deſert and Merit, but by Fraud and Circumvention: And whereas Humility and Godlineſs, Learning and Ingenuity, ſhould be the Qualifications, now Pride and Envy, great Gifts with Stupidity are exalted: And which is moſt deplorable, generally ſuch Men are put into the Patriarchates as are moſt odious to them; whence it comes to paſs, that theſe Prelates have as little Integrity as Orthodoxy, they favouring the Jacobites even to this day.

Their Tenents.

They are confident in the Superſtitious Omens of the Heathens.
Judaize in the Choice of Meats, not eating Conies or Pork.
Aſſert the One Nature in Chriſt, according to Dioſcorus.

Letter V.

Hold that the Holy Ghoſt proceeds not from the Son, according to the Error of the Greek Church.

That the Souls of Saints departed enter not into the Kingdom of Heaven, nor of the Wicked into Hell, but are in the Middle Region of the Air, expecting the Day of Judgment.

And therefore Pray for the Dead.

Deteſt the Council of Chalcedon.

They have Five Sacraments, leaving out Confirmation and Extreme Unction, which makes theirs leſs by Two than the Papiſts.

They buy and ſell the Sacraments of the Church for a Price.

The Clergymen Merchandize.

They make Divorces for Money.

The Subſtance of the Deceaſed fall into their hands, till the Right Heir redeem them.

They adminiſter the Sacraments to Children, before the Uſe of Right Reaſon.

They deny the Superiority or Primacy to the Romiſh Church, and they uſe this Interrogation for an Argument, 'Why rather That than 'the Church of Antioch, in which City we were firſt called Chriſtians, 'by the Preaching of St. Peter ?

They are againſt Purgatory. For which reaſon the Romaniſts affix the Error of the Abaſſins upon them, Of Cauterizing when they Baptize Infants, or initiate any into the Church; according to the Words of St. John, He ſhall baptize you with the Holy Ghoſt, and with Fire; taking the Words literally: Wherefore the Abaſſins, not the Armenians, are called St. John's Chriſtians.

They diſtribute the Euchariſt in both kinds to the People, in Commemoration of the Body of Chriſt, dipping the Wafer into the Wine and Water mixed together, and then give it to the Communicants.

They wrap the Word of God in a clean Piece of Silk, which when the Prieſt unfolds, he kiſſes the Bible, and bows: The like Ceremony is uſed at the Elevation of the Hoſt, which he gives to all alike to ſalute, as alſo both the Teſtaments.

The Patriarchs inſtall'd with Pomp.

Theſe are the Cuſtoms and Opinions divulged and maintained by their Patriarchs, to whom great Honour is paid; being introduced into their ſeveral Sees as well by the Pomp of the Moors as the Solemnity of the Chriſtians: The Cauns of the Provinces conducting them with all their Train, and Forces of Horſe and Foot, with Banners flying, and loud Muſick reſounding, great Guns diſcharging, and all the Expreſſions of Joy congratulating their Inſtalment, and the King's Favour towards them.

The Clergy meet them in their ſeveral Habits; the Laity alſo ſhew their Gallantry, and the Patriarchs themſelves are in their Holy Veſtments, Rich Copes, Mitres, and Croſiers, beſet with ineſtimable Jewels. They are diſtinguiſhed from the Biſhops by wearing Rings on their Fingers, embelliſhed with Diamonds, whereas the Biſhops wear only plain Gold Rings. Their Pontificals being put off, they walk in a Black Gown with a Mitred Hood and Paſtoral Staff, as do the Vortobeeds, who are the learned'ſt and beſt eſteem'd of all their Orders, Orders, and in abſence of the Patriarch and Biſhops exerciſe all the Pontifical Functions: Theſe are Eloquent Preachers in their Pulpits; theſe only vow Chaſtity, and what is more ſtrict, endure not the ſight of a Woman; and if in the Street by chance they meet one, they preſently turn their Backs; and if they have any Buſineſs in that part of the Church allotted them by Cuſtom, they commit not themſelves to them, but cauſe them to be drove away, before they will read the Service.

The Vortobeeds or Monaſticks.

At Jelfa ſome Forty of theſe live a Celibate Life, at the Monaſtry joining to the Cathedral, in Cells and Cloyſters, with an Archbiſhop of the ſame Order, faring hardly, and living devoutly.

The Archbiſhop.

The Archbiſhop of Jelfa ſubmits his Province to the Patriarch of Vagarſiabat; he is a goodly Reverend Old Man, ſnowed with Age, but not worn with it; he has a Countenance of Sanctity apparent in his Looks, worthy the Gravity of ſo Eminent a Dignity.

Their Clergy marry.

The other Orders of the Clergy, whether Prieſts, Deacons, Canons, or Choriſters, uſe Chriſtian Liberty in reſpect of Matrimony, it being diſallowed none but the Vortobeeds: They are diſtinguiſhed no other ways from the Ruſticks, than their wearing Blue Veſts, Turbats, and Tunicks, as they do, unleſs a long Cloak, or Gown of Black over all, points them out to be an Armenian Father, or an Eccleſiaſtick in Orders: They are ſhaved as the Romans are, and uncover their Heads in Salutation; they are conſtant Frequenters of their Churches, and have Lamps always burning in them; and every one takes his turn in the Order of the Prieſthood, to wait Day and Night in the Temples, according to the Moſaïck Inſtitution, to whom are appointed Lodgings adjoining to their Churches; at other Times they live with their Families in the City: Every one approaching them pays them a Reverence, and begs their Bleſſing, kiſſing the Hem of their Garments, which the Prieſts return to the Vortobeeds, the Vortobeeds to the Biſhops, and the Biſhops to the Patriarchs.

Having been preſent at their Maſſes for the Dead, for Infants in Baptiſm, and for the Husband and Wife new-married; I ſhall thence take occaſion to relate in ſhort their Banquets, Faſts, and Ceremonies uſed on their Celebrating theſe Rites.

Baptiſm.

We ſhall begin with their firſt Admiſſion into the Pale of the Church. While they are at Divine Service a proper Maſs is ſaid, when the Midwife or Nurſe brings the Child to Church, with a Tribe of Women, where ſhe delivers it to the Godfather, who carries it to the Miniſter waiting at the Font on the Right Side beneath the Altar, who unwinding the Swathes, receives the Infant naked, and his Thumb being anointed with conſecrated Oyl or Balſom, ſigns it with the Sign of the Croſs, not only on the Forhead, but on the Breaſt and Back, Feet and Arms, and all the other Parts of the Body: After this, pouring of the ſame Chryſm into the warm Water in the Font, reciting ſome ſpecial Prayers, and dipping the Crucifix into it, it becomes an Hallowed Bath, in which the Babe is waſhed all over by the Prieſt: When it is taken out, it is croſſed from Head to Foot, and ſpitting into the Ears and Eyes it is diſmiſs'd with an Amulet hung at its Breaſt for Eight Days, as a Charm againſt Witchcraft, and reſtored to the Women to be cloathed. The Maſs being done, the Gueſts return to the Houſe of the Parents, with a Noiſe of Muſick before them, and the Choir in Proceſſion ſinging Anthems, where they all make merry before they depart. If it be a Girl it is Eſpouſed immediately after Baptiſm, to prevent its being ſent for into the Haram by the Emperor, who pretends a Power over them to chuſe for his own uſe out of thoſe not betrothed.

The great Feſtivity of the Birth and Baptiſm of our Saviour, obſerved on the 6th of January, is celebrated with Rites of the like nature, for they conſecrate the Tank or Ciſtern, filled with Water and Odoriferous Oyls, which, after the Sacrament received, is given out among the People with great Clamour and Striving.

This Solemnity has been ſo Splendid, that the Emperors and the Court were wont to honour it with their Preſence, when they were entertained with Interludes, and Repreſentations of the Birth, the Morning being uſhered in with Vocal and Inſtrumental Muſick, with Millions of Flambeaus, and ſhewing the Angels and Shepherds, with the Heavenly Hoſt, Singing praiſes to God on high, and good will towards Men.

When this was performed, the Rich Merchants ſtrove to expreſs their Senſe of theſe Favours, by inviting them to extraordinary Banqueting and Feaſting; and after Expenſive Repaſts, the River being conſecrated for the purpoſe, the Ceremonies of Baptiſm were performed, when notwithſtanding it is extreamly cold, thoſe of Riper Years were baptized, and ſwam about for the Diverſion of the Court; concluding all with a Night of Jollity.

The modeſteſt account of which Pranks muſt be, The Hopes of gaining Proſelytes by ſuch Shews, rather than to expoſe their moſt Holy Religion to the Contempt of Infidels, out of any Deſign or Intereſt; otherwiſe this Practice admits of a ſcandalous Interpretation: But alas! it is too true in the affirmative, That in India among the Idolatrous it might take, but among thoſe that abhor all manner of Forms and Shapes in their Worſhip, it turns to the Reproach, and not Advancement of Chriſtianity.

Matrimony.

The next thing after being Baptized, is to commit Matrimony, the only way they have of propagating their Faith; it being a Puniſhment no leſs than Capital, to attempt by any means to perſuade a Muſſleman to abjure his beſotted Fancy concerning their Falſe Prophet; but that is not ſo much the Reaſon, as prevailing Cuſtom, which has from Age to Age led them to marry their Children very young; chiefly becauſe the Advantage made by their Bargain is not of ſuch Concern as in Europe, where Portion, more than Honeſty of the Family, is conſidered; but here the greateſt Dowry is the Credit of the Relations, and the Women not the Men make the Price, they being Miſtreſſes of nothing more than their Beauty and Virtue; ſo that they never are ſnatch'd up for their Great Fortunes, however Wealthy their Parents are, they being wholly at their Diſpoſals who make the Matches, without the Courtſhip or Knowledge of the Couple to be married; wherefore they are entred into that ſort of Life before they know how to get out of it; for they rarely paſs their Child-

Childhood before they are tied in that indiſſoluble Band; whence ſome Excuſe may be made, for the Prieſts ſo frequently taking Money to Unmarry them; a thing I have heard more than once wiſh'd for in other Countries, but in vain; though they promiſe to be as liberal to the Parſon who had that Knack, as any one grieved with the Gout, would be to the Phyſician who had an infallible way to Cure that Diſtemper. Chap. VI.

The Ceremonies enjoined by the Church are agreeable enough to the Romiſh Inſtitution: Returning home, the Wedded Pair are kept cloſe up together for Forty Days, loaded with Roſaries and Images, and none ſuffered to come at them, that are Strangers, nor the Womankind to ſpeak to any but their Husband; leſt an evil Tongue ſhould have a Sorcerous effect, or a bad Eye ſhould Inchant their future Bliſs.

This Quadrageſſimal Reſtraint being over (if no Faſt intervene, of which their Church is full) they prepare themſelves to Celebrate the Nuptials with their Kindred, which is on this manner: The Eldeſt of the Family on the Husband's ſide, opens the Feſtival by firſt Inviting the Gueſts to the Marriage Feaſt, where the Bridegroom appears in a mean Dreſs and poorly Habited, till the Prieſts have received Richer Habiliments of the Grandfathers, or Eldeſt Uncles Gift, and brought them covered into the middle of the Gueſt-Chamber, where they Sanctify them and Bleſs them for his uſe, the Youth ſtanding by; to verify what Paladius uſed for a Proverb, Inveſtem Puerum quaſi imberbem, when he called a Beardleſs Boy by the Epithet of an Undreſſed Lad; and every one taking their Places, the Servants lay them down on the Carpets, and unwinding the Silk Embroidered for to wrap them in, diſcover only the Bridegroom's Suit, with an old ruſty Sword of the Family's, not worn ſince Shaw Abas reduced them; for in theſe Countries it is not the Cuſtom that Women of good Fame, or Repute, ſhould meet in Publick Conventions with the Men, but they Tranſact their own Affairs in their own Houſe of Parliament among themſelves.

On the Heels of the Servants come the Clerks with their Choir, and taking the Cloaths, only one (which is all Cloth of Gold) being the uppermoſt Garment, is a looſe Coat of London Cloth, without Sleeves, Lined with Sables to keep off the Winters Cold; when the Reverend Sages call forth the new Married Stripling, whom they place between Two Bridemen about his own Age, they all Three Kneeling, while they Sing the Epithalamium, not ſo much as lifting up their Heads till all the Rites are finiſhed; then they wait on the Bridegroom into another Room, whither his Robes are carried, and when he is ſhifted, he returns attended by his Bridemen; when every one of them Salute the Hands of all that are called to this Solemnity, and, after an Ancient Cuſtom, Invite them to take a Cold Banquet among the Tombs, to put them in mind of Mortality at the ſame time they are contriving to continue the World.

The Young Spark being lift up on Horſeback, and ſome time carefully held on each ſide on Foot, leads the way to the Cavalcade, Riding in State, after a Noiſe of Fidlers, Drummers, Pipers, and other Lacquies, Pages, and Footmen; after whom an innumerable Concourſe

Letter V.

Concourſe of Horſemen follow to the Graves, near a Mile out of the City (among whom are ſome very noble Sepulchres fit to receive ſo great a Company) but in fair Weather they ſpread their Carpets, and ſet up their Tents near the ſide of a Brook, almoſt waſhing their Burial place.

Here Ceres and Bacchus having ſhewn their good will to Venus, (for it is known without them no hearty Sacrifice is paid her) Hymen delivers out his Torches, the Sun having withdrawn his; and every one there takes a Wax Light in his Hand, and Mounting, direct themſelves towards the City, in the ſame manner they came out, only Bonfires, Flambeaus, and Fireworks Illuminate the Road all along: Entring Jelfa, the ſtately Gates of their Friends and Relations, eſpecially ſuch as are preſent at the Collation, are beſtuck with Tapers in divers Coloured Paper Lanthorns; which look gracefully and divert the Company with variety of Artful Fires, each ſtriving to outvie others; and are Entertained at the ſame time with Wine and Sweetmeats, Drinking of Healths, and at laſt diſmiſs'd with freſh Tapers given to all the Gueſts.

This continues in the Way to the Cathedral, where about Midnight the Bridegroom arriving, begs the Bleſſing of the Archbiſhop, and they hardly return to the Houſe from whence they ſet out, till almoſt Break of Day.

Where they are ſcarcely compoſed to Sleep, before the Father of the Bride knocks on the ſame Errand, calling the Gueſts to accept of a Treat at his Houſe; where thoſe Invited are carried into a noble open Banquetting-Houſe in a Garden, with Tanks and Adornments very Magnificent, after their Faſhion; the Room is Perfumed with coſtly Odours, Smoaking out of Antick, Weighty, Silver Perfuming Pots, or Pans; and being Seated, Voiders of Sweatmeats (with a Ruſſian Coat, as they call it) a Dram of Brandy is ſet before every one; and then the Servants bring the beſt Raiments yet preſented the Bridegroom, being the Father-in-laws, or his Repreſentatives; the Ceremonies are the ſame of the Clergy, only with this addition, the Bridemen which Kneeled yeſterday, to day ſtand upright with flaming Flambeaus in their Hands.

Theſe Ceremonies ended, and the Sweatmeats taken off, a Table is ſpread, and more than twice Seven Plates are differently Modified to invite the Palate to Luxury; to which that of Muturantius, for which Juvenal Lampoons him, is a modeſt piece of Temperance:

——— Quis fercula ſeptem
Secreto cenavit Avus ———

But here are ſuch loads of Proviſions, that none need fear a quicker Eye than Appetite, at leiſure to take notice what each Eats; for ſhould they do nothing but devour, their Stomachs muſt be cloied before their Portions ſink.

Yet all theſe Preparations, with the enticing Poinant Sawces, and provoking Pickles, prevail not on the Bridegroom to fall to, till the Father-in-Law lays to his new Son's double Meſs, a Purſe of Gold; and this is the only thing they bear away by way of Dowry:

After

After this Debt is cancelled, no Cloud appears to disturb the Mirth, Eating, Drinking, and facetious Discourse is all the Business; and in earnest it is one, and a tedious one where it lavishes into such Excess.

For what was reported of Old, still holds good, The Persians Drink Wine in Bowls; and they observe Gellius his Rule, de Lege Cœnarum, as a Law to their Feasts, Dum libentissime edas, tunc aufertur, & alia esca melior atque amplior succenturiatur, isque flos cœnæ habetur; as if they never thought you Welcome before you had Eat like a Glutton, and Drank like a Swine: After shifting of Plates unaccountably, and every one's Health has reason done it, they take off the Table-Cloth, but not remove their Seats; Fruit, Wine, Tobacco, and Salt Bits for a Whet, being placed before them, they continue Drinking till Midnight, being diverted by Stage-Players, Dancers, and Mountebanks all Day; nor will they themselves disdain to take up a Tabor and Roar out a Song behind that, and a Flute Playing to them.

At Night Fireworks begin again, having had the constant ones of the Water all the time, arising in Crowns and Garlands, with other Figures; at last they bring the News that the Matrons had dismissed the Bride Adorned with all her Wealth and Gallantry; when they rise, but proceed not till she is delivered to her Groom, who waits on her to her Horse; when they are both Mounted, the Ecclesiasticks marshal the Procession; all the Streets are Illuminated, the loud Drums and Trumpets proclaim their approach; in the Front is carried a Tree full of Fruit; after it follows the Europeans, then the Armenians in order; in the midst of them the Canonical Gentlemen and Boys, singing and Playing on Musical Instruments, all in their peculiar Habits, which were Rich, and the Choiristers Surplices full of Red Crosses; after these the Bride and Bridegroom, He nobly Mounted and splendidly Accoutred with Magnificent Trappings; his Horse led, and the Bride held on by Matrons, Cross-legg'd, after the Country Fashion for Women to Ride, but Vailed all over with a Saffron-coloured Vail;

Lutea demissos velârunt flammea vultus.

Lest if the Blushes of the Virgin Bride should be discovered, or if too high a Colour should be discerned in the Maiden Face, it may be imputed to the Vail, not the Floridness of the Cheeks; after all, in the close of the Procession, come the Matrons Attired in White Sheets.

Nor do they go far before they repeat their Banquets, with Presents of Tapers, Sweetmeats, Squibs, Serpents and Rockets, as they pass; the Glory of this Night is always designed to pay their Respects to their Governor in Chief, who receives them very great, and grants a License for the Youth to carry his Spouse home, which he does, departing from hence to his Father's House, where the Company end their Thalasses, and leave them to Contemplate the Joys of Matrimony.

The

Letter V.

The next day, if it be a Faſt, is intermitted; but the Feaſt holds on till the Relations have finiſhed their Courſe, which is ſometimes more than a Month; ſo profuſe are they of their Time and Money on this occaſion.

Purification.

After Marriage, of right ſucceeds Child-bearing, which keeps the ſame ſtate in Lying in as with us, only they are ſomething longer before their Purification, agreeing therein with the Jewiſh Account of Forty days; when they enter their Baths to Cleanſe, and bring the New-born Babes with them to the Church, that the Prieſt may at once give his Benediction to the Infant, and the Mother return Thanks to God, who aſſiſts at their Births and their own Delivery.

The Feaſts and Faſts Ordained by their Church.

From theſe Feſtivals thus Celebrated at large, it is meet we ſhould ſee how thoſe enjoined by the Church are tempered with days of Abſtinence, as well to fit them for the ſtudies of Piety and Moderation, as on their Feaſt-days by a Chriſtian Chearfulneſs, to declare to the World the excellency of their Original, and that they were Ordained as a Refreſhment after ſincere Humiliation and Penance.

Two Days in every Week they hold a ſtrict Faſt, not only from all manner of Wine, Oil, and Butter, but from Fleſh and all Nouriſhment whatever indued with a ſenſitive Being; living like the Pythagoreans, on Herbs and Roots, eſpecially the Eccleſiaſticks, who Macerate themſelves ſeverely; theſe Days are Wedneſdays and Fridays, unleſs Chriſtmaſs Day, or the Baptiſm of our Saviour, happen on either of them: Before which they prepare themſelves by a Weeks continued Faſt. The Laics indeed indulge themſelves with Wine, but the Clergy by no means: Their much admired St. Chryſoſtom has exempted Women with Child, the Infirm and Children, from the Rigour of theſe Obſervances, leaving them this as a Maxim, That Health is not to be impaired, but the Mind ſtrengthned by a due ſubjection.

On the Dawn of the Goſpel, which had been Glorioufly diſplayed by the Angels Appearance to the Shepherds tending their Flocks, we have already related the Solemnity; yet becauſe here remains a diſpute among the Armenians, which Day to affix the following Tradition to, I ſhall only mention it here, and leave it to their own deciſion; for it is a queſtion among them, If it be not moſt probable, that after the bright Phoſphor of the Heavenly Hoſt, the Shepherds Eyes might not be dazled, and for that reaſon wanting more than the Light of the Stars, were conſtrained to kindle dry Twigs, or Boughs of Trees to light them in queſt of the declared Meſſias? However this ſatisfies not the Generality, but that it has many Oppoſers, and they ſay, it was on the Morning to the Purification of the Bleſſed Virgin, when Old Simeon had his Age Renewed and became Young enough to Embrace the Child Jeſus, and being Divinely Inſpired, Propheſied of the Salvation of all Nations, and brought the Holy Babe in at the Folding Doors of the Temple; which, by a received Belief among the Jews, were never to be opened till thoſe Days of Peace ſhould come wherein Chriſt ſhould appear; the Novelty of which Accident being ſpread about the City of Jeruſalem, all ſorts of People came flocking before day with ſuch combuſtible Torches, to be Witneſſes of the truth: On which day therefore it being more univerſally received, the Armenian Divines and Interpreters of theſe Myſteries appoint Fires to be kindled in their Churches, and Annually rejoice for that they have found their Lord and Maſter.

On the 13th of January, for a leſs Apocryphal Story, they proclaim a Faſt, and humble themſelves in Duſt and Aſhes on their Heads, and Sackcloth on their Bodies, for the Denunciation Jonas made of God's Judgment againſt Niniveh; and on the 20th rejoice for the Averſion thereof on their unfeigned Repentance.

The Preparation for, and Continuation of their Lent till the Paſſion Night, they religiouſly keep with almoſt a Suguntin Faſt, that is, almoſt famiſh themſelves to Death; when they repair to the Tombs of their Friends and Relations, with burning Incenſe and lighted Candles; where they pray for the Dead, or more charitably recommend them to a quiet Repoſe by the Mouth of their Prieſts, and at the ſame time refreſh themſelves with Fruit and Melons, the Women with their Husbands and Infants drinking to their pious Memory, freely taking off their Cups, and weeping plentifully with a ſad Lamentation and mighty Outcry; till the Wine make them have a Light Heart and a Merry Countenance; which courſe they take till the Aſcenſion, Weeping and Wailing, Drinking and Quaffing.

Eaſter and Whitſuntide they keep as the Primitive Chriſtians did.

From the 28th of May they caſtigate themſelves with cutting Diſciplines; for that Conſtantine the Great when Emperor, marching out to fight, breathed nothing but Slaughter againſt the Chriſtians, till convinced by an Apparition of the Sign of the Croſs in the Heavens, with this Advertiſement, In hoc Signo tantum vinces, whereupon he became the firſt Chriſtian Emperor, defending that Religion againſt all its Adverſaries: For which miraculous Converſion, they find now, as the Chriſtians then did, Matter for Thankſgiving.

For their Patriarch and Martyr St. Gregory, on the 9th of June they afflict themſelves for his being ſoaked, Six Days, and on the Seventh they magnify his more than Human Patience.

Before the Transfiguration of our Saviour on the 19th of June, they Faſt, and end that Day with a Feaſt.

From the 18th of Auguſt, for the Death of the Bleſſed Virgin, they have inſtituted ſix days of Mourning, and the next after is a Thankſgiving for her being tranſlated from this Life to a better.

On the 17th of September they reiterate their Devotions for the Dead, which is preceded by ſix days of ſtrict Penance.

On the ſame day they commemorate St. Helen's Invention of the Croſs at Jeruſalem, being Empreſs to the forementioned Conſtantine.

St. Guywark has a Faſt of the ſame length, and a Feaſt at the end of it, on the 26th of the ſame Month.

The 17th of November they put themſelves on diſtreſs for the Health and Safety of their Cattle, to free them from Rot, and pray for their Increaſe; this at firſt laſted but ſeven days, but it is now ſo many Weeks, all which time they keep Lent.

Laſt of all for St. James they are grievouſly concerned ſix days together, and are content with one day only to Feaſt on: So that the Year round there are more Faſting than Feaſting-days.

Letter V.

Their Funerals.

Through all theſe Scenes, Time keeps jogging on, and it is appointed for all men once to dye; at which Article the Neighbours and Acquaintance, eſpecially thoſe of the Blood, come to bewail and weep for the loſs of their Friend or Relation; when, and not till then, the Pariſh-Prieſt is ſent for, that he ſhould pray by him, and put him into an happy Poſture of Departure, by minding him of his Soul's Health, notwithſtanding his Bodily Indiſpoſition; which being recommended into the ſame Hands that beſtowed it, and having taken its Flight from Earth to its aſſigned Place, there are no Words made of Anatomizing or Embalming the Body; but waſhing it often with Aromatick Waters while it is purified and kept clean, and then apparelling it as when alive, in its beſt Cloaths, it is wrapped about with a Sheet, and bound with Swathings to the Bier, his Arms being firſt placed acroſs, over which is thrown a Pall of divers Colours. The Pariſh-Prieſt with his Collegues and others bearing Enſigns of Saints, and the Chanters ſinging, manage the Solemnity, and lead the Way to the Church, no matter whether before or after Noon; immediately after theſe the Bearers bring the Corps, when many of the Funeral Train with Heads hung down, and ſmiting of their Breaſts, make a diſmal Cry: Being entred the Church-Porch, the Prior of the Convent with his Aſſociates receive the Proceſſion, a Vortobeed being preſent, who leads the Choir up to the High Altar, the Body being left on the Bier among the Women, while they ſay High Maſs, and perform the Office for the Dead. In the mean time the Relict or next of Kin to the Defunct, uncovering his Face and throwing by the Burial-Cloaths, with neglected Dreſs and diſſhevel'd Hair falls on the Face of the Dead, deploring the Loſs of her Father, Husband, or Relation, by often kiſſing his cold Lips, and piteouſly lamenting; which is ſeconded in ſo mournful a Conſort by all the other Women, that one would think the Shades themſelves could not entertain their new-come Gueſts with a more doleful Dirge: Thus ſhe continues, and hardly ſuffers her ſelf to be pulled away, till Maſs is ſaid, and the Vortobeeds are turning towards the Coarſe, when all the Women are driven out of the Church, and Candles lighted are given to every Man there: The Vortobeed ſtanding at the Head, the other Clergy poſſeſs the Sides, and the Prior with his Fellows encloſe the Feet.

At the Reading the Epiſtle and Goſpel, they change their Cope, Mantle, and Hood, and Whine them forth; as alſo does the Prior when he chants the Liturgy, to whoſe Key the other Prieſts tune the Reſponſes: In the Interim they Fumigate the Body with holy Incenſe, and ſprinkle it with holy Water; which Ceremonies being ended, the Bearers are ready to carry the Body to the Burial-place, far from the Town; before which only one Vortobeed with the Pariſh Prieſts in courſe, and their Clerks with Tapers lighted compleat the Exequies, and commit it to the Ground: As if they had reſpect to the Law of the Twelve Tables, Mortuum infrà Urbem ne ſepelito, neve urito: Though more truly to the Emperor's Commands, who has granted them Ground for that purpoſe, with a ſtrict Injunction to bury no where elſe.

Thoſe

Chap. VI.

The Burial of Self-Murderers.

Thoſe whoſe Cowardice has made their Lives uneaſy either by Temper or Misfortune, and thereby precipitated their Deaths by laying Violent Hands on themſelves, are reproached with this odd diſtinction in their Funeral from other Mortals; in what part of the Houſe ſoever they are found to commit this Self-Murder, there the Wall is broken down to make a Paſſage to their Graves; ſignifying thereby, That if they would not expect the common Period of Life with other Men, they ought to be carried forth by an unaccuſtomed Way, and not through the Doors of the Houſe, throwing them unconcernedly and unpitied into any Pit, like the Burial of a Dog, without any Solemnity.

Thus having diſpatched the Formalities attending every Stage of Life, ſomething ought to be mentioned of the Excellencies of their Minds and Faculties, and how far qualified in common with the reſt of Mankind. In order hereunto firſt may be conſidered their Propenſity to Languages, they making Syriac, Arabic, Turkiſh, and Perſian, their own at Home; and by Lingua-Franca become converſant with moſt of the Weſtern Foreigners; which Language is a Mixture of Portugueze, Italian, French, and Spaniſh, and thereby made intelligible to European Traders as univerſally as Latin to the Gentry and Scholars: So that it has often been Matter of Wonder to hear a Merchant diſown any Skill in the above-recited Speeches, yet converſe ſeverally with thoſe of each Nation.

They as much hate the Greek Language as their Church, although they derive their Armenian Elegancies from its Themes. But what cannot Religion perſuade? Becauſe they have diſſented in Opinions, therefore do they abhor the very Words of the Greek.

In Philoſophy they utter ſome Specious and Trifling Things, but nothing Pithy or Nervous.

Their Antiquity.

Some things they boaſt of Antiquity: For Armenia, famous heretofore for many notable Tranſactions, owns Japhet as its firſt Founder and Planter; or, as others will have it, to grow from Aram the Son of Sem: However, it is certain that after the General Deluge it was inhabited by the Sons of Noah, and it afforded Landing-place for all Living Creatures after their Tranſport from the Ark, according to the Literal Senſe of the Divine Teſtimony; And the ark reſted on the twenty ſeventh day of the ſeventh month, on the mountains of Armenia; that is to ſay, on the Mount Ararat; which we know admits of a large Interpretation. Gen. 8. 4.

It contains in it Iberia, Albania, and Colchis; which latter, as it abounded in the days of King Ægeas with Maſſy Treaſures, which occaſioned that perilous Voyage of the Argonauts under Jaſon, for the Golden Fleece; ſo now it remains fruitful in all manner of Nature's Riches, flowing with Milk and Honey, and ſtored with Paſtures, Corn, Woods, and Cattel; but I hear of no other Diſcoveries either of Gold or Silver made there ſince.

Their Country formerly enjoyed mighty Kings and Potentates, and ſome the moſt Pious in Story; among whom Abagares is related to have wrote an Anſwer to an Epiſtle of our Lord and Saviour Jeſus Chriſt; which thing, whether a Figment or no, is not in my Power to determine: Yet thus much I am ſure of, that neither Riches, Honour, or High Birth, make any either happier or better, unleſs this World's Goods be ſeaſoned with a Mind endued with Virtue, and Moderation ſuitable to ſuch extraordinary Benefits.

Letter V.

The Georgians

The next Neighbours, if not the ſame with the Armenians, were the Iberians, now called Georgians, who underwent the ſame Calamities with them; but with a contrary Diſpoſition of Humour, being a Martial People bred up to the Wars, and now ſerve the Emperor as his beſt Infantry; of theſe, Forty thouſand are at preſent in Arms under Military Pay, in and about Spahaun. Their Country at this time bears the Name of Gurgeſtan, from whence they are Chriſten'd Georgians; not from the famous St. George, but becauſe they follow Husbandry, γεωργοί. They were converted to the Chriſtian Faith near the ſame time with the Armenians; which they ſtill retain, and maintain their State and Country; but both Chriſtianity and their Country are paſt their Vertical Point, and are upon their Declenſion.

Their Princes, to uphold their Prerogative, are inclined to ſubmit to the Perſian Yoke with the Ignominy of Apoſtatizing, rather than by a ſtout defiance reſiſt the Temptations and Allurements of Government under the Mahometan Beſtiality: Such Power has the Ambitious Thirſt of Rule.

They are Proper, Freſh-colour'd, Well-limb'd People: Their Women ſo Fair and Beautiful, that the Queen-Mother is always of the Family of the Georgian Princes; and for that reaſon is it their Children are ſo often ſold to Infidels, becauſe they make good Markets of them. Mars has the Aſcendent over this Nation, as Mercury has over the Armenians.

Of a different humour from the Armenians.

There is therefore an inveterate Contrariety of Tempers between them; and ſince the Armenians deſerted the Greek Church, this Breach is widen'd; being impatient at the performance of each others Services in the Churches, the Georgians frequently interrupting them in their Devotions, and doing deſpite to their Altars on their moſt Publick Solemnities: Such Abſurdities does Religion introduce, which ſhould be the only means to cement and unite Mankind in the Bond of Humanity.

The Blame whereof muſt chiefly lye at the doors of their Preſates, whoſe Obſtinacy and Perverſeneſs, abdicating all Force of Reaſon, are guided by no other Impulſe than the preſent Enjoyments of this Life, and keep on foot particular Piques and Animoſities, purpoſely to diſtract and vex the Church, thereby to carry on their own Intereſt or Ambition: Otherwiſe, how ſhould it come to paſs that thoſe baptized under the ſame Symbol, and in many (and the moſt difficult) Points of Religion are agreeing, ſhould not be all of one Mind in every reſpect, unleſs the Idle Dreams and Malicious Practices of the Inorthodox ſhould inculcate Debates and ſow Diviſions, only to be Head of a Party?

How far the Pope is concerned here.

On which occaſion, whether the Pope hath been aiding or ſtudious to compoſe theſe Differences, I know not: But ſure I am, as it is the Duty of a good King, that would avoid the Imputation of a Tyrant, ſo to govern, that the Laws as well as Arms ſhould be a Safeguard to his People that have intruſted themſelves to his Protection, not only to defend them in time of War, but conſerve them by thoſe wholſome Sanctions in time of Peace; ſo is it the Office of the Chief Paſtor to inſtruct the People committed to his Charge, with the ſaving knowledge of ſound Doctrine, and then by an Exemplary and Chriſtian Converſation, to pray for the Expiation of their Sins by the Death and Merits of our Saviour Chriſt, the only acceptable Sacrifice on that ſcore, incontinently imploring an happy and perpetual Union of the Myſtical Body of the Church Militant here on Earth, and perſiſting in an holy Preſidency all the days of his Life: By which method they will clear to the World what is their end, as the Apoſtle did, 2 Cor. 12. 6. when he told the Corinthians he ſought not their Earthly Subſtance, but their Eternal Welfare. And were this the deſign of either the Pope or their Patriarchs, we could not find fault with the Emiſſaries of the one, or the Conduct of the others compaſſing Sea and Land to make Proſelytes, but for having gained them they become ſevenfold worſe Children of the Devil than before. Chap. VI.

Nor, to ſpeak truth, are the Popelings ſlothful in theſe Parts: At Jelfa is a College of the Jeſuits; and both in Georgia and Armenia they have had many Monaſteries beyond the Euxine Sea, as far as the Cherſoneſe, looking towards Scythia, at the City Theodoſia, now called Caffa; but theſe Places being over-run with the Turks and Perſians, they were expelled thence by the Cruelty of the Heathens on one hand, and Perſuaſion of the Hereticks of the ſeveral forementioned Sects on the other, that they were at laſt crowded into the Province only of Nockſhuan in the greater Armenia, three days Journy from Erewan; where are only left in Ten poor Villages as many ſtarveling Convents of the Order of the Dominicans, ſettled by Biſhop Bartholomew, ſent out by Pope John the 22[d], to reconcile the Armenians to that See.

But he could obtain no more than the reducing his own Order to that Obedience; which leſt they ſhould be wholly extirpated, the ſucceeding Popes provide for them Eleemoſynaries by way of Goa: Beſides theſe, ſome ſay the Pope defrays the Charges of thoſe at Spahaun, of whom we have ſpoken before; from whence it is needleſs, if they be content with what may ſerve to be inſtrumental to honeſt Studies, for the King is their Almoner. And as he is bountiful to theſe for their ſeeming Integrity and pious Behaviour, ſo he is munificent to the Handicrafts-men which come from Europe; to theſe he has given large Salaries, and graceful Houſes in Jelfa, beſides their peculiar Offices at Court, where they attend when in waiting.

All theſe when they encounter one another, pay the Civility of uncovering the Head, but ſalute the Moors after their own manner. The way of Salute.

Beſides theſe Chriſtians in Jelfa, St. Rhipſima has her Devotes, who live in a Nunnery, and vow Virginity all their Life; they are about Forty, and profeſs Poverty for Chriſt's ſake, having nothing but what they get by begging; they go in Black Hoods over a Blue Veſt. Nunneries at Jelfa.

Here are two other Orders that are more recluſe, reſembling Sancta Monacha, and Sancta Clara. And thus I have run through all the Degrees that live in Jelfa, with what Brevity and Faithfulneſs may be expected in ſo tranſient an Account.

CHAP. VII.

Gives us a Sight of the Palace, and Rarities there; our Entertainment by the French Artiſans in the Emperor's Service; the Diverſions of the Place, and its Product; and the Cloſe of the Year, with its Seaſons.

HAving been taken up thus long among the Armenians, we in our Return cannot but take notice of the famous Walk between the two Cities of Jelfa and Iſpahaun: It is planted with two Rows of Sycamores (which is the tall Maple, not the Sycamore of Alkair) upwards of two Miles: It is called the Chaurbaug, from Four Gardens belonging to the Palace, oppoſite one to another; theſe take up all the Ground on the ſide of the Bridge towards Spahaun; on the other ſide, Seats of Noblemen and Great Miniſters of State grace the Way up to the biggeſt of all, the Emperor's, which is at the End of this Stately Place, over-looking with a pleaſant Proſpect all the reſt up to the Palace-Gates, which are directly anſwering the Majeſtick ones of this Garden, they fronting one the other.

The great Garden at the end of the Chaurbaug.

Over the Portal are curiouſly painted Men and Women in European Dreſſes: From the Entrance up to the Mountains, Marble Steps make the Aſcent eaſy, which Nature had framed difficult enough otherwiſe; up which the Limpid Streams are forced to ſend their Currents through Five ſeveral Channels laid with Marble, two at the feet of the Sycamores, which railed in two Foot-pads, and ran immediately to the River; the other three emptied themſelves into the Tanks, to which two Stone Cauſeways gave an Even Walk to Foot-men, by the middle Channel parting them, and at every Tank aſcended or deſcended by Marble Grades, while the Horſe-way was ſloped for their Paſſage, entring on one ſide, and coming back the other; and every Two hundred Paces, Bathing-places of a large Circumference receive great plenty of Water from the three Channels in the middle, into which the Marble Steps go down to the Bottom, which is paved with a cleanly Floor of the ſame Poliſhed Stones; and this is begun from the beginning of the Chaurbaug, whence it deſcends to the River, and thence riſes the ſame height to the End of the Garden: In the Garden its ſelf, variety of Green Trees flouriſhing, ſweet Odors ſmelling, clear Fountains and Rivers flowing, charm all the Senſes; nor is there leſs ſurprizal at the raviſhing Sight of the delicate Summer-houſes by each Pond's ſide, built with all the Advantages for Recreation and Delight.

In

Chap. VII.

Wild Beasts for the Emperor's Diversion.

In a Wilderness beneath this, are kept the Bears, Leopards, and Lions, belonging to the Emperor: And from this place up to the Palace Gate, are seen every Evening all the Gentry of the City Riding to and fro with Hawks on their Fists; managing their Steeds, making of Matches for Shooting, Hunting, Coursing, or Hawking; shewing their Gallantry in Apparel and Retinue, as well as disposition to Sport; being as much frequented as our Hide Park, and for as little purpose, only to see and be seen, though the whole pretence be to take the Air.

Near these Ponds, or Tanks, are Coffee-Houses, which furnish them when they dismount, with Coho, Tea, or Sherbets; while they sit in State, and smoak Tobacco with their Attendance about them.

The adjacent Houses, Orchards, and Gardens, may be truly said to be in the Virge of the Court, many of them serving only for the Emperor to shift with his Seraglio, while the other Apartments are Aired; though the great Divan, or Council be always held in that place respecting the Midan, or Pomœrium, in the heart of the City; and the rest are but given during Pleasure, to the chief Officers at Court: Wherefore reckoning all these Dwellings as Appendices (which indeed they are) few Monarchs will appear to have a larger extent to hold their Court in, it being above a Third part of the whole City; which being granted, it will not be hard to imagine so Great and Absolute a Potentate should be Courted by all the World; and from all the parts of the Earth the wonderful Works of the Creation should be brought as Honorary Presents; nor can it be supposed that so wide and spacious a Palace should not afford room for more than the ancient Ark, though not freight with Pairs of all the Species, yet more of several.

Whence it is, that here is to be seen more readily, and with less hazard, the Offspring of most Soils, except Human, and the Creatures of every Nation, rather than the Women of this Court, which are at less liberty than the Beasts, being Cooped up in their Sties, more strictly than these are kept in their Dens; many of the fiercest and untamedst of these being allowed only to breath in the open Air as Nature Ordained them: But not to tire my self, nor you with Particulars, I shall only mention what were strange to me.

The Rhinoceros, not the Indian Onager.

The first whereof was the Rhinoceros, who is a Cruel Beast, of a large Size, there coming from his Nose an Horn a Cubit long, (Brown towards the Bottom, Whiter near the Point) and Six Inches Diameter, whence the derivation of his Name from Ῥὶν, Nasus, a Nose, and Κέρας, Cornu, an Horn; between this Animal and the Elephant, is a mortal strife, for which Nature seems to have armed it on purpose; it being a Four-footed Beast, with Three Partings of the Hoof, built on thick strong Thighs, but short, considering the great bulk of its Body which presses them; it is Tall enough to reach the Bowels of its Antagonist with its Horn, with which it Gores him to Death; nor has she given him less firm Bones to the Trunk, if by chance it should be crushed by the Elephant, defending its very Hide with a Coat of Mail; wherefore before on the Neck and Shoulders, and behind in the Quarters, the Skin lies in Folds, like Fish Scales, over one another; the Face bears much of an an Hogs Countenance, unleſs the upper Lip, which reſemble a Cows, and the lower, the form of a Whales; the Mouth diſcovers a miſhaped Tongue, ſet about with Two rowes of Teeth; it is of the ſame Mouſe Colour, and Tailed as an Elephant is, and Feeds of the ſame Fodder, and is kept facing Two mighty, but lean Elephants.

Letter V.

Whether the Rhinoceros be the Unicorn, I ſuſpend my belief, ſince I have ſeen an Horn turned with Furrows and Ridges from the Baſis to the Point, and Tapering like that of our King's Arms: But what Petrus Angelius relates concerning the Onager, or Indian Aſs, can have no congruity with this, unleſs in reſpect of the Virtues; for though his Verſes are moſt Elegant in his 5. lib. Cyneget, yet the deſcription is very wide:

—— Quos India paſcit Onagros,
Jam primum niveo corpus candore teguntur,
Infecti Aſſyrio circum caput omne colore
Cæruleis oculis, unoque in fronte ſuperbi
Cornu, &c.

His words in Proſe are theſe; 'The Wild Aſſes of India are as big, 'or bigger than Horſes, whoſe Heads are of a Purple die, their 'Eyes Blew, the reſt of their Body White; on their Foreheads they 'have an Horn a Cubit in length, whoſe lower part for Two Hands 'breadth is White, and the Top, which is ſharp, inclining to a 'bright Red, but the Middle part is blood Red; of theſe they make 'Cups, out of which whoſoever Drinks, neither Cramp nor Falling 'Sickneſs ſeizes them; nor has any manner of Poiſon any force, if 'that immediately before or after taking of the ſame, either Water, 'Wine, or other Liquid thing be taken out of theſe Cups.

That this Opinion is taken up upon the account of the Rhinoceros his Horn, I can certainly verify, and that great Prices are offered for thoſe that are inadulterate; which they in India pretend to try by the Liquors preſently fermenting in them; but notwithſtanding that Experiment they are often deceived by falſe Horns made into drinking Cups; thus much is true of the Rhinoceros, but the other part of it holds not Water; they come from Bengala, and are eſteemed terrible and indomitable Creatures: And theſe muſt be (or none) what this Author calls Aſſes, there being no other Beaſts in theſe Parts with but one Horn; and I am afraid he is miſtaken as to the African Aſs alſo, ſome Writers having called Africa India, which might have been urged in his excuſe, whoſe Skin I having formerly admired when in India, you will eaſily be convinced it is no ſuch Creature, it having never an Horn; Two Live ones were ſent hither from the Abaſſin Emperor, as an Expreſſion of Reſpect to this Court; which, with other valuable Rarities brought by his Ambaſſadors, were lately graciouſly received.

The Abaſſin Aſs miſtaken for the Sabean Wild Aſs.

They are as large as a Mule, but for the exact Symetry of the Lineaments, Zeuxis his Pencil would but faintly ſhadow over the lively Portraicture of their Skins, the ground whereof was of a light Aſh Colour, over which along the Back ſtrait black Streaks in Rows at length reached to the Tail; the Shoulders, Flanks, and Haunches had had the ſame waving towards the extremity of their ſeveral Members; but that which was the oddeſt was on the Forehead, they had ſo many Geometrial Figures, like the Trapezium, or Square, in which the oppoſite ſides are parallel one with another, ſo diſtinctly painted, as at laſt to fill up a black ſpot of a Diamond cut in the very Centre of the Face. Chap. VII.

What Family to mix this Kind with, I am at a loſs, unleſs they be a-kin to the Onager, or Wild Aſs, mentioned by Xenophon in the Expedition of the Leſſer Cyrus; the ſame we read in Pliny in his 8. Lib. and 4th Chap. where he aſcribes them to Phrygia and Lycaonia; but the Words of the before-recited Author have it thus; 'The 'Onager is a Wild Aſs, excelling at pleaſure the ſwifteſt Courſer; 'whoſe Fleſh differs not much from Stags Fleſh, were it not ſome-'thing tenderer; Arabia, ſays he, abounds with Flocks of them. Now nothing can be Tamer than theſe before us, and therefore unlikely to be the Wild ones of Xenophon in Arabia, but are moſt aſſuredly the Breed of Africa; however Petrus Angelius Bargæus comes pretty near the Mark in this, though not the other; however he is miſtaken in the Place, as well as the Race of both:

At ſonitu ingenti putrem quatit ungula campum
Cornua, venantem quoties fugiêre; ſuisque
Temporibus ſtant longæ Aures, tum Corpora Cervos
Exſuperant; nec Lana nitet non albo colore,
Mixta Nigro, ceu cum Nubes denſantur opacæ
Et totum eripiunt oculis cœlumque diemque.
Nigraque per medios decurrit tænia lumbos
Linda, quam clunes tractim comitantur adimos,
Utraque diſtinguens niveo ſua tergora ductu.

The Horny Hoof with mighty ſound,
As oft as Hunted ſhakes the ground;
Upon their Temples ſtand long Ears,
Bodies bigger than Stags are theirs;
A Woolly Hair, of colour White,
Outſhines the mixture of black Night.
Along the Back, and down the Loins,
A Liſt of Black the White disjoins;
The ſame accompanies the Haunch,
Diſtinguiſhing the Flanks from Paunch.

Hence we were carried to the Ducking Ponds, where Swam Outlandiſh, as well as Native Wild Fowl; and thence to the Aviaries, where Nature preſents not only divers Species, but ſhe has plaid the Wanton, even in diverſifying thoſe of the ſame Kind, either adding or diminiſhing, as ſhe was provided with Matter; ſome Birds having more Feet, Wings, or Bills, than belongs to the wonted Frame of the ſame ſort; others again, are deficient in the Parts uſually beſtowed on the Individuals of the ſame Race, ſome exceeding, and others wanting in Stature. But theſe being accounted Monſtrous and out of the Road, I ſhall forſake them to follow a Couple of long striding Ostriches robbed of their Feathers, which must be certainly very Glorious; they are of the largest size of Birds, wherefore by an Irony called στρουθοκάμηλος, as if one should say of a Giant, such an one is an Infant, or a Camel-Bird to be a Sparrow; their Heads, or Crowns, are perfectly Bald, a Palm in Circumference; which Pliny avouches in expres Terms, Quædam animalia naturaliter calvent, sicut Strutho Cameli; some Creatures are naturally Bald, as Ostriches; their Feet have Two Claws only.

Letter V.

The Ostrich.

The Flower of Spahaun meet a nights in the Walk belonging to the Palace.

Night drawing on, we unwillingly left these Spectacles, and fell into a lovely one between these Groves; for now all the Pride of Spahaun was met in the Chaurbaug, and the Grandees were Airing themselves, prancing about with their numerous Trains, striving to outvie each other in Pomp and Generosity; but come short of those Incentives to Chivalry that spur on our Gallants; the Graces Adorn our Parks and Malls Crowned with Virgin-Garlands, whose loose Garments wave with the flowing Wind, and provoke the Amorous Spark to list himself a Volunteer under those Banners; whose Maiden Faces bear the fresh Colour of the blooming Roses on the Lilly White of their natural Complexion, being wonderfully taking both in their Shape and Meen; Chearful and Free in their Discourse, but with an awful Comelines; Facetious and Pleasant, but with an unspotted Innocence; enough to make Cato shake off his Severity and reconcile himself to Good Nature: Such Daphnes as these (worthy the great Apollo) alas! this Cursed Soil knows not the Blessing of, nor dare they trust them out of Doors; for their fiery Spirits (like Water cast on Sea-Coal) by the Society of such Nymphs, would render their Heat more intense by intemperate Jealousies.

The French Artisans divert us.

After the Armenians had treated us, the French Artisans thought themselves concerned to do the like; that they might not be thought to live here in Slavery, but in a Condition to Entertain, not only their Friends, but to equal the highest Flights the Armenians could pretend to; and for the Honour of their King and Nation, we were called on St. Lewis his Day, which they Solemnized with fresh Devices of Fireworks, Illuminations, Interludes, and Farces; besides the Extravagances of Banquetting and Carowsing, Drinking the Sophi's Health, and their Master's, after all the European Monarchs.

River Fishes.

The next day, with the Noise of loud Musick, we were Invited by them into the Country to a Fish Dinner by the River side, as of Mullets, Crey Fish, Pickeril, and the like; for it is not for every one to feed on Lampry, Turbat, Goldney, or Sturgion, formerly held as dainty Bits by the Rich Roman Gluttons, as Apicius, Vitellus, and Lucullus. However here are Salmon from the Caspian Sea, and the Urchin (though not that admired one of the Ocean for its delicious Taste) this being not for Food but Diversion, under the Hedges and Trees of an Orchard by the Bank of the River.

The Hedge-Hog.

The sly Nature and cunning Thefts of which Creature, though they are made famous by many of the Learnedst Philosophers, yet none more Graphically expresses them than these Facetious Verses:

Ergo

Ergo ubi lapsa jacent sua quisque sub arbore poma
Accedunt Læti, seque in sua terga volutant,
Donec fixa rubis hærentia mala supremis
Exportent; implentque penum liventibus uvis;
Quorum acinis quoties sentes onerantur acutæ
Perjucunda sui præbent spectacula nobis,
Quippe humeros tecti sic ingrediuntur, ut ipsâ
Ire putes totos avulsos vite racemos.
Ah! tibi ne cupidos sensus tam tangat habendi,
Tantus amor furem ut tentes arcere jocosum,
Atque oculos durus jucundo avertere Ludo
Eripere, & natis dulcem expectantibus escam.

Under the Trees where Apples lye,
They come apace, full fraught with Joy;
And rowling on their Backs, they fix
The tender Apples to their Pricks;
Which carrying off, they come again,
And with ripe Grapes their Store maintain:
Whose Thorny Bristles fully stuck,
A pleasant Sight it is to look,
And see them march, lac'd o're with Fruit,
As if they'd stole the Vine to boot.
Ah! let not Covetous Intent,
The Waggish Thief at all prevent;
Or Surly drive him from his Prey,
Who bears them thus to's Young away.

It is called by the Latins, Echinus, from the Greek, ἀπὸ τὸ ἔχειν, seu συνεχὲν ἑαυτὸν, because it contracts its self, being touched; by some Erinaceus, of which there are two sorts, and in our Tongue are called Hedge-hogs, the one with a Snout like an Hog's, and the other a Nose like a Dog's, both which are beset with sharp Thorns or Prickles on their Backs; and when they fear any harm towards them, gather themselves into a round Fuz-ball.

In some few places where the Water was purposely pent in, we saw some Flocks of Water Fowl, which the Persians are skill'd, by their long Case-harden'd Guns, to shoot flying. Water-Fowl.

The best Hawks of Muscovia are purchased here at great Rates, nor undeservedly, for they will strike down those Colum that are as big as Wild Turkies, and visit India in the Cold Season, eleven or a dozen one after another, as they fly in Trains like Wild Geese, and come down with the last themselves: Some of these we saw tried, which was pleasant Sport: They have some Hawks of their own, but they are of a Cowardly Breed to these, they teaching the Crows of the Country to be too hard for them; whereby it is familiar to give an Hundred Thomands for a right Muscovia Hawk; of which they are so great Lovers, that they seldom appear abroad without one of them on their Hand.

Letter V.

Some of them in their Swoops are ſo couragious, as to ſeize the Heads of Deer or Antelopes, and ſeating themſelves with their Talons between their Horns, pick out their Eyes, or doze them with their Beaks, or ſtupify them with their Strokes; ſo that no Hunting in the World is like it, to ſee them ſoaring in a wide Plain where Herds of theſe are, (eſpecially if there be theſe Water-pits for the Courſes under Ground), at once to obſerve them guarding their Fronts, ſcampering with their Heads to the Earth, to avoid the tow'ring Enemy aloft; ſometimes unawares to fall Captives into theſe Wells, not ſuſpecting the Danger under foot, ſo much as avoiding that which threatens them over head, whereby they run into Thickets, or againſt Shrubs and Stumps of Trees, tumbling and leaping unadviſedly, ſo that Greyhounds being ſet upon them, eaſily overtake them.

Greyhounds.

Not by this Stratagem to derogate from their Greyhounds, which are as good as moſt of that kind, well-ſhap'd and ſwift, but ſhagged with long Hair, yet for all that are kept cloathed as their Horſes in Winter, and all the Year beſides rubbed, dreſſed, and covered with lighter Cloaths: The other Dogs are but Curs; they are Strangers to our Bloodhounds; but have many Engliſh Maſtiffs in good Repute, which breed, and are very ſerviceable to keep their Houſes, ſtriking Terror into the Aſſailants more than a Guard of Watchmen.

No Woods or Foreſts about Spahaun.

Here are no Parks, Foreſts, or Chaces for Sport, nor Meres or Decoys for Game, nor indeed Medows yielding Hay for their Cattel, their Fodder being chopped Straw, and Barley their Provender all over the Empire; nor are here any Woods more than incloſed in Gardens, which is unfit for Building or Firing; yet of the tall Maple or Sycamore they have ſlit Boards for their Cheſts for Wine and Fruit; neither is there any Turf or Coal, ſo that Firing is more worth than Food, being forced to ſend Camels to fetch it many days Journy hence, as has been ſaid at our firſt coming hither.

In our Return we obſerved ſeveral Tombs of the Ancient Gabers, after the ſame manner as the Parſies in India; and at top of the Mountains ſuch Monuments as are on the ſides of the Plain of Perſepolis, and one more eminent, in Honour of their great Champion, Ruſtam; but who this Ruſtam was, both their Annals and Tradition give an unſatisfactory Account.

An Eclypſe of the Sun.

On the 19th of Auguſt an Eclypſe of the Sun made us take notice of the Alteration of the Weather, which was ſtormy and tempeſtuous; as well as the lamentable plight all the Mahometans were in, they ſuppoſing that Orb to be in Labour, and therefore by Prayers and Incantations concerned at its Delivery, all the time beating Pots of Braſs, making a Noiſe as dreadful as the Day of Doom: The Eclypſe being over, the Weather cleared up again, as alſo the Madneſs of the People was allay'd.

The Suburbs.

All September the Mornings and Evenings were ſharp, and the North-Weſt Winds began to bring the Winter's Cold, though the Daytime was Hot and Serene; wherein we made another Excurſion through the Suburbs on the farther ſide of the Court, to Jelfa, through new Buzzars, finer and better Arch'd than thoſe in the City, terminating in the Squares of divers Noblemen, who had reared them them at their own Charge and Advantage; whereby they were more Coſtly and Neat, broad enough for two Coaches to paſs abreaſt, though this City is unacquainted with thoſe Carriages; nor indeed would they be convenient, by reaſon of the Narrow Streets within, and Mountains without.

A Third Bridge.

Theſe brought us a long way to the River-ſide, adorned with Dwellings of their Great Men, over which, to the Chriſtian Town, lay another Bridge, inferior neither for Length, or Elegancy of Structure, to either of the former two, but much later built. At the Foot of it is a large Coppice of Willows, reaching a great way by the Water-ſide; here the Jelfalines met us with their uſual Noiſe of loud Muſick, and led us directly up to a Mountain, where the Emperors have digged a Grotto overlooking all the City, at their Retirements hither ſhading them from the Sun's Violence: This is fabled to be alſo Solomon's Throne, as we remarked before in Duccan; others pretend it was projected by Darius, but for what end, unleſs for a Proſpect of this large place hid in a Wood, I cannot gueſs.

We were two days encompaſſing Spahaun.

Hence in two days we compaſſed the two Cities of Iſpahaun and Jelfa, taking more Ground by far than London and Southwark with their Suburbs, but then the moſt part is filled with Gardens; however I believe them not to be ſo populous: Yet the Frenchmen here avouch, That more Melons, Cucumbers, and other Horary Fruits are conſumed in this Place in a Month, than in Italy, France, and Spain, in half a Year, eſtimating by Balance of Six thouſand Aſs or Mules Loads of them expended every day: For though they have good Butchers Meat and Poultry, their chiefeſt Diet is on Fruit; and if ſuch vaſt Quantities be brought out of the Country daily, beſides what may be planted within their own Walls, it may be concluded ſome Thouſands of Inhabitants contribute to the devouring of them; though it muſt not be credited what is ſpoken hyperbolically by theſe Citizens, That it is the biggeſt City in the World, and therefore by way of Excellency called, The World.

It is not fenced by Walls, nor has it more than one ſtrong Tower with Mud Walls, fitter for Butts for Bows and Arrows, than to repulſe a Cannon-Bullet; only ſerviceble at preſent to be the Exchequer of the Emperor, where are laid up great Treaſures, the preſent Sophi being an intolerable Hoarder, beneath the Majeſty of ſo mighty a Prince, repining even at mean Expences.

Changes of the Weather.

But leaving him to his Covetous Humour, it remains only to take notice of the Seaſon at the end of this Month, inaſmuch as Bodies undergo herein the Autumnal Changes, which afflicts them with Pleuriſies, Catarrhs, Hoarſeneſs, Conſumptions, Coughs, Malignant, Putrid, Intermitting, as alſo continued Fevers, under this Fifth Climate: To which the Aphoriſm of the Medical Divine has regard, when it ſays, Ἐβλέπειν ἔν δεῖ τὴ χώρον τὴ ὥρην; Diſpicere oportet regionem, tempus, &c. The Regions and Seaſons of the Year ought to be enquired into; for the Alterations and Deviations from the uſual Seaſons are chiefly productive of Diſeaſes; for from Hot and Dry, the Air now paſſes into Cold and Dry, and at laſt into Moiſt; for which reaſon the Perſians begin now to put on their Furrs; and the Sky, which hitherto had been clear (except a little Letter V. at the Change of the Moons), near the middle of October, wears a frowning Countenance, and at the end of November ſends ſome Showers, according to the Wiſh of Virgil's Husbandman, to fatten the Earth.

at

Which I mention only to ſee what relation it has to what grows in England, and have ſet down thus to avoid Tautology.

To ſhut up therefore this Diſcourſe, I ſhall borrow an Indication from the Tall Trees growing in a free Air; for from their bending towards any Point of the Compaſs, thence is collected from what Quarter of the Heavens the moſt forcible and frequent Winds do come, in what Region ſoever they blow; ſo Trees growing near the Sea-ſhore, incline towards the Land, but up-land in Perſia they grow upright, which ſhews no conſtant Winds to have any ſuch Influence; though from the Autumnal Equinox, the North-Weſt uſhers in the Wet Weather, to make way for the Froſt and Snow till December, yet it is often variable, and veres to the Eaſt, when it is pinching Cold, from January to the middle of February.

The firſt New Moon in October brings the Muſſlemens Lent of Ramazan, which hapned on the 10th this Year, and was the ſame day our Agent ſet forth for Bunder, leaving me ſick behind. The 16th of November put an end to their Faſt, and began a Day of Jubilee; when the Leafs were all dropped off, and the Earth and Trees were naked; after which, Bodies indiſpoſed ſue for a Writ of Eaſe, and as the Winter is more piercing, they recover Health.

Sharp Winter here.

December locks up all in Ice and Snow, and conſtipates the Pores of the Earth that it cannot be tilled; the Tops of Mountains are all capped, and the Sharp Winds and Serene Air make it leſs tolerable than in Great Britain, it being ready to cut you through; though then in the Sun it is ſo warm, that the Poor are beholden to it for their Stores: It ſeldom ſnows above three or four days together, but that is ſufficient to load the Mountains, and to fill the Valleys for many days, before it be diſſolved. And then it proves fatal to the Houſes built only of Mud; for whilſt they ſeek to ſecure the Roof, many times by ſweeping it thence, the Snow melts at the bottom, and undermines their Foundations, that oftentimes they become mixt with the Dirt in the Streets.

Uſe of Stoves in Perſia.

In this Seaſon Stoves are no leſs in uſe in Perſia, than in the extremeſt Cold Parts of the World, by which they cheriſh the innate Heat, otherwiſe like enough to be oppreſt; which they do after a peculiar manner: In the middle of a Square cloſe Room, they dig an Hearth Fourſquare (not raiſed, as in our College-halls), over which is ſet a Square, Low, but Large Table, whereon is thrown a Quilt, and upon the Hearth is only ſet an Earthen Pot of Charcoal;

Letter V.

coal; all the reſt of the Room is ſpread with Beds and Quilts, into which, whoever comes (after his Slippers are put off) he thruſts his Feet under the Quilt covering the Table; which way, though it keep them warm, is prejudicial to the Nerves and Brain, by reaſon of the Mercurial Fumes ariſing from the Charcoal; being obliged to uſe that for want of plenty of Wood to Burn in Chimnies; the Conveniency whereof they are unacquainted with, having never ſeen any Chimney but what is in the Engliſh Factory.

Their Kitchins are all over of a Smoak like our Malt Kills, with ſuch ventilating Tiles as they have, they rounding their Cook Rooms with ſmall Furnaces, ſuch as our Chymiſts make in their Laboratories, ſetting their Earthen, or Copper Pots thereon, not hanging them on Pothooks as we do.

A pure Air without Soil.

And laſt of all, for a final and undeniable Experiment of the Pureneſs and Clearneſs of the Air here, let a Sword, never ſo well Poliſhed, (and they have the beſt Damaſcened Swords) lie unſheathed a whole Night, or longer, in Snow, or Water; take it thence and never wipe it, and it ſhall not Ruſt: Beſides, now at Chriſtmas time the Grapes ſold for Food in the Market are ſo dry they may be powdered; Carry theſe individual Grapes down to Port, and you ſhall in Four or Five days (ſhort of the Bunder) ſenſibly perceive them to imbibe the thicker Air, and contract a Clammineſs; which proceeds from the remoteneſs of Spahaun from any Sea, Navigable River, Lake, or Fenn; the Caſpian Sea being the neareſt, which is Five hundred Miles off; beſides its being environed with dry barren Mountains, whence come fine, rare, and thin Blaſts; inſomuch that could Bodies ever be in an Equilibrium as to their Temperament, certainly it might be preſerved here rather than in any other place; for whatſoever Stranger comes hither with an Healthy Conſtitution, it is very laſting; and the Natives who live Temperately, witneſs a good old Age, with a continued ſtate of Health; the Endemial Diſeaſes of this Country being rather Acute than Chronical.

Death of the Preſident.

We muſt cloſe up this Year with the ſad News of the Death of our Preſident at Surat; He was a Mecœnas of Honeſt Studies; a great Cheriſher of Ingenuity; of a Generous and Free Acceſs; Maſculinely Candid; a Maſter of all Languages and Sciences, as well as Skilled in Military Virtues; as if Mars had undertaken the Protection of the Muſes: But ſo envious are the Fates, that the beſt things are ſnatch'd away firſt.

This Agent Succeeds in the Chair at Surat.

To this lover of Arts and Learning, our Agent, now at Port, by the Appointment of the Honourable Company, is to Succeed, and accordingly he is preparing for his departure to ſupply that Vacancy.

Artifices of the Dutch.

And, as if it were not fit one Miſchief ſhould paſs unattended; at the ſame time we had an Account of the Villanous and Barbarous Attempt of the Molagans at Bantam, on the Engliſh Agent and the Factors there (who were only ſuppoſed to Eſpouſe the Old King's Quarrel againſt the New) as they were in their Boats diverting themſelves with their Ladies, unawares were ſet upon and Aſſaſſinated by Ruffians hid in the Flags and Oſiers on the Rivers ſides, and all all Cut off; not without ſome reaſonable Reflections that the Dutch were Acceſſaries, being but falſe Neighbours to them at Batavia, having a jealouſy of the Engliſh Trading for Pepper in thoſe Parts, and for that cauſe have promoted Animoſities betwixt Father and Son; taking this opportunity to ſend Forces to the Son's Aſſiſtance, but in reality to ſecure Bantam for themſelves, while they have forced the Old King up the Country, to expect his Majeſty of Great Britain's Strength in vain, by Embaſſador's ſent thither to Reinſtate him. Thus watchful and vigorous are the Hollanders to get all the Spice Trade of Eaſt-India into their own Hands, that they may ſolely enjoy it without any Competitors. Chap. VIII.

CHAP. VIII.

Brings us in the midſt of Winter from Spahaun to Gombroon; The Caun's Pranks there: The Hot Baths at Genoe: The Equinox and Seaſons attending are ſomewhat parallel betwixt this Coaſt and the Indian: A New Agent arrives.

THE Agent of Perſia having left Gombroon to go to fill up the Chair at Surat, the Second at Spahaun was obliged to repair thither to take care of the Company's Concerns there; with whom, I being now Recovered, on the 10th of January, with a French Chirurgeon in our Company, in the depth of Winter we ſet forth for the Perſian Gulf.

We return'd the ſame way, Travelling only in the Day time till we came to Eſduchos, where becauſe the Snow had ſhut up the Valleys, we were forced to leave it on the right, and go about by the high Road, not frequented in Summer time ſo much by light Horſemen, as now, there being no Paſſage the other way; wherefore our Entertainment this Journy is leſs Hoſpitable, and the Caravan generally more rude, it being the uſual Tract for Camels and their Drivers (they moſt an end providing only for themſelves) and better Gueſts being ſeldom or never expected; ſo that in all probability we might expect to encounter Hardſhips; but the Silver Bait procured all things that Man could furniſh us with; and we met with no other Difficulties than what the Weather created us. Valleys filled with Snow.

Againſt which we guarded our ſelves by good warm Furs, which are ſome of Sables, Fox-Furs, or Sheeps-Wool artificially Criſped, and others for Servants of Sheep Skins undreſſed, and their Coats lined therewith, the ſhaggy Fleece remaining untouched; and over all, to prevent the ſharp Winds deglubating us, we Houſed our ſelves Cap-a-pee under Felts, or Taupengees, kneaded into Coats with Sleeves, with a Scapular to pull over our Heads and Face; a well fixed Noſe being hardly Proof againſt ſuch cutting Cold. Whether theſe Coats we wore againſt this Seaſon, might not be ſuch as our We defend our ſelves with Furs.

Letter V.

Saviour is ſaid to have on, (theſe being Seamleſs and the Wear of the Poor People) I remit to our Caſuiſts.

At Chuldeſtan a Camel Mad with Luſt.

From Eſduchos to Chuldeſtan, is Eight Pharſangs, whither we came in a Day, by the help of our Shotters, or Footmen guiding us; whoſe Bells our Horſes followed, when we durſt not peep out to direct them. Here a large Camel, raging with Luſt for the Female, as his Keeper was Feeding him, with Paſt of Barly Meal made into Balls, he got his whole Arm into his Mouth, and had not there been preſent a great many ready for his Relief, he had been deſtroyed by him: This Fury laſts Forty Days, when they Foam at the Mouth, and are very Unruly, at other times nothing being more Governable.

Obedah, a Town of Vineyards.

From hence to Obedah are Six Pharſangs; it is a large Village abounding with Vineyards, which reach as far as Zermaw, Four Pharſangs farther; hitherto we Travelled Carpet-way, all the Ground being covered with Snow, and moſt an end the Sun obſcured, and ſometimes the Clouds falling in fleecy White Rain, as the poor Indians expreſs it, who were almoſt ſtarved to Death by the exceſſive Cold, and ſtormy Blaſts from the Mountains.

Conacaraw and Dehid.

At Conacaraw, Eight Pharſangs more, it began to clear up (though we ſeemed to carry the Winter with us, there having been little afore our Arrival); and at Dehid, Six Pharſangs more, we left the Plains on the Hills all along Planted with Vines, to aſcend the piled Perſicæ, now covered with Snow, horribly bleak, and perilouſly cold with froſty Winds, that either Pole might poſſibly be more tolerable, they being fenced with Thicker Air, this being ſo ſharp that it paſſed our skill to keep our Skins whole; for if the Sun did favour one ſide, the other ſide was ſhaved with cruel Blaſts; nor did that fare better which was expoſed to the ſcorching Beams; that had we not been provided with the Pomatum mentioned before (the Butter of the greater cool Seeds) we had been in a ſore condition; but Anointing our Hands and Face going to Bed, the next Morning healed them.

Conacurgu and Muſhat.

At Conacurgu we found a Bridge neceſſary to paſs upon the diſſolving of the Snow from the Ridges of the Hills, and tracing the Mountains, we came in Eight Pharſangs to Muſhat; notable for the Sepulchre of one of their Twelve Apoſtles to their falſe Prophet; here we were glad to take up in a Farmer's Houſe, in an Apartment whereof having cauſed a Fire to be kindled, where I was to lie, my Servant, after I was in Bed and aſleep, hulking about the Fire, fell with his Felt Coat, being Drowſy, upon the Embers; which Burning made ſuch a ſmother, that I was almoſt ſtifled in the cloſe Room before I could find the Way out; yet he lay Snoaring and unconcerned, when I could not get rid of the ſtench in my Throat ſome Days after.

The Day following, we by Two Bridges croſſed Two Rivers more, or it may be the ſame that run to Bindamire; and in a rainy wet Day took up our Lodgings at Zevan, but Five Pharſangs, and the next Day ſaw Perſepolis again; entring the Plain by Two Pillars, upon whoſe Corniſh was delineated double-headed Horſes as far as the Cheſt; leaving thoſe Ruins Quintus Curtius ſo much Celebrated, deſpoiled of their Riches, we went through Meergoſcoon, at the back-ſide whereof the Plain was covered all along with Wild-Fowl, which were ſo Tame they would almoſt permit us to knock them on the head with our Sticks, not offering to ſtir till we came on them, they being not uſed to be diſturbed.

At Night we reached Zergoon, through ſlippery and ſlabby Way, and the Day after we brought with us the firſt Snow to Siras.

The Cold Weather makes our Indian Servants uſeleſs.

Here we reſted Five Days, having loſt Two Mules and One Pack-horſe out of Seven and twenty, and One Houſhold-Servant out of Ten that attended us; another we left behind at Moxutebeggy, who was our Cook; and had it not been for the French Chirurgeon, we had been put to our ſhifts, he both ſhooting and dreſſing moſt of our Victuals after the moſt exquiſite French Way of Cookery: Nor muſt any of us at this time take State upon him; for our Servants, not uſed to ſuch Weather, became rather an Impediment than Help to us; liſtleſs, and loth to ſtir, but always crowding in among us, cringing, and never at eaſe but when about the Fire; not to be rowz'd on any occaſion; rather looking for Service from us; by whoſe Slothfulneſs we became as lowſy as Beggars, their huge Shags harbouring ſuch Vermin, and they by no means being to be drove out out of our Company, but laid themſelves a-nights on the ſame Floor with us. In this ſhort ſpace the Sun began to recover Strength, diſſolving the Snow as faſt as it fell.

Having ſhifted our Lowzy Companions, they began to brisk up by degrees, as they felt the Warmth to increaſe upon them: Here our Interpreter, a Georgian Soldier, and a Carmelite Friar, joined us; (the French Chirurgeon being bound for Bunder Reek, left us): And the 29th of January, ſhaking off the hoſpitable Impertinencies of ſuch as followed us out of the City, we gained that Night Bobba-Hodge; and the next Day travelled Faſting, for the Execrable Death of the Martyr Charles the Firſt; which ſomething diſcountenanced the Carmelite, ſeeing a Table ſpread, as Cuſtomary, at Noon, and not an Engliſhman to eat a Bit, or drink a Drop; but being informed of the Reaſon, he was more amazed, ſaying, He wonder'd at our Strictneſs, ſince on their Faſting-days they were allowed a Buccado of Sweetmeats and a Glaſs of Wine before Noon, and at Noon a ſmall Repaſt, and ſo likewiſe in the Afternoon, but at Night a good plentiful Supper: With the latter part we promiſed we would agree with him, but for the other we thought there was no great Reſtraint put upon Nature.

On the laſt Day of the Month we found Caifar, a pleaſant Village, bearing the firſt Fruitful Palm this Way, where the Myrtle and the Orange-Tree is always Green, yielding Flowers in Bloſſoms, Ripe and Green Fruit all at one and the ſame time: Here ſprings up the Bell-Flower, Violet, and Primroſe; ſo that we may now ſing with Horace;

Solvitur acris hyems gratâ vice veris & Favoni, Ac neque jam ſtabulis gaudet pecus aut arator igni, &c. Ode IV. ad Sextium.

Letter V.

Favonius Breath ſharp Winters Ice doth thaw;
Beaſts leave their Stalls, Plough-ſwains their Fires forgo;
Nor are the Meadows White with Drifts of Snow.
Now Cytherea under Cynthia's Shine,
Danceth around, and lovely Graces join
With Nymphs, the Earth in meaſured Strains to beat,
Whilſt Vulcan in his glowing Forge doth ſweat.
Now with Green Myrtle crown thy ſleek oyl'd Head,
Or Flowers, which the mellow Earth doth ſpread.
To Faunus now in Groves I do adviſe,
Either a Kid or Lamb thou ſacrifice.

Which Counſel we took, not out of an Epicurean Fancy, to live merrily, becauſe of the common Neceſſity of Death, as in this Ode he exhorteth Sextius; but to compenſate for our paſt Labours, and enable us the better to undergo this troubleſome Journy: Here we indulged in a never-dying Green Orchard, mixing the Flavour of the Oranges, which are as good as grow, with our new Siras Wine, exhilarating our ſelves with the true Reliſh, and Natural Sweets of this delightful Rural Seat.

But the Checquer-work of this World prepared other Buſineſs for the ſucceeding Day, bringing us over high Rocks, made plain by Coſt and Pains: Here on the Tops of Mountains we only ſaw the Snow; however, the Winds blowing off thence, made us feel our quaking Joints ſtruck through with horrid Numbneſs; by which means nothing more frequently happen'd, than one quarter of an hour to be ſeized with ſhivering Blaſts; and when they were over, the Sun by its powerful Heat another Quarter to ſcorch our Skin, expoſed to his Rays; by which ſudden Alterations, not only our Hands and Faces were vexed, but our whole Bodies ſuffered Languiſhment, as Ovid before us had tried in his Exile.

Cum modo Frigoribus premitur, modo ſolvitur Æſtu Tempore non certo, corpora Languor habet.

We begin to loſe the Winter.

After we had run this Gantlope, the Weſt Winds ſetting in, the Seaſon grew more mild, and the 5th of February we ſet out long before Day, which hitherto we had not done; and in our way found ſprouting between Bonaru and Rhadar, Sanctonicum, Wormwood, Maudlin, Tanſy, Sowthiſtles, White Horehound, or rather Hermodactyl, bearing ſuch a Flower as Saffron, on which the breeding Bezoar-Goats do feed; the Lilly of the Valley, as alſo, which is rare, Graſs, or rather a kind of Graſs like our Moſs, or ſuch as we ſee grow among Pavements after a Shower of Rain with us: This was admired by our Interpreter, as if no Place in the World excelled this; which muſt be imputed to the home-bred Temper of thoſe Perſians who never ſtir abroad, or the neſcio quâ dulcedine cunctos, which adopts a Fondneſs of their own: In which I pronounce theſe People happy; for they have ſmall regard either to Foreigners or their Countries, in reſpect of their Native Soil or Abilities, conceiting ceiting themſelves ſuperlative in every thing: And from this Habit of Affectation, I have often, I confeſs, declared them the French in theſe Parts, though they raiſe themſelves a ſmall degree from the Traditions and Rudiments of the Old World. Chap. VIII.

In the middle Way between Pokutal and Bury, we were threatned with Showers, but got in before they fell: This Caravan Ser Raw, ſince the time of our being here, is almoſt Thunder-ſtruck a-pieces; and Lhor has endured the ſhock of two terrible Earthquakes.

The Air grows thick.

From whence the Air daily thicken'd in the Atmoſphere, and the Sweat began to pour through our Pores, which in a more ſubtle Air we could not perſpire, though Urine flowed there more plentifully; for a Thin Air gathers and contracts the Pores, forbidding the Efflux of Heat or Spirits, conſtraining the Matter which otherwiſe would gently breathe forth, precipitating the Serum through the Urinary Conduits, and ſeparating it from the Blood, either by Collation in the Reins, or by virtue of ſome particular Ferment, according to the Doctrine of the Learned Willis.

Our Engliſh Maſtiffs maſter their Lions.

At Cormoot we met a Lion and a Spotted Deer carrying up as Preſents to the Sophi from the Mogul: The Lion ſeemed rather a Catamountain, than ſuch a Majeſtick Creature as ours in Europe, being nigher a Dun Colour than a Dark Red, without Beard, nor haired all from the Head down to the Creſt and Thighs; about the Lips it had Briſtles like a Cat, and when the Keeper ſtroaked it, it would make a Noiſe much the ſame as a Cat when ſhe purls: Theſe are kept to ſet upon Bulls before the Emperor, which they do ſneakingly, coming behind them to leap upon their Quarters, which one of our right bred Engliſh Maſtiffs would ſcorn to do; a true Bull dog being too hard a Match for one of theſe Lions, which has often been proved at the Court of Perſia, to the Commendation of their Courage.

Hereabouts the Locuſts have for theſe Three Years ſucceſſively made ſuch waſte, that they are almoſt famiſhed for want of Dates; and though this Town uſed to ſupply other Parts, they are forced to ſeek Suſtenance elſewhere for themſelves.

On Valentine's Eve, two Days before we could ſee the Sea, we perceived its Stench, the Sun being up ſome time every day, before he could diſpel the Vapours raiſed thence.

Returned to Gombroon.

The French Agent came to us at Band Ally, before the Cock-crow on the 15th of February, and at Noon the Dutch Commodore welcomed our Return, and conducted us to Gombroon from the Caun's Garden; as did all the Merchants congratulate our Arrival, as well as all the Ships in the Road ſaluted us upon our entring the Factory.

The Engliſh Preſident affronted by the Caun.

Since our Departure from Gombroon, the Caun has been playing his Pranks, having expended vaſt Sums to buy off his former Offences and Rapins committed in his Government, and endeavouring now by unjuſt means to reimburſe himſelf: Wherefore no ſooner was our Agent come to Port, but he caught our Broker, a Rich Banyan, and clapt him into Priſon, contrary to the Royal Mandat granted him, extorting from him Five hundred Thomands, denying Leave for our Agent in the mean time to go Aboard Ship, in order to embark for his Preſidency at Surat; begirting the Houſe with Soldiers, leſt he ſhould ſhould clancularly get away, as he had plotted, and which at laſt he did, adorning the firſt Step to his new Province with a foul Diſgrace; when he might have done more honourably as the Dutch did, by defending their Houſe, and driving away the Guards, keeping their Broker ſafe in their Houſe, ſending a Courier on purpoſe to acquaint the Emperor; with Orders to let him know, That if this Caun were not removed, he muſt give them Licenſe to be gone.

Letter V.

Whilſt theſe things were tranſacting, Two Stout Ships from Batavia, well appointed with Men and Arms, came before Gombroon, when the Caun began to comply; and our Two Ships ſent to fetch the Preſident, ſneak'd away, doing nothing. Upon our Arrival at Port the Flemiſh Ships were braving it in the Road, and the Caun, to hinder our proteſting againſt his Proceedings, was very humble, and ſent to let us underſtand he would upon the Engliſh Account ſubmit to any thing: Wherefore to avoid being deluded by his pretended Friendſhip, which we were not ſtrong enough to affront; and fearing we ſhould have been uſed as Properties to an Arbitrament, we feigned Excuſes to leave the Town for Aſſeen.

The Banyans fly.

There was not in this Conteſt a Banyan left in Town, they ſhifting for themſelves as ſoon as they foreſaw the Storm a coming, removing all to Congo, under the Caun of Lhor, for Refuge, when they ſaw the Death of the Laws, when no Sanctuary could be had, nor no Promiſes nor Oaths were obligatory, Religion made a Stale, and their Houſes likely to be made a Prey: Being invited to return, and asked a reaſon for their Deſertion, they gave the Tyrant the ſame Anſwer the Fox did the Lion.

——— Quia me veſtigia terrent,
Omnia te adverſum ſpectant ſed nulla retrorſum.

His Tyranny.

For the Caun in his Cups (which indeed being ſober he has more than once repeated) tranſgreſſed not only the Bonds and Ties of Government, but even of Humanity, perpetrating thoſe Wickedneſſes which are only eſſential to Salvages, though never but once called to reckon for them; which once had like to have forfeited his Head as well as Place.

The Story is this: Having cruelly butchered one of theſe Heathens to poſſeſs himſelf of his Wealth, by ripping up his Belly, inſomuch that his Entrails iſſued forth with his Blood, he was ſo brutiſh and hard-hearted as to ſport at the Miſery of this helpleſs Wretch, fallen into the bloody Hands of this Mercileſs Hellhound: His Friends not being able to deliver him by Force, made uſe of a directer way to Revenge, and engaged by their Money the great Favourites at Court; thinking no other means ſo proper to reſtore to them the Loſs of their Aſſaſſinated Relation, as by procuring the Overthrow of the Caun: Which while they were endeavouring, and had caſt him under a Cloud, yet they failed in that Power, whereby he was able to fight againſt them with their own Weapons, he ſqueezing them here, while the Great Men drained them like Courtiers, letting their Suit fall in the Mid-way; ſo that while they flagged in their Bribes, he recovered on their Ruin: The King being only informed formed of ſome Miſdemeanor, but never inſtructed with Truth enough to ordain a total Deprivation, or a Puniſhment equal to the blackneſs of the Crime: On which ſcore it is the Banyans at this time ſhun his Dominions, as a Pilot would Charibdis, or any Rock he is certain to ſplit on. Chap. VIII

Going to Aſſeen.

We being at Aſſeen, the buſy Birds in Rearing and Contriving their Neſts and Tenements, became Emblems of Self-preſervation; nor were we leſs taken with productive Nature, that lets not the moſt unfit Soil want her influence as far as it is capable to bring forth, ſhe not being Idle, even in this place; which as it delighted our Minds, this being the moderateſt Seaſon, ſo we had ſome pleaſure afforded for the exerciſe of our Bodies, as Hunting the Wild Boar, which fatten themſelves chiefly on Dates, and are therefore worth the Toil and Danger of Aſſailing; and for to ſecure the Flocks, it is no leſs meritorious to Chaſe the Wolf, for which, not only Bows and Arrows, Sword and Gun, but Spears, Pikes, and Dogs are called in to gain the Conqueſt; theſe are Martial Exploits; the Timerous Hare and Antilope require not all theſe Weapons, but only giving them the Law of the Field.

We Viſit the Hot Baths at Genoe.

At Genoe are wholſome Hot Baths, whoſe Fame made us pierce Twenty Mile nigher the high Mountains than Aſſeen, yet ſeeming to overſhadow Gombroon; theſe Baths ariſe between the Promontories facing India, half a Mile out of the great Road to Carmania, out of ſeveral places in a deep Bottom rather than a Valley, and where they have their ſource alſo: As they ſlide along they Line the Earth with a Moſſy Slime tinctured with a yellow Sulphureous Green; under which are Stones of live Brimſtone exhaling a Nitrous Scent, ſtinking like that Water the Mariners call Bilge Water; their Taſte was a Brackiſh Sweet, not Nitrous; to the ſight they are Clear and Perſpicuous, of a Citrine Colour (or like Lie well Boiled) from their Tranſparency, by the reflecting of the ſlimy Matter at the Bottom; for otherwiſe taken up in a Veſſel not ſubject to be tainted by them, they are Diaphanous; Extracted by Fire there remains a Salt, both Vomiting and Purging, more violent than Vitriol or Antinomy.

For as Galen Teaches, Lib. Nat. fac. 2do. Salt things Elaborated by immoderate Heat, are troubleſome to the Stomach: They are not ſo hot as Boiling Water, but rather by the mildneſs of their Heat they cauſe Tranſpiration, that if you pleaſe to ſtay longer in them, Sweat may be raiſed to the higheſt degree: The moſt uſual ſpace of tarrying in them, is from Half an Hour to an Hour, and then betaking themſelves to a Warm Bed, lie an Hour or Two longer well covered, or as the Spirits ſerve, which is repeated, Three, Seven, or Nine times; as if God delighted in an Odd Number, as may be obſerved in the Pool of Betheſda, or of Naaman's Waſhing in Jordan.

Their Virtues.

They are held good againſt all humoral Chronical Diſtempers, and Remedy inveterate Ulcers, Cleanſe and Heal Old Sores, Eaſe Aches and Pains of the Limbs, Joints, and Membranes, for which they are much frequented: In places where they bubble up they caſt a Spume of many Colours; which thoſe troubled with Scabs, or Leproſy,

Letter V.

Leproſy, take up as it ſpues out, and Anoint the part affected; which, they ſay, works Miracles.

If Silver be caſt into it, or receive the Vapours, it looks like Copper; which Fumes Morning and Evening aſcend like the Steam from a Pot of Water ſeething over the Fire; the chief Spring ſeems to flow out of an hollow Rock in the Earth; which whether it be worn ſo of its ſelf I know not, but that little Art is required to make it ſo, I am certain, for it is almoſt as deep as a Man's height, capable of receiving Six or Seven at a time; but the Sides are jagged and rough pieces of broken Rock, that it is always cautioned to have a care of breaking their Shins: From this Hole, or Well, a Square Ciſtern or Stone receives the Water, where thoſe that are moſt Infirm are laid to Bathe; from hence it takes its rapid and pellucid Courſe directly through Two eminent Cataracts (unleſs ſome Whirl-pits playing on either ſide, ſwallow it on one ſide as faſt as it riſes on the foot of the adverſe Mountain) into a Plain enriched with its pregnant Salt, and after a ſmall Current it is diſtracted into ſeveral Rivulets by the Husbandman, loſing both its Saltneſs and ſwift Stream.

On its Banks grow Palm-Trees, not ſo long liv'd as elſewhere, if by the decayed Trunks any gueſs may be made; Hounds-Tongue, Bulruſhes, and Flags, rejoyce on the ſides, and little Fiſhes live in them.

Two Hoſpitals Built at the Charge of Two Banyans.

Nokada Biram, the Dutch Broker, and Tockerſey, our Banyan, have Built to theſe natural Baths, each an handſome Hoſpital: That of the firſt is an open one, Built Square, Capped with Four round Tubilated Cupilo's about an huge one in the middle, with Two Rows of Pillars to ſupport it. The later has made his more cloſe, upheld by Nine Pillars on the ſides, and Four in the middle, with a ſtately Portuco at the Entrance, and a cloſe Cell behind, commodious to Sweat in, beſides a Stone Repoſitory for Rain Water; they being both neat and durable Works.

Here preſents a large ſcope of Diſcourſe, which we will only touch upon, improving that little leiſure afforded us before our Return, concerning theſe Natural Baths, and thoſe Artificial ones every where in uſe among the Eaſtern People: As for the firſt Principles of things, though among the gliſtering Contentions of Philoſophers there be many Opinions, yet we ſhall at preſent inſiſt on the Fourfold one of the Peripateticks, nor can we from hence apprehend any of them Pure and Elementary, but as the Searchers into Natures Secrets have delivered it defined unto us.

All Waters partake of the Conditions of the Earth they paſs through.

Water therefore is a Cold and Moiſt Body, in which principally Fiſhes and other living Creatures Swim and have their Being and receive Nouriſhment: By how much Clearer and more Lympid it is, by ſo much it is the more agreeable to all Bodies. From whence the Approbation of Hyppocrates, Aph. 24. Lib. 5. the lighteſt Waters are ſooneſt Hot, and as ſoon Cold; whence he concludes them the Cleareſt, and conſequently the beſt; but ſince all Waters (except Rain-Water, which alſo is thence exhaled) are incloſed, or at leaſt circumſcribed by the Earth, they are ſubject to a perpetual agitation of Particles, in greater or leſſer quantities, or in different places, as they flow through the ſeveral Caverns or Cavities, ſo they partake of ſeveral conditions in their paſſage; which diſtinguiſhes them, as Sea-Water, River-Water, Rain-Water, Spring-Water, Well-Water, Salt, Bitter, Vinous, or Warm Waters, deriving their Name ἀπὸ τῆ θέρμης, conſtantly ariſing Hot out of the Ground from the nearneſs of ſome Hot Minerals; and for this reaſon it is almoſt all of them have an Hot and Dry quality, whereby they help Moiſt and Cold Tempers moſt of all; which Faculty Platerus attributes to the nature of Lime; which leans on the Sentence of Ariſtotle, who in his Second Part, Chap. 2. ſays, there is left in Lime a kind of Mother, Ἐμπύρευμα, Aduſta fere omnia habent aliquid caliditatis, ut calx, cinis, &c. Almoſt all Burnt things have remaining in them ſomething of Heat. But to let that paſs as not being much to the purpoſe: All Waters, in general, participate of the Mixture and Nature of thoſe Places through which they take their Current, though all do not alike ſtrike the Senſes, becauſe ſome have a leſſer Tincture than others; and Heterogeneous Particles confounded, or confuſed, in a larger Vehicle, are not ſo eaſily perceived by the Tongue; which proves no more than this, That whatever Water has a ſingular propriety from the common Water, muſt come under the denomination of Mineral Water.

Mineral Waters diſtinguiſhed from Common.

Which, with Varenius, we draw from a threefold Fountain, viz. from Corporeal, Spiritual, and a Mixture of either; thoſe which run through Subterranean Meanders, in which the Metalline Earths are not over denſe, they carry with them the Grains of thoſe Minerals, and therewith beget the firſt Corporeal Waters.

If the Ores are leſs denſe, as Vitriol, Sulphur, and Salts, which diſſolve of themſelves in Water, theſe create the ſecond Claſs of Corporeals, or Mixed.

And thoſe in their paſſage which are impregnated with the Fumes of theſe Minerals, are, as it were, rectified Spiritual Waters, and make the moſt refined Order of them all.

Out of theſe Three proceed Mineral Waters, which are either Golden, Silver, Tin, Lead, or Iron, Waters; Waters of common Salt, Aluminous, Vitriolated, Bituminous, Sulphurious, or Antimonial: Waters of ſeveral Earths, Stones, Lime, Chalk, and Ochre, Cinnabar, Marble, Alabaſter, and laſt of all, Mercurial Waters.

Their differences.

The differences are to be referred to the individual Species of every Water, as far as relates to their Eſſence; but becauſe to inferior Capacities ſuch do not ſo readily occur, they are made more familiar by Sower, Bitter, and the like: The Explanation whereof, both as to their Cauſes and Generation, is the Buſineſs in hand.

Sea-Waters, Salt or Bitter (Bitterneſs being only an exalted degree of Saltneſs) come rather from the Pores through which they are ſtrained, than from the groſſer Particles remaining after the heat of the Sun has Boiled off the Flegmy parts: Rain-Waters extracted by Rarefaction, are again Condenſed, and become Sweet in their falling: River-Waters vary according to their Colour and Taſte from the Qualities of thoſe Conduits through which they take their Courſe, as do Spring-Waters, which have a double Origination; either from the Deep, or from Above; the one from the Ocean, the other from Snow or Rain; for by an obſcure Conveyance, the Water of the Sea iſſues through the Bowels of the Earth, leaving both Salt and Bitter Taſte behind, and forces it ſelf in nature of a Syphon up to the higheſt Clifts, as is demonſtrated by thoſe Hydraulick Engines commonly known among us, ſuppoſing at the ſame time the Sea to equal the Talleſt Peak the Land can brag of.

Letter V.

Sower Waters have for their Progenitors Vitriol and Alum, (not the Smoke of Sulphur) either of which are imbued with Acidity or Acerbity, whereas Sulphur enjoys neither; which is found true, however the Chymical Spirit of Sulphur drawn off, as alſo of Salt, become ſo ſharp. But to obviate that, If Sowerneſs muſt be beholden to the Sulphurious Vapours, how comes it to paſs that all Hot Baths have not that very Taſte? Which both ſufficient Authority and Experience prove to have their Entity from theſe Two Cauſes.

1. By the Admixture of Sulphurious Effluviums, while the Water creeps through theſe Mines, for to break out of the Fountains from which they are ſtrained.

2. From Fumes, Vapours, or Exhalations, within the Earth, where the Brimſtone is Pure or Impure, as from Pit-Coals, Amber, &c.

But theſe Waters of Genoe, as far as I could gather by Spagyrical Solutions, have to their Sulphur an Addition both of Antimony and Nitre, whence ariſe their ſweet Salt, and fore-recited Operations.

The Medical Benefits of their Baths or Hummums.

Beſides theſe Baths, which are rare, there are more commonly Balneo's to be hired at eaſy Rates; of which I ſhall ſay no more than of the Benefits received by them (not to note the Injunction of their Law); when Bodies are parched by intolerable Heat, and the Duſt galls and frets the Skin by Travel, then are they not only cleanſed, but highly refreſhed by bathing in ſweet Water; ſo that they are convenient both in Dry and Moiſt Airs; for in Dry, without theſe they could no more breathe, than thoſe Ariſtotle teſtifies of, could without Bags of Water on the Top of Olympus; and in Moiſt, they are as neceſſary to waſh Dirt and Sand out of the Pores of their Bodies.

As for the Medical Intent, many Diſtempers cauſed by Fulneſs of Humours, or ill-bred Chyme, are expelled by this Exorciſm; but the Grand Expectation relating to Venereal Diſeaſes, is baffled and defeated by a groundleſs Fallacy.

Noe Roſe.

On the Day of the Vernal Equinox, we returned to Gombroon, when the Moors introduce their New-Year Æde, or Noe Roſe, with Banquetting and great Solemnity.

The Air moiſt.

The Air, which at Spahaun is ſo Serene that it leaves no Impurity upon Metals, is of another Temper here, all things contracting Soil and Tarniſh, be they never ſo carefully preſerved from the daily Increaſe of a thick corrupting Air. Which proceeds from the Reign of the South-Wind uſual at this Seaſon, from whence the Brain and Nervous Offſpring ſuffer under an unnatural Moiſture; κεφαλῆ ἕλκεα ἔχει; Capiti aqua eſt perniciosa, Hern. Paraph. in Part. Hyp. Aph. 22. Lib. 5. Sicut Aph. 5. lib. 5. The South Wind dulls the Hearing, and Quickneſs of Sight, brings Liſtleſsneſs and an Unweildineſs over the whole Body: To which Inconveniences, not only of the Wind, Sand, Sand, and eating of Dates, we may add the conſtant feeding upon Fiſh alſo, as an Enemy to the Eyes; for by ſuch Food the Body is filled with putrid Humours, whence proceed Malignant Fevers, Gout, Falling-ſickneſs, and an Iliad of Diſtempers. The reaſon to be rendred for all this, may be, Becauſe the Strength of the Nerves conſiſt in a Mediocrity of Heat; for what comes neareſt to Heat, agrees better with their Conſtitution; but what brings Moiſture is moſt prejudicial, according to the Mind of the great Author of Phyſick, Aph. 16. lib. 5. Which notwithſtanding, as every Nature is diſpoſed, ſo it is affected with this or that Diſeaſe: For the Fountain of all Maladies, with their ſeveral kinds, ſpring either from the Irregularities of Air or of Diet, ſince we are nouriſhed by both, and can no longer live than while we breathe and ſuck in Air, than we can ſubſiſt without Food: Such therefore as the Air is, ſuch are the Spirits and Humours generated thereby; ſuch as the Humours, ſuch are the ſolid Parts of the Body, and in general the whole Microcoſm. Chap. VIII.

By Repletion therefore of the Brain, the Optick Nerves are debilitated and clouded by the Impurity of the Innate and Adventitious Air: The beginning of the Nerves being filled with Humidity, not only the forementioned Sickneſſes, but Ulcerous and Foul Sores, by the aptneſs of the Air at this Juncture combining with other concurring Accidents, make an open Way for their Procreation. Hence the Maritime Coaſts, from the filthy Exhalations and naſty Vapours diffuſing themſelves, impreſs a Dyſcraſy, or undue Mixture over the Maſs of Blood: To wit; As if the Sulphurous Saline Particles ſhould be exalted, a Rankneſs of Temperament follows; by which means the Spirits are depreſs'd, and the Blood alter'd into a ſickly corroding Habit, for want of liberal Evacuation through the Emunctuaries, and ſo are quite degenerated. As we ſee, for inſtance, now daily, the Clouds hovering about the bottom of the Mountains, ſo the Humours profligated no other way, ſettle in the extreme Parts, till they break out into ungovernable Ulcers, Scurvy, and the like.

To avoid therefore the Stench of the Port, as well as Communication with the Caun, we often exchange Gombroon for Aſſeen, which now is perfumed with Jaſmine of all ſorts, Roſes, Violets, and Primroſes, with other fragrant Flowers; here grow alſo the Black Horehound, Spurge, Catminth or Nepe, Liverwort, the leſſer Centaury, Hedg-Muſtard, Wintercreſs, Grunſel, Field-Poppy, Broom, Gooſefoot, Arach, Cichory and Dill: The Barley growing here is now fit for the Scythe, being their firſt Harveſt. In this Place as we rode to take the Air through Stony and Barren Places, we met a Channel of living Waters, brought from the Mountains (whence it breaks forth) by an Aquaduct, ſometimes over little Bridges, ſometimes piercing the very Mountains, at the Coſt of the Dutch Banyan (the firſt of this Tribe of Men that deſerves Praiſe for his Contempt of Money, laviſhed in many Places for the Publick Utility), to the Dutch Garden, where it diſembogues its ſelf into a great Stone Ciſtern, for the uſe of the Farms on that ſide of the Town.

All theſe Plains bear Indian Shrubs, ſuch Milky ones as we have deſcribed there; but near the Head of the Channel, in an Hollow made by the falling of the Water in the Rains, grows Willow-wort; Indian Plants grow here.

Letter V.

Lysimachia cum flore albo quinque foliis expanso è rubescente calice prognato floret; which discovers a Participation or Communication of this side of Persia with India: But that which farther confirms it, is, that as in our Way home we made Nabond our Road, a Fishing-Town a Pharsang to the Eastward of Gombroon, on the Brink of the Gulph, we found two Temples after the Custom of the Idolatrous Indians, where a Devote of theirs had drawn a great Concourse, at the Report of his Fasting Nine Days; which being ended, the rich Banyans made a Feast and Presented him with Gifts; for which he returned them an Ear of Grain spiked, in that time Sown before their Mammon, or God, with a Silver Head, which they bore away as a thing Sacred.

Here are many Tombs of their Religious Men, who are wholly devoted to their Superstitions; and because of the diversity of inhuming them, I shall give you the manner as I received it; A round Pit, in fashion of a Well, being made, they place a stone of Ormus Salt for him to stand on, and another weighty one is put on his Head; a Lamp being lighted, they lay Bread and a Jarr of Water by him; and give him a Staff in his Hand with some Deneiros for his Journy; then they cover the Hole with Molds, and build a Turbinated Tomb, without any Hollow more than for a burning Lamp.

Thus as this part bears the fruits of their Superstition, so the Earth brings forth the Weeds of their Idolatrous Worship; the Arbor de Rais by the Portugals; by the Banyans Κατεξοχὴν, for the Reverence paid by them to it, the Banyan-Tree: Besides this, this Soil yields good Mango's, Water Melons, and Sweet Onions, with that rank Poyson Dutry, nighest our Solanum Lethale.

At our return from our Country Delights to Gombroon, we found it clear of the Caun, he being absent, otherwise no Grist was like to come to the Shaw Bunder; for during his stay no Banyans could be invited hither; but no sooner was he gone, than they came to their Stalls, as Sheep do after the fear of the Wolf is over, to their wonted Pasture.

The Portugal Fleet and our new Agent arrive.

About the beginning of April Fifteen Tall Ships, with Gallies of the Portugals, appeared in this Gulf to terrify the Arabs; and about the middle of the same Month, the same Ship that carried off the President, brought us a New Agent; who being sickly, was willing to leave the Port with all expedition, to be at Spahaun before the Heats; which Journy commenced after an almost total Eclipse of the Moon, notified to us by the loud Musick and constant Hubbub continued all the while.

CHAP.

CHAP. IX.

We go up in the Spring with our New Agent to Iſpahaun: Two Iriſh Greyhounds ſent for a Preſent to the Emperor: We leave the Agent there, and return in the Fall.

The haſty Removal of the Agent, the Cauſe of the Sicklineſs of him and his Followers.

WE ſet out the Laſt of April, and reached Lhor the 8th of May, which City was vehemently warm; through which Intemperance, whatever we eat, turned into Choler; for the Air being Hot and Dry, in reſpect of that we left at Gombroon, rendred the Bile thicker and ſharper, whereby moſt of us fell ſick of Cholera Morbus; and Three of our Company were taken from their Horſes, not being able to ſit them, and carried on Indian Litters: Others in Kedgways, or Wooden-Houſes, one on each ſide of a Camel, tied like Panniers; by which Conveyance we carried two Iriſh Buckhounds for Preſents to the Emperor, a Dog and a Bitch, as large as ever I ſaw; but they being cramped by this Contrivance, we were perſuaded to let them looſe, after we had conquered the Soultry Sandy Ways; but then it was as irkſome to them to foot it over the Rocks and Stony Paths; for this, the Company had provided Shooes for them, which they found more troubleſome than is reported of the Jackanapes's caught by ſuch Apiſhneſs; ſo that at laſt they were left to their Liberty: Theſe are ſuch Carriages as their Women travel in, and thoſe Paſſengers that wander the Deſerts of Arabia.

——Queis tentant & arantes arenas
Littoris Aſſyrii viatores.——

Several new Caravans on this Road have been lately overturn'd by Earthquakes, and all along they cry for Rain, both to fill their Water-ſtores, and to bedew the Earth; which is moſt miſerably parched till we come to Bonaru; in whoſe Plain, Wheat and Barley are newly mow'd; but the Oyl-Seed for Lamps were ſtanding. In the Thickets along the Brooks ſides grew Bitter-Sweet, and among the Corn ſuch Weeds as choak ours in England.

A notable Robbery at Chawtalk.

Chawtalk is become famous, not only for its new and ſpacious Caravan, but for an Exploit lately committed on the Rhadars or Watch by half a dozen Highwaymen, who had certain Intelligence of a Prize of ſome Merchants having a great Charge of Money: Wherefore they ſet upon the Rhadars as they were on Duty in the Caravan Gate, and beheaded their Captain, and the Caravandar, or Warden of the Caravan Seraw, and aſſaulted the reſt unawares, ſlaying Eight more outright, but promiſed Mercy to the reſt if they did not reſiſt; Four more were wounded in making their Eſcape, and died of their Wounds, before they could gain Gerom.

Thus having ſecured their Prey, they carried it off in the ſight of Four hundred Men, faint-hearted and timerous Companions, only one Armenian diſcharging a Gun; not one elſe, either Merchants or Cowardly Letter V. Cowardly Drovers, daring to make any Defence, but reſigned themſelves tamely to their Wills, while they rifled and took away above a Thouſand Thomands, which amounts in our Coin to Four thouſand Pound in Silver, and are hitherto undiſcovered.

I cannot but reflect on this Faint-heartedneſs with ſome Aſtoniſhment: Only when I conſider the Merchant is Inſured by the Shawbunder, it abates ſomething of the Wonder; for he muſt reſtore the whole Sum to the right Owner, it being his buſineſs to find out the Thieves, and recover the Money.

Diary Fevers. Hence we came to Gerom, and by labouring in the Heat of the Day to get over the Mountains, we were perſecuted with Diary Fevers: In this Munſel we found Aven's Mother of Thime, Mullen, Roman Wormwood with a Scarlet Flower, divers ſorts of Thiſtles, eſpecially the Holy Thiſtle, a Remedy for the now raging Diſeaſes; as I am of Opinion, Nature has provided all Regions with Medicines peculiar for their Diſtreſſes.

Colocynthis. Coloquinta Apples grow like a ſmall round Gourd on the Ground.

Here in the Gardens were the firſt true Beans and Peaſe I ſaw ſince I left England.

The Tarantula. The old Caravan Ser Raw at Mocock Sugta is deſerted by the Caravan Dar, who has ſhifted to a new one built by the ſame Hand as that lately at Chawtalk, and abandoned the declining one to Serpents, Chameleons, and Tarantulaes (which are not ſo venomous as in the Straits), Centipedes, and Scorpions, it lying an open Receptacle for all Wild Beaſts.

Pains in the Joints, and Putrid Fevers The North Winds about the middle of May raiſed many a Whirlwind; and before we came to Caiſar, we found a ſenſible Alteration from ſcorching Heat to a ſearching Cold; by which Change, our Garments that before hung looſe about us, are gathered together to wrap us cloſe; for all which, few eſcaped without complaining of a ſudden Pain in the Joints; and many were incident to putrid Fevers, who had indulged too largely on Raw Fruits.

Occaſioned as well by the Water as Air. This ſudden Mutation of the Air, brought not only on Mankind, but Beaſts alſo, Catarrhs, and Defluctions of all ſorts; to wit, from Hot and Moiſt (whereby we were bedew'd all over with Sweat) into Hot and Dry in the Day, and at Night Cold and Dry, by reaſon of Impetuous Blaſts from the North Eaſt, by which the Pores being ſhut, the incloſed Humours are put into a Fluor; there being not a Man among us, nor hardly an Horſe, but ran freely at the Noſe: Here, as the Air varied, we left off drinking Rain-Water; which might have ſome Influence upon us, it being preferred before all others, as having the Sun and Ocean for its Parents: The River-Water here is muddy, and is often carried under Ground by Pits, wherefore it paſſes not, without leaving ſome Putrefaction behind; but the moſt indigeſted is Well-water, which is wholly deprived of the Sun.

Nor muſt we ſlip without Remark what happen'd in our Winter-March; as we there carried the Winter with us, ſo now we bring the Summer; for Harveſt is beginning every where, where we arrive: Though here the Barley be mowing, yet the Wheat ſtands, to endure a farther ripening, being kept back by the Chill Winds, which ſtill

ſtill attend us; whereby we found Fevers of all ſorts (except Peſtilential) at Siras; Rheums diſtilling from the Head, Falling down of the Uvula, Aches and Pains, Hoarſeneſs, and violent Coughs; as Hypocrates foretold from this Quarter, 5. Aph. lib. 3. Si autem Aquilo terram perflat; if the North-wind blows on the Earth (which it has done a long time) it brings Colds, Swelling of the Face, Sore Throats, difficulty of Breathing, Stitches, and Pleuriſy; the Body is bound, and Urine flows, with cold ſhaking, which are conſtantly to be expected while this Wind rules.

The deſtructive Cuſtom of drinking Ice.

The Water of this Place alſo contributes to the Endemial Diſtempers, for it is weightier than other, which by Experience is found to offend the lower Belly, or Hypochondria, breeding Obſtructions, and the Ills ariſing thence; nor can I excuſe that deſtructive Cuſtom of drinking Ice with their Liquors; which the Old Gentleman takes notice of to be of no good Conſequence; Aph. 24. lib. 4. Frigida, cujuſmodi ſunt Nix; Cold things, ſuch as Snow and Ice, are Enemies to the Stomach and Lungs; and ſo on: On which the Learned and Skilful Heurnius makes this Paraphraſe, "Thoſe People that uſe theſe, "are troubled with Swellings in their Throats (as on the Alps), "are afflicted with Catarrhs, and live not long. But the moſt pernicious of all is the cramming themſelves with much Fruit; which is a Temptation hardly to be denied, where ſuch Plenty and ſo Excellent are offered; however, they fill the Body with crude and rebellious Humours.

From all which therefore to come home to what concerns us, who had undergone ſome part of a Southern Winter (if it may be ſo called, at Gombroon), the Author of Salt Phlegm, the ſubſequent Spring entring with the North Winds, which are Dry, made us retain that Phlegm; by which means we are followed by pertinacious and continued Fevers, as well as thoſe that accompany Catarrhs, from the Intemperament of the Spirable Parts, whereby the Humour expreſſed from the Brain, diſtills upon the Lungs, by tranſlation of Evacuation from the Habit of the Body, where it was wont to perſpire; but now thoſe Channels being ſtopt, it drops from the Head, to the diſturbance of the whole Frame. This Comment relates only to us; for the Natives make light of ſuch things as we call Colds, though they are affected with them this Seaſon, but not to ſo high a degree as we; for they eat and drink rather the more for them, and ſlight them at this time of the Year, but towards the Winter-Quarter they are more cautious. I muſt confeſs it was always my Opinion, Colds were not hurtful, ſo long as they keep within the Bounds of a ſimple Cold, but rather a means to rack off the Impurities from the Blood, as the Fermentation of Wines is of the like Advantage to them; but when inſtead of clarifying it confounds the Humours, it is then to be taken care of, which daily Experience teaches it tranſgreſſes often; as almoſt all our Engliſh being now down, can witneſs.

The Agent leaves Siras.

The 29th of May, the Agent, weary of theſe uncertain Turns of Weather, proceeded to make Trial of more ſteddy at Iſpahaun; but moſt of the reſt being ſick, and the Father Viſitador of the Carmelites, a Spaniard, and a good Scholar, having been long grieved with with a continued Fever, and finding no Relief from the Country Phyſicians, perſuaded the Agent to leave me at Siras, which he complied with, perceiving an urgent neceſſity on the part of the Engliſh.

Letter V.

I fall ſick.

In which Stay I fell ſick my ſelf, after the Father was recovered; and before I was got up (for this Sickneſs had well nigh coſt me my Life, being one of theſe peeviſh Fevers), a great Saint, becauſe Rich and one of Mahomet's Kindred, prevailed with the Father, who he heard was reſtored to his Health by my means, and their Convent being ſeated here by his Permiſſion (he being Treaſurer of the Province, and as wealthy, though by unjuſt means, as any in the Empire, next the Sophi), to ſpeak to me to give him a Viſit, being laid up by Debaucheries both of Wine and Women.

The Reſpect I had to the Padre, made me yield to be carried to his Court in one of his Palenkeens or Chairs, at a time I was more fit to be kept at Home and in Bed; for that all the Armenian Chriſtians, as well as Foreign, ſeemed to be concerned, not out of Love, but fear of this powerful Man to miſchief them: Whereupon my Attendance is engaged, and a Million of Promiſes, could I reſtore him to his Health, laid down from his Wives, Children, and Relations, who all (with the Citizens, as I could hear going along, pray to God that the Hackin Fringi, the Frank Doctor, might kill him) play'd the Hypocrites, wiſhing his Death; the firſt to compleat their Expectation of what he might leave them, the other for his being a Plague to them; as it proved after his Recovery, for they performed as much as he, diſmiſſing me with a Compliment, and no other Reward.

On my Recovery I ſet forward for Spahaun.

After my Strength came again, though this Blade had provided for my Diverſion at his Summer-houſes, (which are built (as the enſlaving Friars do on Penances their moſt ſtately Buildings) by his uſurped Authority, of the Obligation they had to ſerve him, as Mahomet's Kindred, and the meritorious Tye he had on their Conſciences that way, by which means the Emperor has not more ſtately Palaces;) yet I refuſed his Offer.

Tarrying here from the 23^{d} of May till the 6th of July, I am capable of giving ſome Account how the Air proves ſo fatal to Strangers: It ſeems to enjoy a Mean between Lhor and Iſpahaun; not ſo hot as the former, nor ſo ſubtile as the latter; for which reaſon it would be generally more healthy, were it not for theſe North-Winds, which ſet in every Afternoon, and continue till the Sun is a good height next Morning: Inſomuch that in the ſpace of Twenty four Hours, there is a Turn from the higheſt degree of Heat into the extremeſt degree of Cold, which infers the former Diſeaſes (ad Aph. 1. lib. 3. Αἱ μεταβολαὶ τῶν ὡρέων, &c.) theſe laſt Three Months together moſtly. After theſe are ſpent, the Heats bring Health, for no other reaſon but becauſe they are conſtant; which laſts from June till September, when theſe Winds begin their Reign afreſh; and according to the Obſervation of the 4th Aph. in the ſame Book, In ſingulis anni partibus cum eodem die modo caloris modo frigoris dominatu Cœlum tenetur Autumnales morbos expectare oportet, hoc eſt, ἃ ὤμυλα κατάκτα: Diſeaſes are unequal for Matter, Symptoms, Invaſions, Judgments, and Determinations; which I experienced to be true all this time, both both in reſpect of Judgment and Ill Habit; for if it happen'd to be a Tertian, Quotidian, or Quartan, they were all uncertain; the uncertainty of the Seaſon broke that Viciſſitude of Motion and Reſt belonging to the Humours, which interruption occaſioned the difficulty of their Cure.

Polygore and Aubgurrum.

And now taking the direct Road for Spahaun, I had joined with me an Armenian Frenchman (a Wealthy Trader), a Dominican and a Carmelite Friar. Early in the Morning of the following Day we had forſaken Siras, we made Polygore, Six Pharſangs; it is a famous Caravan without Entertainment, by reaſon of bad Water; wherefore at Night we reached Aubgurrum, an old Caravan Ser Raw, better provided with Water, though the Name of the Place would intimate nothing leſs, being called the Hot Water; this is Three Pharſangs beyond Polygore.

Hence we entred a Fenny kind of Ground, occaſioned by the Overflow of Bindamire; over which, Stone Cauſeways and Bridges were laid, where convenient, for half a Pharſang: In this Way, though we met not with Towns ſo frequently, yet we found the Plain overſpread with Husbandmen and Shepherds, dwelling in Tents made of Hair-Cloth, at the End of the Plain of Perſepolis, which we could diſcover plainly with our naked Eyes, but came not near it, cutting a ſhorter Way to Maijm, over a Bridge almoſt conſumed with Age, and Force of the Waters; at which Town, after ſufficient Thunder and Lightning, it ſhower'd apace. The Harveſt is backwarder in theſe Fruitful Valleys than whence we came from; but theſe kindly Rains plump and clear it for an hopeful Crop.

Imaum Zadah.

Two Days after, we took Imaum Zadah in our Courſe, where Maſtick is made; the Mountains hereabouts are productive of Wines. Imaum Zadah was another of their adored Prophets or Succeſſors to Mortis Ally, who lies buried here in a Neat Stone Sepulchre; all the Town therefore belongs to the Mullahs or Prieſts attending here, and is ſurrounded with a Wall, having only Admiſſion at one Gate.

In the Medows between Ogoan and Aſpaſs, we met with two Troops of ſtroling Shepherds, moving with their Families, Flocks, Herds, and Subſtance, with their Hairy Houſes on their Camels Backs. As alſo huge Droves of Horſes for the Emperor's Breed: But the moſt ſurprizing was to ſee Corn mowing and newly ſprung up at one and the ſame time.

The Reproof of a Goloomy Shaw.

Arriving at Cuſcuſar as ſoon as it was Day, and having laid my ſelf to Repoſe, a Courier, or Goloomy Shaw, from the Emperor, waiting the coming in of our Caphala, to preſs the beſt Horſe he could lay his Hands on, ſeeing my Sumpture-horſe come in, ſeized it for the King's Uſe; which alarmed the whole Caravan Ser Raw, deſiring my Servant to wake me, and inform me I was in danger to loſe my Horſe, and withal beſeeched my Protection for theirs, ſome of them being high priz'd: The thing was new to me, nor did I underſtand till then my Authority; for none of them durſt oppoſe a Chuper or Horſe-Poſt ſent from the King on an Errand (which Privilege is granted only to Europe Nations), they being wholly at the Devotion of their Sovereign, (Foreign Miniſters with their Retinues being exempted); but ſeeing me refractory to his Proceedings, he came

Letter V.

came to me full mouth'd in the King's Name; I returned Anſwer, in that Name I refuſed to obey him: He perſiſting in his Demands after it was made known who I was, the Servants and People there were ready to beat him, had I encouraged them; I bad them only hinder him from taking any manner of Beaſt belonging to them, and do no manner of Violence to him. He finding no good to be done with me, began to terrify the Caphala Baſhee and his Crew; but I undertaking their Quarrel, he departed, not without ſome bouncing Curſes in the Turkiſh Language, finding himſelf defeated of his expectation, and was content to make the Villages find him one; which indeed he ſhould have done at firſt, had he not hoped to have been brought off by their molliſying him with Gilt; but miſſing that End, he went away with Shame and Fury, while I ſtaid gratulated with the Thanks of all the Travellers, and on the 19th of July was handſomly conducted by them into Spahaun.

Want of Rain.

For the defect of Rain-water this Year, this Woody City ſuffers, the Trees decay, the River is dried up, Corn is ſcarce, and a general Drought invades all things, ſo that a Famine is mightily dreaded: For to ſupply theſe Wants, Well-water is made uſe of; which not being ſo familiar, by its deadly Coldneſs defrauds both Men, Brutes, and Plants, of their Natural Nouriſhment; whereupon Diſeaſes enſue.

Nor is the winding Quarter of the Year leſs contributing, the Raging Dog having not only ſhewed his Teeth, but bit hard, the latter part of Auguſt paſſing into Autumn with unſteady Heats and Colds; introducing ſore Eyes, Lasks, ſpitting of Blood, dejected Appetite, ill Concoction, Fiſtulaes in Ano, Leproſy, St. Anthony's Fire, creeping Ulcers, Tetters, Morphew. Laſt Years Honour is not paid to this, for the Trees every where ſhed their imperfect Leaves, not bringing their Fruit in due ſeaſon; ſo that the Autumnal Tribute falls ſhort, the Summer going out without bringing things to Maturity, by reaſon of the too haſty approach of the bluſtring Fall; though the Skies clear up to a Misfortune, whereby ξηροφθαμία, from the Summers Heat, and dry Autumns, Dyſuries and Stranguries among Children, Hyp. Aph. 4. Sect. 3. as alſo Empyemaes.

Heſte Beheſt, Paradiſe upon Earth.

This notwithſtanding, we are tempted at the Fame of one of the Emperor's Gardens, called Heſte Beheſt, i. e. Paradiſe upon Earth, in Imitation of Coſroes, their former King, to make a pleaſant Pilgrimage: It is a ſweet Place doubtleſs, were it cloathed with its Glory; but as it is, it is a Rich Piece; the Summer-houſe in the middle is ſaluted by two Channels, in which are Ships and Boats to repreſent a Naval Scene of War; Swans and Pelicans find here their diverſion; the Summer-houſe is built entirely of poliſhed Marble, the Arch of the Cupilo is Inlaid with Maſſy Gold; upon the Walls are depainted the famous Actions of their Heroes; the Tank in the middle is all of Silver, the Poſts are ſtuck with Looking-glaſſes, reflecting the Poſtures of the Body, and the Figures of the whole Fabrick; an Hemiſpherical Turret preſſes on Four Pillars, which are the main Supporters.

Murmurers againſt the Government.

For all this Exceſs the Poor do murmur, who have not any Care taken for their Subſiſtence; and not only the Inferior Rank, but the the Patricii, begin to exclaim againſt the Negligence of the Government, while thoſe who ſhould provide for them in this Exigency, (from Provinces bleſſed with more Increaſe) inſtead thereof ſquander or ſell abroad what ſhould be applied to their Maintenance at home. In theſe Straits they find Pretences to caſt an Odium on the Divan or Council; and to that purpoſe have recriminated the Chief Favourite at Court, laying to his Charge not only the Miſcarriage of his Maſter, but the effeminating and debauching him with Wine and Women, and enervating him by Witchcraft, (he being neither able to Stand or Ride); and for Proof of this latter, they had taken from his Surcoat a Paper wrote in the Hebrew Tongue, full of Magick: Which whether true or falſe, half a dozen Jewiſh Levites, accuſed as Acceſſories, were ripped open; but not confeſſing in their bittereſt Torments, any thing againſt the Steward of the King's Houſhold, he was again received into Grace, and intruſted with the Management of Affairs; they having no Redreſs by this Complaint, but rather a Continuation of their Miſeries, a ſad Cry for Want of Bread continuing. Chap. IX.

Although the Emperor eſpouſed this Great Man's Cauſe, at once to aſſert his own Authority, and skreen him from the Fury of his Perſecutors; yet another Menial Servant in Diſgrace never recovered, till he had given full Satisfaction to his Revenge; viz. his Chief Phyſician: He being diſmiſs'd the Court, lived in Repute ſome time in the City, till the Emperor diſcarded his Chamberlain; when being informed that this imprudent Phyſician was entertaining at a Feaſt the Eunuch he had turned out of his Service, ſent a Meſſenger to call his Phyſician; who ſuppoſing it was to be readmitted, ſpruc'd himſelf, that he might be the better accepted before the King, and went on chearfully, till coming under the Palace-Gate he ſaw a Rope prepared to tye him up; which was the Reward he received for his Unadviſedneſs. The Steward reſtored to Favour, the Phyſician hang'd.

Amidſt theſe Diſtractions and Heats, it was no time for our Agent to move for an Audience; and the Time of Shipping drawing on, it was convenient ſome ſhould appear at Port; whereupon I am again commanded to Gombroon, the Agent ſtaying for the Benefit of the Air, as well as to watch a Time to appear before the Sophi; which was a thing of great Difficulty and Expence to the Company, by reaſon of the ſeveral Officers of different Intereſts, employed as Inſtruments to procure it, beſides the little Leiſure the Emperor affords himſelf for Buſineſs; it ſeldom coſting leſs than a Thouſand Thomands in Fees and Preſents. The Iriſh Buckhounds brought up for that end, were admired and talked of by all, and repreſented to be as big as Camels; and though they were young, proved ſwift Creatures, I ſeeing the Bitch in our Journey turn an Antelope, which none of their Hounds ever came near; and had the Dog been yare, no doubt but they had ſeized it.

The Rarity of them is a thing of Moment for the Emperor's Delight; nor may we be leſs aſſured of the Terror they ſtrike on their Fancy, when I ſhall relate what paſſed at Muſſaferry in the Caravan Ser Raw there, as they were bringing up to Spahan: The Dog, which was the biggeſt, and at other times leſs voracious, and better con- Iriſh Greyhounds a Preſent for the Emperor.

ditioned than the Bitch, being let looſe, rambled about the Caravan for what he could get to ſatisfy his Hunger; whilſt an Hodge (one of their Pilgrims to Mahomet's Tomb) who was at his Devotion on the moſt conſpicuous place of the Ser Raw (they loving to be ſeen of Men), had placed a Bowl of Buttermilk tempered for his Tooth, ready by him, to fall to after his Prayers; he bowing his Face to the Ground, as their Cuſtom is to worſhip, and there lying proſtrate: The Dog ſcenting the Bowl, mounted the Quadrangle, and clapping one Leg on the Neck of the Hodge, kept him in that Poſture, while he had made cleaner Work than the Pilgrim, who for fear durſt neither ſtir nor cry out, leſt he ſhould provoke ſo terrible a Monſter to devour him; but ſilently paſſed by both the Affront (for if a Dog touch them they are Nigeſs, i. e. defiled) and the Loſs; while in the mean time it was occaſion of much Laughter to the whole Caravan Ser Raw, to behold the Man of lofty Thoughts of his own Purity, thus handled by the Beaſt, and none offering to ſtep in to his Reſcue, till we had called him off; for which the Hodge thought himſelf obliged to return us Thanks, for delivering him from ſo great danger.

A Robber.

At Moxutebeggy, as we were returning to Gombroon, we met with one of the Robbers (or one apprehended as one of them) that ſo boldly ſet upon the Caravan at Chawtalk, being under a Guard of Soldiers, pinion'd, and loaded with Chains: He is a long-hair'd Black, of the Province of Ketchemacroon, formerly Hyrcania, lately reduced by the Valour of the now-impriſon'd Caun of Siras: They are carrying him to Iſpahaun, to receive his Sentence and Judgment from the Emperor; it being an Enterprize of that Fame, and ſo much in every one's Mouth, that the Puniſhment is to be as Exemplary, as the Fact Notorious. Some people more than whiſper, as if the neceſſitous Caun of Bunder were not only an Abettor, but an Accomplice in this Villany: But a Man had as good be out of the World, as lye under the Scandal of an Ill Name.

In this Paſſage the Evenings and Mornings were ſo intenſely Cold, as to fix Icicles to our Metarrhaes, as they hung under our Horſes Belly; although from Nine in the Forenoon until Three in the Afternoon, it was extremely Hot.

When we left Spahaun, Cotton had juſt broke the Cod, and an imperfect ſort of Barley, ſown only to ſoil their Cattel, was crept out of the Hoſe, being as Green as Graſs; but as we drew nearer Siras, all was mowed, and the Vintage being over, they were left common to the Cattel, who fatten on theſe Shrubs; ſo that what once tickled the Spleen of a Philoſopher, might here hourly give him the Diverſion, Thiſtles being their choiceſt Fodder.

Colum, the Forerunners of the Colds.

The Forerunners of the approaching Cold are the Colums, who fly in Flocks daily over our heads; theſe, impatient of the Extremity of Heat or Cold, take now their Flight towards the Warm Countries, and when the Ram ends his Reign, return to their Northern Quarters. Bartholin Junior relates ſomething of the Swan, agreeable to what I obſerved in India of this Bird, concerning the Aſpera Arteria, from whence is conceived the reaſon of its obſtreperous and loud Note: His Words are theſe, Diverſum tamen eſſe ſitum in

Cygno

Cygno & plane ſingularem; longior enim cum ſit, in ſterni capſulam incurvo flexu ſe inſinuat, moxque ex fundo capſulæ ſurſum regreditur & claviculis aſcenſis ad thoracem ſe flectit, &c. De fiſtula pulmonari verba faciens. It's of a different Make from other Fowls, and is wound up, as has been ſaid, in the Breaſt-bone as in a Caſe, ſometimes ſingle, ſometimes double, like a writhen Trumpet; they have long Necks, and long Feet, of an Aſh-Colour, and great Bodies as large as a Wild Turky; their Fleſh but courſe.

The latter end of October we departed from Siras, not before my Cuſtomer the Siad had ſent for me, to deſire thoſe Medicines wherewith he had been ſo unexpectedly recovered: I delay'd going to him till I was certain the Caphala was out of the City, when waiting on him I reaped the ſame fair Promiſes and Expreſſions I had done before; wherefore I told him my Phyſick was packed up, and my Servant gone with the Caphala; he told me he would ſend a Couple of his truſtieſt Domeſticks, which were a Prieſt and another, to the end of the Munſel, which I told him he might do: At my Return to the Factory, there being preſent a Number of Chriſtians and others to attend our Motion out of the City, moſt thought I had received a Rich Reward, therefore they demanded how I had ſped? I anſwered, As I had before; at which one that knew the Temper of the Man, replied in Linguo Frank, Foi multo ben ill non tenho terardo voso Chapeo; It was very well you came home with your Hat, and that he took not that off your Head: However, at the end of the Munſel I was not at Leiſure to ſpeak with his Meſſengers, who underſtanding the reaſon, had Ingenuity enough to bluſh at their Maſter's unhandſome dealing with me.

This Varlet, of the Race of Mahomet, two or three days before our Arrival at Siras, at the Funeral of one of his Wives, ſent Fifteen hundred of his own She-Slaves to attend her to the Grave, out of his own Family; ſo ſuperfluouſly abounding is he in all manner of Luxury.

We came into Siras with frowning Weather:

Horrida tempeſtas Cælum contraxit & imbres.

But parted thence with a ſuitable Remainder of Autumn; for the Grapes were in the Preſs, and the new Wines in the Ferment, yet the Pomgranats were on the Trees, nor was the Fall of the Leaf ſet in: In the Fields were Millet, hurtful to Pullen, but Food for the Poor for Bread; in the Garden, Wall-Flower, and Violets, Garden Mallows, and Crocus: For all that, at Night the Cold was ſevere; the reaſon whereof (beſides the length of the Nights) is, the Mountains about Siras are rather Stony than Sulphurious; for which cauſe we find the Winds blow as ſenſibly as at Spahaun; whence may be collected, that the Seaſons depend not ſo immeditely on the Sun and its Motion, as from the Specifick Determination of the Winds, the Aſpects of the Stars diverſified, the Innate Quality of the Country, and peculiar Site in reſpect of the Heavenly Bodies. As for the difference of Stars, none here could be obſerved, diſtinct from thoſe in the Temperate Zone, by reaſon of the indeterminate Horizon, every where occaſioned by the interfering Mountains. The Crows of ſeveral Colours.

The Crows here are like our Royſton Crows, Grey on their Backs and Wings; at Jerom their Beaks and Feet are as Red as Vermilion; where alſo at our appearance Barley is ripe, and new Barley ſow'd; and as we travelled, we now and then let fly an Hawk at Hoberaes, a Bird larger and of the ſame Colour with our Kites; at firſt being brought to the Ground by the Hawk, it parries, and makes ſome falſe Shew of Defence, briſking up its Plumes about the Neck, as a Cock does when going to engage; but the Controverſy is ſoon decided, after the Hawk ſeizes it with his direful Talons, and inſtead of denouncing farther War, it reſigns its ſelf an humble Victim to the Conqueror: The inward Coats of the Gizzard are ſtuffed with Wormſeed, of which it ſmells ſtrong, which dried and beaten to Powder, and given with Sugar, is a Panacæa for an Aſthma, or difficulty of breathing, and the whole Body is delicate Meat.

On the right hand of the King's Highway, between Siras and Gerom, at Derab, on the ſide of a Mountain, iſſues the Piſſaſphaltum of Diaſcorides, or Natural Mummy, into a large Stone Tank or Storehouſe, ſealed with the King's Seal, and that of the Calentures, and all the Noblemen of that City, and kept with a conſtant Watch, till at a ſtated Time of the Year they all repair thither, to open it for the King's Uſe, to prevent its being ſtole: Which notwithſtanding, though it be Death if diſcovered, yet many Shepherds following their Flocks on theſe Mountains, by chance light on great Portions of the ſame Balſam, and offer it to Paſſengers to Sale, and ſometimes play the Cheat in adulterating it.

The Firſt of November entring upon the Plains of Dedumbah, we found it all froſted with Salt; for the Waters from the Mountains mixing with the Superficies of the Earth, together with the Sun and drying Winds, incruſtate; nor have I met with ſharper Colds than here, for that the invironing Hills as well as Dales are full of Salt, and the Sun riſing with horrid Winds preſſes the Ambient Air from the high Tops by its Circular Motion; ſo that it hurricanes us with ſuch diſmal chilling Guſts, that had we not been active here in courſing Hares and Wild Goats, we might ſooner have frozen than kept our Innate Heat entire; the Sun being conſtantly attended all the Day with bluſtering Weather, leaving a quiet Calm at ſetting.

Monuments of Robbers.

From this Plain to Lhor, both in the Highways, and on the high Mountains, were frequent Monuments of Thieves immured in Terror of others who might commit the like Offence; they having literally a Stone-Doublet, whereas we ſay metaphorically, when any is in Priſon, He has a Stone Doublet on; for theſe are plaſtered up, all but their Heads, in a round Stone Tomb, which are left out, not out of Kindneſs, but to expoſe them to the Injury of the Weather, and Aſſaults of the Birds of Prey, who wreak their Rapin with as little Remorſe, as they did devour their Fellow-Subjects.

The Air as well as the Food, the Cauſe of Birds keeping one place.

Beyond Lhor, Water-Fowl that make not their Abode on the Sea, are ſeldom ſeen, for want of Freſh-Water; nor do Hoberaes fly on the other ſide ſo far as Siras; whether for the ſake of its beloved Food, or by reaſon the Subtilty of the Air may fail them in their due Poiſe, making them delight more in one place than another, I know not; as it is evident in the Nature of Fiſhes to prefer one Water before another, as being better fitted for their freer Reſpiration.

The Old and New Moon viſible in twelve hours time.

We ſet out of Spahaun the firſt day of their great Faſt, which was the 8th of October, all which time it was grievous to the Moors to Travel, becauſe they might not eat, nor ſwallow their Spittle in the Day-time, it being denied the Muliteers, and thoſe accuſtomed to Labour; but the Hodges, and thoſe who lead a delicate Life, are permitted to eat; for which they plead their being unaccuſtomed to Labour; which exempts them from an Impoſition they lay on the more hardy, not touching ſuch heavy Burthens with the leaſt of their Fingers: Wherefore the poor Mule-men made hard ſhift to get to Lhor the Morning before the Evening the New Moon appeared on, viz. the 4th of November, when I ſaw the Old Moon go out on the Hills at Lhor, and the Night following, the Horns reverſed, the whole Body or Circumference having only as it were a dark Veil or Curtain of Air drawn over it, that part alone which was Creſcent, being illuminated.

But it was ſome Damp to their deſigned Mirth, when by too much haſte to come to this Capital City, they perceived they had loſt a Mule with its Lading, by driving in the Dark all Night; whereupon I was employ'd to inform the Caun, who immediately diſpatched the Rhadary in queſt, and before Night reſtored the Lading, which was Shagreen Leather, ſuch as they make their beſt Boots of, but the Mule was found dead under its Burthen, ſtrayed a little way out of the Road; ſuch Care is there taken to ſatisfy Merchants.

This Night paſſed with great Rejoicing among the Muſſelmen, and retarded us three Days, before we could make our Muliteers ſettle to their Gears again.

Here the doubtful Autumn inclines towards Winter, reſigning the Dates, Citrons, Oranges, and Lemons, to the expecting Planter: Here grows the Emblem of Peace, the Olive-Tree; and though the Leafs are fallen, yet here is an uninterrupted Spring, all things keeping a perpetual Green, though they obſerve the appointed Times of bringing forth their Increaſe.

In Hot Countries to the North the Year centers in our Winter.

And now we begin to enjoy Temperate and Shorter Nights, in exchange of Cold and Longer; and although the Goat is not yet aſcended with his Conſtellation, yet I pronounce it Winter, ſince all Terreſtrial Things move with a Pace as if they were juſt almoſt at the Centre of the Year; but after the Sun, carried by the rapid Courſe of the Heavenly Impulſe, in order with the other Glorious Stars, has reached its utmoſt Southern Bounds, then a new Face of things returns, and the alternate Accretion and Diminution render an Everlaſting Conſtancy; which with the admirable Frame and manifold Courſes of the Celeſtial Spheres, witneſs and declare, That the Praiſe of ſo great and wonderful Works, are not to be attributed to Chance and Fortune, but to an All-wiſe Creator, who conſtituted the Univerſe from the Beginning, and will govern and preſerve the ſame to all Eternity; who alſo brought us ſafe to Gombroon the 13th of November: To whom be Honour now and for ever.

CHAP. X.

A Voyage to Congo for Pearl; a Diſcourſe of their Generation; Departure from Perſia, and Return to India.

TWO days after our Arrival at Gombroon, I went to Congo, leaving only the George, a Ship our Agent had built, in this Port; I was rowed in one of their Boats till the Wind grew ſtrong enough to Sail: Theſe Boats have been in uſe time out of mind; the Keel is made of one piece of Timber, and the Planks are ſewed together, with an high Prow and a low Poop. The next Morning we had brought Loft on the left hand of the Iſland Kiſmaſh, leaving a Woody Iſland uninhabited between Kiſmaſh and the Main: At Noon we came to Baſſatu, an old ruined Town of the Portugals, fronting Congo, where we touched till the Turning of the Tide and the Sea-Breeze were forcible enough to deliver us to that Port, where were Five Merchant Ships, and Two Trading to Mocha for Religion.

Come to Congo.

Congo is ſomething better built than Gombroon, and has ſome ſmall Advantage of the Air, and is about Twenty Leagues nearer the Mouth of the River Euphrates.

A Dearth in the Water as well as on Land.

As upon Land we have obſerved the Fruit and all things flag for want of Rain, ſo we found the ſame Cry to reſpect the Sea for want of frequent Showers, the Oyſters neither bringing forth, nor are any Pearls produced; ſuch Influence does common Fame allow the Heavenly Moiſture to have in their Generation; inſomuch that little Choice is to be had, and whatever is of any Value, is very dear. Here is great Plenty of what they call Ketchery, a Mixture of all together, or Refuſe of Rough, Yellow, and Unequal, which they ſell by Buſhels to the Ruſſians, who carry them over Land to Archangelo, and diſperſe them through the Northern Coaſts, for Ornaments to their Furr Caps; which being no Purchaſe, I returned.

Come again to Bunder Abaſſee.

Sailing abreaſt of Kiſmaſh, I put in at Loft, the chief Place of the Iſland, and loaded with Oyſters, which were the neareſt our Engliſh I had yet taſted; here are Creyfiſh, Crabs, Shrimps, Place, Soles, and Smelts, beſides Mountains of Salt-fiſh for Sale: From hence Gombroon is furniſhed with Wood; where arriving, we ſaw the Phœnix, another Engliſh Ship; on which before I embark, I ſhall premiſe ſomewhat material, according to my Promiſe, of Pearls in general.

The Pearl.

The Pearl is a Jewel ſuppoſed to be the Geniture of a Shell-fiſh called Margaritifer, congealed into a very fair, tranſparent, Diaphanous, beautiful Stone, which is the Partus or Birth of this Fiſh. As concerning their Original and Conception, there is ſome difference among Authors, as betwixt Pliny and Anſelmus Boetius, and between them and Cardanus: Pliny ſaith that they are conceived in Oyſters, by a certain Maritime Dew, which theſe Fiſh (and ſo likewiſe Scollops) do at a Set Time of the Year moſt thirſt after; and according as the Heavens are more Cloudy or Clear in the time of the taking in of this Dew, ſo they are generated more Fair, or Obſcure; as may be ſeen in his Book, where he ſpeaks of thoſe Pearls called Unions, and of the Shell-fiſh in which they are found, lib. 9. c. 28. But this Opinion of Pliny concerning their Conception, is not, by Anſelmus Boetius, thought conſentaneous to Truth: For, ſaith he, I have taken out of theſe Shell-fiſh many Margarites, and they are generated in the Body of the Creature, of the ſame Humour of which the Shell is formed; which Viſcous Humour is expelled ſometimes (not always) for the Fabrick of another Shell; for whenever this little Creature is ill, and hath not ſtrength enough to belch up or expel this Humour which ſticketh in the Body, it becometh the Rudiments or beginning of the Pearls; to which, new Humour being added and aſſimulated into the ſame Nature, by concreting and congealing begets a new Skin or Film for the former Rudiments; the continual Addition of which Humour generates an Union, or Pearl; even as Stones are generated in the Gall or Bladder of a Man; and after the ſame manner the Bezoar is generated in the Perſian Goat. Cardanus, lib. 7. de Lapidibus, ſaith, It is a Fabulous thing that the Pearl ſhould be generated by the Dew of Heaven, ſeeing the Shell-fiſhes in which they are conceived have their Reſidence in the very bottom of the Deep. That which is reported of them, That they are ſoft in the Water, and grow hard, like Coral, as ſoon as they are taken out, is not true, ſaith Boetius, p. 84. For the firſt, not only common Fame, but common Experience avouches; for the latter, I know not why it may not be as probable, as for an Egg newly laid, to have the Shell harden'd as ſoon as dropped into the Air, when before in the Ovarium it participated of a Slippery, Tough, Glewy Subſtance; not otherwiſe to be ſuppoſed to come forth, than by endangering the Fœtus. Chap. X.

in

Unions are ſo much the more eſteemed, becauſe they cannot eaſily be adulterated. There are fictitious Jewels made of double Glaſs, which being ſet in Gold, Jewellers cannot diſcern from Pearl, except they take them out: Some will adulterate them with the Powder of the Shell of the Margarite, and others with Chalk covered with Leafs of Silver, and then anointed with the White of an Egg. Some adulterate them with the Powder of Pearl mix'd with the White of an Egg, and dried, and then poliſhed; but theſe will eaſily be diſcovered from the True, by their Weight and Colour. Its Adulteration.

The Union is in Hebrew called גביש, as Job 28. 20. And ſo the Word Gabiſh is interpreted by Rabbi Sevi Gerſon: It is alſo taken for Margarita, פנינים; but in the Proverbs it is interpreted by Junius, Carbunculi, Prov. 11. If they be great, they are called Unions, becauſe then they are found ſingle in a Shell. If they be ſmall, they are called Margaritæ, many of which may be found in one Shell together. In Greek they are called μάργαρος, μαργαρίτης, & νίναδος. In Latin the great Pearls are called Uniones, & Margaritæ ſimplicitèr. Lucian calleth the Pearl, Lapis Erithreus; Arrianus, Lapis Indicus; Statius, Erithreus Lapillus; Virgil, Bacca, & Bacca Conchea; Pliny, Unio; Cicero, Margarita; St. Jerom, Granum maris rubri; and others call it Perla: The Germans call it Perlin: In Italian, Perle: In Arabick, Indoſtan, Phurſiſtan, Sulu: The Indians call them Moti; in Malabar, Its Names.

Letter V.

labar, Mutu: The Luſitanians call it Aljofar, which in Arabic ſounds as much as Julfar, the Port in Sinu Perſico where the moſt excellent Pearls are caught.

The kinds of Pearl.

The kinds of Pearl are no otherwiſe diſtinguiſhed, but either firſt from their Greatneſs or Littleneſs, that is, either as they are Unions, or Margarites, or Seed-Pearl; and ſecondly, as they are of tranſcendent Purity, Beauty, and Glory; or Cloudy, Reddiſh, and ſo leſs beautiful.

The Places where caught.

The beſt are found in the Perſian Gulph, (ſhared between the Perſian and Arab, they farming the Fiſhery yearly to thoſe that bid moſt), between the Iſland Ormus and Byran; and were heretofore brought into the Iſland Ormus, while the Portugals were Lords there; whence the Diſtich;

If all the World were but one Ring,
Ormus ſhould the Union bring.

They are alſo found between Cape Comory and Ceilon, as I formerly declared; but theſe are not to be compared with the Perſian, which are the true Oriental ones: There are of them in the Iſland Sumatra, by thoſe that place the Golden Cherſoneſe in Java, diſputed to be the Ancient Taproban. Betwixt the greater Java and India there are very many; between Panana and Cochin are good ſtore, but very ſmall, as alſo all along the Coaſt of Malabar. In Borneo and Anian, there are great ones. The Occidental are of a Milkiſh Colour, and of a Silver-like Splendor, and therefore not ſo commendable as the Oriental.

It is conſented to by ſome, That by how much the deeper the Shell-fiſh reſides, by ſo much they are Parents of the leſſer Margarites.

Cheripo, or Seed-Pearl.

The Indians call the brighter, candid, or ſplendid Shell-fiſh, Cheripo, which is a kind of Oyſter, of which they make Spoons, or little Cups: Theſe Fiſhes do generate excellent Margarites, or Seed-Pearl.

Chanquo, or Mother of Pearl.

There are others they call Chanquo; the Shells of which are the Mother of Pearl: Theſe bring not forth ſo fair Pearl as the other, becauſe their Shells are very ſmooth and bright within; they are uſed to adorn Tables, Eſcritores, and other things with; they are brought to Bengala for Bracelets and other Embelliſhments; the Cuſtom there was to have the Virgins Arms to be ſet off with Monelaes of this kind, leſt they ſhould be corrupted.

Scallops.

They are alſo found in many places of Europe, as in Scotland and Ireland, there having been very excellent ones found in Scallops and common Oyſters, as I my ſelf have found at Sheerneſs in Enggland. They are no Strangers in Sileſia, Friſia, and Bohemia.

About the Promontory of Comory they are found of the Weight of an Hundred Grains of Wheat, and near the Iſland of Borneo, of the Weight of an Hundred and ſixty Corns of Wheat, though not ſo fair as the other.

It is delivered from Authentick Authors, That Cleopatra, Queen of Egypt, drank one diſſolved at a Supper, of which Draught ſhe boaſted ſhe had a more coſtly Supper than ever Antonius had; the Value of which Draught then muſt amount to, according to Budæus, an Hundred and fifty thouſand Aureos, for thus much did one Supper of Antonius coſt him, as related by Pliny, lib. 9. cap. 35. & Macrob. 3. Saturnal. c. 27. The ſame Budæus doth alſo mention an Union of the Bigneſs of a Filbert, which was bought in France for Three thouſand Aureos, and another for Four thouſand. Chap. X.

Solinus, and Scrap Hager Alkali, ſay that theſe Stones are cold and dry in the Second Degree, and that they are good againſt Syncopes and Cardiacal Paſſions; that they comfort the Spirits, ſtop Fluxes of Blood, cure Lienteries and Diarrhæas, and that they are good for the Sight: The ſame ſay Cardanus, Rulandus, and Baccius, in their Books de Gemmis. But the more Mechanical Solution of their operating, is (as all Conchous things do) either by precipitating the Saline or Acid Particles, or elſe as all Alkalies do, by imbibing the ſame, obtund their Fury by ſheathing their ſharp Points, and ſo render them capable of aſſiſting ſuch Diſeaſes. Its Properties.

They are of great Worth for their Sacred Uſe: St. Auſtin in his Explication of the Pſalms, ſpeaking of the Twelve Stones mentioned in the Book of the Revelations, Rev. 21. 21. and of the Gates of the New Jeruſalem, which were every one of one Pearl; ſaith, That the Twelve Apoſtles are ſignified by the Twelve Stones, and Chriſt the Spotleſs Lamb by the Pearl. Its Dignity and Value.

Their own Glory, Beauty, and Excellency, ſurpaſs their Intrinſick Worth: If they be of the Weight of Four Grains, they are worth Three Crowns apiece; ſo according to their Bigneſs, Weight, Roundneſs, and Fairneſs, their Price is raiſed, doubled, or trebled, according to the following Scale.

We undergo Difficulties in our Paſſage back to India, through Negligence of the Pilots.

Aſcending the Phœnix the laſt of November, after a formal Valediction aſhore, the next day we paſſed the Straits in a gloomy Evening, deſigning to repeat our Courſe to the ſo long forſaken Coaſts of India; but the Wind being ſtrong at Eaſt South-Eaſt, it blew directly in our teeth, that very Line we ſhould ſteer. This contrary Wind detain'd us ſome days, but the continued Calms more; for in Seven and twenty days we gained but Nine Degrees out of Thirteen Eaſt, and but Three out of Seven in Latitude; nor could we reach any Shore, or meet with any Ship, whereby we began to want both Wood and Water; being Twelve Europe-men, Seventeen Laſcars, Two Armenian Servants, and as many Black Slaves, with one Moorman Servant; Ten Sheep with large Tails, and as many Carmania Goats, Goats, for to waft to the Company's Iſland at St. Helena, to create a Breed; (which could it be effected, might prove of as great a Benefit, as Cotſwall Sheep imprudently ſent a Preſent into Spain for the Improvement of their Wool,) beſides ſtore of Cocks and Hens for the Voyage, and four Perſian Greyhounds: To ſerve theſe we had no more than Three Hogſheads of Water left, and Wood for Firing no more than for ſix days; nor yet (Chriſtmaſs-day being paſt) had we any Hopes of a favourable Wind. This made us melancholy, ſince we were already put to Allowance, and all through the Negligence of the Maſter and his Mate, who lay Revelling aſhore, when they ſhould have provided better for their Voyage. Chap. X.

Nor had they taken other Care in loading their Veſſel, which being moſt Carmania Wool and light Loading, had required a ſufficient Ballaſt at Bottom; but on the contrary, the heavy Goods were upon Deck; which Error when it was too late to remedy, they perceived, being out at Sea; & jam ſeriò de lanâ caprinâ controverſia ſit; and now that, whereby we uſed to expreſs a thing of no Value, or not worth our diſcourſe (Goats-wool) becomes a thing of ſerious Controverſy; therefore it was God's Mercy we were not try'd with Stormy Weather hitherto: But now we were dilemma'd, not knowing what to wiſh, when the Divine Providence ſent us a Weſt North-Weſt Gale, which after we had meaſured the whole Coaſt from Perſia, round the Bay of Cambaia, to Sinda, we were drove to Diu, where ſounding we had Eighteen Fathom Water, and bending to the South, we were directed a-nights by the Light-houſes; and at laſt out-ſtretching the Flats, we fell in with the High-lands of St. John's in India. The Head-land of Diu is the higheſt Land there in view, the reſt of the Ground being low, nor is Gates to be ſeen there; it lies in North Latitude 21 deg. 10 min.; but St. John's in 10 deg. being a notable high Peak on the Gaot.

On the firſt day of the Year $167\frac{8}{9}$, and the laſt of the Moon, the Guſts blowing horribly from Shore, we were again drove to Sea till Night, and anchored very uneaſily while Two the next Morning, when the Tide horſed us towards the Shore, we not being able otherwiſe to prevail againſt the Wind with our Sails; but anchoring another whole Night and Day;

> By th' riſing Waves we're lifted up on high;
> Deſcending down we in the deep do lye.

Where we had remained, had we offer'd to unfurl our Sails, for the aforementioned Reaſons.

But from our Want there ſprang this Commodity; our Water being well nigh all ſpent, the Ship was better able to live, her Burthen ſinking aloft, and thereby gave occaſion to bear a ſteadier Poiſe below, while we expected the abating of the Tempeſt, in order to our happy Deliverance; which at laſt permitted us to come more under the Land, where ſtruggling every Tide, though the Water con-

Your Humble Servant,

J. F.

Sending you with this the General Account of Perſia, which I had time to write during almoſt Forty Days floating upon theſe Waters; which had like to prove as fatal to Us, as the great Deluge did once to the Old World in that ſpace of time.

THE

THE Present State OF PERSIA.

CHAP. XI.

Of the various Names, Situation, and Bounds; the Temper of the Air; of the Seasons and Winds; of the High and Stupendious Mountains, their Advantage and Conveniency; of the Fruitfulness of the Valleys, occasioned by Snow upon the Hills: Of the Vegetables, Plants, and Minerals; of their Fowl, Four-footed Beasts, and Fishes: Their Caravans, Mosques, Hummums, Buzzars, Houses, and Bridges. The City Suffahaun proposed as a Patern of their Government.

Its Names.

PERSIA by Classick Authors is fabled to have its Name from King Perseus, Son of Andromeda; it was anciently called Elam by the Hebrews, and now by the Inhabitants, Phursistan.

Situation and Bounds.

It is sited in the Temperate Zone, under the Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Climates: In time of Yore the Monarchy of the whole World devolved upon it, and which is miraculous, is not quite extinguished to this day; although the Bounds of the Empire were straitned or enlarged, according to the ebbing or flowing of Fortune. In its Infancy it was mighty, for Nimrod was a Powerful Hunter, that is, a great Prince; and as it grew up it increased in Strength; but from the Grand Cyrus to Darius the Mede, it seemed to be in the Flower of its Age, when it was Mistress of all the Earth which the vast Ocean washes on this side, and the Hellespont on the other. After the Death of Alexander the Great, it was miserably divided by the Contentions of his Captains; and long since by the Incursions ſions of the Saracens it has been declining, unleſs where it has healed its ſelf towards thoſe Parts bordering on India; by which means it has not loſt much of its Modern Greatneſs, though the Turks within this Century have forced the Low Countries of Babylon and Meſopotamia, which the Perſians were as willing to reſign as they to take, they being a continual Charge to defend, and no Advantage to the Perſians, but rather an unneceſſary Trouble: On which Reflections there is nothing forbids, but that with the Judicious Boterus we may ſtate its Limits between the Caſpian Sea, the Perſian Gulph, the Lake Stoke, with the Rivers Oxus and Tigris, and the Bay and Kingdom of Cambaia; which Tract contains in it from Eaſt to Weſt more than Twenty Degrees, and from North to South above Eighteen, whereby the Days are prolonged or ſhortned three Hours.

Letter V.

Under this Account is to be reckoned the greater part of Georgia, with the Iſlands in either Seas.

It is diſtinguiſhed into Provinces; the exact Number whereof, as divided at preſent, (they as often changing Names as Governors), I have not been certainly informed.

Temperance of the Air.

Quintus Curtius erred ſomething when he ſaid, Regio non alia in tota Aſiâ ſalubrior habetur, temperatum Cœlum; hinc perpetuum jugum opacum et umbroſum, quod Æſtas lævat; illinc Mare adjunctum quod modico tepore terras fovet. There is not a Region in all Aſia eſteemed healthier, the Air being temperate; on this hand the Heaven is ſhaded and the Vales defended by the Tops of Mountains, which qualifies the Heat; on the other, ſurrounded with Seas and Rivers, which by a friendly Warmth cheriſh the Land; for that Places near the Tropicks make ſome Exceptions, where in the Summer they endure great Heat, not only from the nearneſs of the Sun (becauſe we often obſerve ſtrange differences to happen in the ſame Climate), but from the Sands, and Sulphurous Exhalations ſteaming from the Mountains, which are impregnated herewith; whenas Reaſon perſuades, the Time muſt be hotter than in other Seaſons of the Year: As alſo in the Midland Country the Cauſe holds good for its intenſe Coldneſs in Winter, and almoſt through every Quarter at Nights; the Penury of Vapours where the Earth is Rocky and Mountainous, the Rivers are ſcarce and ſmall, the Snows lye undiſſolved, nor are there any Woods of that Bigneſs to hinder the freedom of the Blaſts deſcending pure upon the Vales: On which account immoderate Drineſs invades the Mediterranean Parts, the Air is Serene and Volatile, which as it is highly ſerviceable to the Reſpiration of all Living Creatures, ſo it mightily contributes to their Preſervation as well as Generation: Moreover, from this Rarity of the Air, follows an undeniable Argument of its Frigidity, and thence a farther concomitant of its Siccity; from all which reſults a Dry Conſtitution; for ἡ ξηρότης τὸ χυμὸς ἐργάζεται χολωδεςέρους τῇ πόσει; Siccitas humores facit qualitate ficciores; Drineſs of the Air makes the Humours drier, which the Inland of Perſia enjoys from a Concatenation of Cauſes both of Heat and Cold.

High Mountains.

The whole Region is very fruitful of Barren Mountains, incloſing the Valleys, being Excreſcencies of the Mountain Taurus; nor can I disbelieve in many places, but that the Plains do more than enough abound abound with Plenty, since no Place is unprovided with store of all good things; but on the contrary, like the Promised Land, it overflows. What Archiseles relates of the Island Ithica, may be applied to this Country, λυπεροῦν μὲν ἀγαθὴν δὲ νεοτεύφον; fragosum esse quidem, sed juvencularum optimum nutritorem: That it was craggy indeed, but an excellent Breeder of Cattel; the Sheep it brings forth are prodigiously large, trailing Tails after them, of the Weight, some of them, of Thirty Pound, full of Fat, they being stalled to that pitch, that Hogs fed among us with the most Care and Skill, cut not thicker than these do, especially after Vintage, and the Cotton-Harvest, when they are turned in to crop the Leafs and tender Branches of the Vine, and gather up the scattered Seeds of the Cotton, with which they thrive so infinitely, that little Flesh is to be seen, it all being converted to Suet: At other times, for want of Pasture they brouze on Shrubs and Thistles spread to and again, and in Winter are foddered with Barley-Straw, and now and then with a little Barley.

Their Neat, though small, are sleek and well-liking, whose Milk is very good for present spending, but it's better to make Butter on than Cheese. This Country has Goats in Herds, Tame ones, as well as both Sheep and Goats on the Mountains, which are Fierce and Wild, producing Bezoar; which together with Stags and Antelopes are caught by Hawks instructed for that purpose.

Their Four-footed Beasts.

Their Horses, though they have degenerated from their Primitive Race, (inest enim Equis patrum virtus; for even in Horses the Virtue of their Sires are communicated to their Breed;) still are they the best of all the East, unless the Arabian be preferred for swifter Coursers and light Horses: However for Charging Horses, and Stout Warlike Steeds, they are valued above all others.

The Asses, though little, yet will they amble with a quick Pace over Mountains where Horses cannot pass, and those used to Packs are such as no other Nation can equal. The Mules and Camels are their over-Land Ships, by which they transport their Merchandise over all the Earth.

Hyrcania brings forth Wild Beasts, such as Foxes, Wolves, and Tygres, but for want of Dens and Lurking-places, and by reason of the untilled and waste Deserts being devoid of Food, is less infested with them than other places; wherefore in long travelling here they go more unconcerned than in those parts where they are constantly alarmed by them, and are forced to be on their Guard, lest at unawares they should be surprized, they snorting every where securely under the wide Canopy of Heaven; and those that set upon the Flocks by chance are easily mastered by the Shepherds Curs, which are sharp Biters.

Wild Fowl.

Wild Fowl, both for Wing and Water, are brought forth in great Plenty of all sorts, near the Fountain-heads, and Inundations of the melted Snow, falling not into Channels, but overspreading the Bottoms, where they dissolve, whereby they seldom stretch into Rivers at length, but stagnate in the Low Grounds, which they wash.

Fishes.

In which Washes sometimes are spawned Mud-Fish, and such as Fens and Lakes are famous for. The Caspian Sea nourishes Salmon,

Letter V.

Trouts, and Sturgion, and the Perſian Gulph ſends abroad much Fiſh for ſalting; the Rivers are not very full, nor are they ſtocked with great Variety.

The Valleys made fruitful by the Snow from the Hills.

Bread-Corn in many places admits a threefold Crop, and generally without that Toil by Water-Courſes as between the Tropicks, the Rains in moſt places beſtowing a more welcome Nutriment; but more eſpecially from the white Spume of the Celeſtial Waters (with which the Hills are coated all the Seaſons of the Year), in Winter cruſted by Froſt, in Summer (by reaſon of the Sun's Heat, and more exalted Motion) thawed, thereby conſtantly diſtilling on the humble Vales an inexhauſted Store, as wealthy as what flows from Æmus Tops to enrich the Theſſalian Fields.

Where theſe Supplies are not ſo laſting (or altogether wanting) as nearer the Zodiac, there often under Ground a Vault is continued for many Leagues, with open Pits at a fit diſtance to let in the Air, and the Water carried deep to keep it from taſting of the Salt Surface (after the manner of common Sewers in our great Cities), which it would do, were not the Wells Mouths left open: For Houſhold Service Rain-Water is only uſed.

In all this Country neither Oats nor Graſs are found, becauſe longer Time is required to their ſpringing up, than either the Intervals of Heat or Cold will grant; for no ſooner does the Spring enter, than the Sun defaces their Verdure by parching up the Blades of either; and when Autumn claims Preeminence at its Equinox, then no ſooner do they peep out, than they are nipped by the Receſs of the Innate Heat: Wherefore no Green Meadows or ſpangled Fields are here expected, but ſuch as are created by indefatigable Labour, unleſs they be hoped to be ſeen in Vintages, or under Groves or Orchards, or by Rivulets ſides gliding from the declining Hills.

The firſt are ſet generally on Fruitful Ridges of the Eaſtern Mounts,

——Denique apertos
Bacchus amat Colles—— Virg. Georg. 2.

The latter are the frequent Advantages to Villages, and the ſweet Pleaſure of the larger Towns; where Trees and Flowers grow up together, that the one may yield a ſafe ſhelter to the other, againſt the Extremes of Heat or Cold; in both whoſe Prime a fragrant Blandiſhment conſpire no leſs, than to entice the willing Senſes: But for Elegancy of Culture and choice of Slips, I ſee them not over emulous; which Neglect gives juſt occaſion of Wonder, ſince their Worldly Happineſs is placed in fine Gardens, which no Nation appears to me more to Idolize.

Plants. For Fuel, the combuſtible Heath is more common than flouriſhing Trees for Timber; but for Sallads it yields all that are deſirable, both Herbs and Roots; and ſome of the moſt Medicinal Plants are of the Natural Growth of this Country.

Tobacco. There is an heavy Tax laid upon Tobacco, though it be the choiceſt in theſe Parts.

Manufactories. To theſe Bleſſings for Pleaſure, Neceſſity, and Phyſick, are added others for Profit: Gums, the moſt Rich, diſtil every where: From Carmania, Goats-Wool (as much to be prized as Jaſon's Golden Fleece) with with which our Hatters know well how to falsify their Bevers; and the Natives how more honestly to weave both Cloth and Carpets very fine, which they sell at dear Rates. The Flocks and courser Wool of their Sheep stand them in some stead, they kneading it into Felts, for Seamless Coats for the ordinary sort of People, for their common wearing; and their Skins with the Wool on, are both an Ornament and Safeguard against the roughest Weather: But Lambs-skins with their crisped Wool are of more Credit, (they being excellent Artists to make them keep their Curl), and not disdained to be worn by the chiefest Gentry; of whose Leather they make good Merchandise, it being esteemed better than Turkish, their Tanners being expert at dressing, not only these and Kid, but other Hides of larger size, which therefore are bought up with Greediness by all Foreigners, for their real Excellency. Chap. XI.

Goats and Camels, after other good Services performed, bequeath their Hair to their Weavers, of which they make water'd Camlets.

But above all, the Wool-bearing Cotton Shrub renders by its Wealthy Down those Riches which are deeper digg'd for.

Nor does the Silk-worm lay it self out less for the Publick Weal, while it spins out its own Bowels, until nothing be left within its Cask but Air; contrary to the Trite Saying of Aristotle, Ex nihilo nihil fit; Out of Nothing comes Nothing; for by the Industry of this Insect, the first Foundation of the Persian Silks, Velvets, and Rich Embroider'd Carpets, are laid, with which the greatest part of the habitable World do Pride themselves.

And since we descend to these busy Tutors of Mankind, who upbraid the slothful and oscitantly idle, let us step through the Monarchy of the Bees, and taste the Sweets they suck from Nature's ample Storehouse, and see how they return with Thighs laden with Honey, to stock themselves, and build their Mansionss to nourish their young, and enough to spare to feed Mankind besides; and in their Last Testament make the Persians Legatees, by leaving them huge Cakes of Wax.

Let's look a little lower, and ransack the Deep, and we shall find the Persian Pearls excelling all others that are generated in Sea-shells, from which Beds are brought forth Unions, adorning the Necks and Ears of the greatest Princesses, and the Crowns and Diadems of the mightiest Emperors, begot at certain Seasons of the Year in the Flesh of Oysters, as the Concrete Grains or Hardness in Swines-Flesh (I suppose scrophulous Tumors), by the Dew of Heaven, says Tertullian. Whence if it Thunders or Lightens, says Pliny, the Oysters are straitned, or miscarry; but others render it quite contrary: So that I should leave their Original as disputable here as ever, if no Belief could be fixed on Experience, which confirms their Increase to be chiefly owing to the Virtue both of Showers and Thunder. Persian Pearls the best.

Before we launch too far, let us examine with what Faculties this Land is endued: Indeed it is blessed with many more than at first landing the Superficies does promise; for besides the already enumerated Excellencies, it is not altogether a dead Soil, though it be Gombroon Ware made of Earth, the best, next China.

Letter V.

right enough termed ſo by Paracelſus, ſpeaking generally; for it is not to be underſtood as comprehenſible in the Element, but as it ſubſiſts and lives impregnated in the Microcoſm, it receiving its Fœcundity through its Virtue, whereby it vegetates, and takes upon it the Nature of Minerals, Stones, Gaults, or Clay, and of Animals, as well as Plants. We having yet but lightly turned up the Glebe, have hardly given the Potter his handful of White Marble to form into Veſſels without Fucus, deſervedly challenging the Superiority; unleſs the Ancient Chineſe would reſtore the true Porcelin, which they cannot, it requiring the Growth of ſome Ages, which their late Civil Wars and Tumults has forbidden to be effected, while they wreak their Anger on theſe Treaſuries, to the Ruin of their Enemies, and the utter loſs of their own Reputation in that Point.

Lapis Tutia & Manatæ, and Brimſtone.

Lapis Tutiæ & Manatæ from Carmania; and the beſt Brimſtone from the County of Lhor.

Bole.

Bole, famed for its Power by the general Conſent of all the Phyſicians in the World, is carried from Armenia and its Neighbouring Territories, for their Uſe.

Turquoiſe Stone.

Deeper in the Bowels of the Mines, the Turquoiſe (the moſt lively of any) endures the Rape of thoſe that ſearch for it.

Lapis Lazuli.

But the Lapis Lazuli, vulgarly called the Armenian Stone, is imputed to be a Native of that Region; for the true Lapis Lazuli is brought hither only by the Tartars inhabiting beyond the Caſpian Sea; and then, but when they come on Embaſſies to the Suffee, (for others of their Nation are not permitted to expatiate the Univerſe, or wander from their own Homes, nor for Strangers is it lawful to enter their Dominions): Wherefore neither can they tranſport it on this ſide, nor on the other ſide will they hold any Correſpondence with theſe: However it happens, under theſe Difficulties and Reſtraints the Armenians ſometimes do attempt to acquire it, leaving no Stone unturn'd to purchaſe it; and having once gained it, they ſuck thence as much Profit, as they pleaſe to value the Hazard of the Enterprize at, wherein they uſe little Conſcience; whence it comes to paſs it is ſold for ſuch vaſt Rates to the Europeans. From this Stone is made that Colour they name Ultra-marine Blue, though the Azure be made of the German Stone: It is beſides commended for purging all Melancholy Affects.

Marble.

The Mountains produce Marbles hard enough to endure the Poliſh, if they knew how to beſtow it; yet beſides the Monuments of Perſepolis, where Statues and Columns are beholden for their Splendor to that Science, and the Dens and Caves Mouths of the old Gaurs bear ſome deformed ones, (unleſs the King's Palaces have ſome Tanks, and the Princes and Great Men ſome Gate-Poſts and Lintels ſmoothly poliſhed), few others are ſeen; for what reaſon I know not, unleſs their Religion prohibit, or they delight more in Brick and Muddy Walls, though leſs durable, or that it is ſo decreed by Fate, even as Things or Times naturally decline from bad to worſe: Thus it is, from Marble Cities they are now become hardly Brick; by which means the moſt ſumptuous Tombs of the foregoing Emperors hardly declare to the ſucceeding Generation in whoſe Memory they were intended.

As

As the Mountains bring forth Marble, so the Earth dispenseth Hot Baths and Mineral Waters for their Commodity; in like manner, Natural Mummy, and a Liquid Bitumen in the Lake from whence Semiramis took Cement to unite the Wall she built round Babylon; and from about Thirty Mountains near the same place about Schamachia, as it is conjectured, springs the famous Naphtha.

Naphtha.

At the Foot of the high Mountain Barmuch are found several sorts of Minerals, with which its prodigious Womb is pregnant: But at finding of these, as their Ingenuity is slow, so for certain they are less apt to put themselves upon extraordinary Labours in Spagyrical Operations; having hitherto been content with the dull Metals of Lead and Iron, had not lately Hermes Wand directed them to the Scrutiny of a Copper Vein; from whence they reap not greater Emolument than the Hollanders do Detriment: For formerly as they brought great Quantities from Japan, that turned to good Account, now that Trade falls off; and whereas before it yielded them besides Cloth of Gold and Silver, Silks and Velvets, Carpets and other Manufactories, which they are obliged by Compact to take off their hands every Year, to the entire Sum of Fifty thousand Thomands, all which they more than cleared, carrying away moreover several Tuns of Gold and Silver in Coin; at present they can but just pay, and make even the aforesaid Indenture.

Minerals.

About Siras are to be digged Mines of Gold and Silver, but they quit neither Cost nor Pains, wherefore they have laid aside the farther Inquest into them.

Hitherto we have run through a spacious Field, though perhaps not every where equally fortunate in every thing; for,

Hic Segetes, illic veniunt felicius Uvæ
Arborei fœtus alibi. ———

Here Corn grows best, there Vines do flourish more;
Woods in another place produce their Store.

Though for the most part this is an hospitable Soil, cherishing in its Matrice whatever is kindly sowed.

And this Increase is continued without any notable River, that hath either Breadth or Depth for to bear laden Vessels of any Bulk: For, as Varenius writes, the manner whereby any Rivers of considerable or indifferent Bigness exist, are twofold; either from the conjunction of many Rivulets into one Stream, or that they flow from great Lakes; the former of which every one hinders, while they draw every Brook to their own Use; so that instead of filling large Channels, they almost drein them quite, which might otherwise merit to be called great Rivers; to wit, that of Siras and Persepolis, which washing its Plain, makes a long Journy before it mixes with the Salt Sea: And lastly, the River at Suffahaun, which never runs with a full Current, only about the Autumnal Quarter, when sometimes by Rain, but always by the dissolved Snows after Summer is over, the Husbandmen breaking down their Dams, purposely raised to keep the Waters up for the sake of the Rice, the Waters being let Rivers.

Letter V.

let looſe, return to the Main Channel, and raiſe themſelves to the Brims of its Banks, otherwiſe paſſable in moſt places: This firſt way failing, we ſhall ſee what Supply is to be expected from the Lake Stoke, which lies too low to aſcend the High Countries; and for the Caſpian Sea or Lake, I doubt not it will appear as impoſſible, if it be true what is ſaid in behalf of it, That many mighty Rivers empty themſelves into it, which it receives without the leaſt Augmentation, and therefore cannot return their Kindneſs reciprocally.

Springs.

Which being conſider'd, this Land is chiefly beholden to wholeſome Springs of Living Water, to quench the Thirſt of Plants as well as living Creatures, which are to that End beſtowed on them apart by a more Liberal Providence, than either of the former by a joint Conſent.

Little Rain.

Notwithſtanding the impending Clouds, they are moſtly without Rain; and though they lowre ſome Weeks together, they rarely drop Moiſture.

Showers of Sand.

The ſudden Guſts and impetuous Blaſts from the Mountains hindring them, oftner cauſe near the Maritime Coaſts, Hurricanes of Wind, and wonderful Tempeſts of Sand, ſo Thick and Black, that the Clouds raiſed thereby benight the very Day, and while the Storm laſts (which is not long) induces a Darkneſs to be felt; and the Fury over, it leaves the Effects of a Fired Air: Unleſs when the Seven Stars ariſe on this Horizon at the beginning of Spring, when a mellifluous Dew lies not long on the Trees and the Plants, before it be concrete into the choiceſt Manna.

The Dew turned into Manna.

And although at ſtated Times the Snow does furniſh them with Water, yet it ſuffers in nothing more than in extreme Drought. Which is the reaſon Eminent Cities and Market-Towns ſtand not thick, but are at vaſt diſtances one from another; nor are the Villages leſs ſtraggling, two ſcarcely falling under the Eye from the Tops of their higheſt Mountains, excepting in ſome few of their Wealthieſt Plains.

The moſt principal Cities I have ſeen, are Gombroon, and Bunder-Congo, two great Ports in the Gulph of Perſia, famous for Traffick on that ſide of the World. Lhor, the Granary for theſe Ports. Jerom, excelling in Dates. Siras, like another Phœnix ſprung out of the Aſhes of Perſepolis, which ſtill retains the Dignity and Majeſty of the Metropolis of Perſia, ſtrictly ſo called; after the ſame manner as Iſpahaun, Spahaun, or Suffahaun, moſt properly is of Parthia; only ſo much the more Honourable, by how long it ſhall pleaſe the Emperor to fix his Throne there.

Cities.

Thoſe Cities which Fame has brought to our Ears, are Casbin, another Royal City, bordering on the Caſpian, ſicklier than Spahaun, tho it exceed it in Plenty of all things. Taberez, i. e. Taurus in Armenia, not far from Mount Ararat, now the Seat of the Chief Patriarchate; it is conterminous to the Turks, and the moſt Trading Empory on that ſide. For weaving and tranſporting Silks and Velvets, Gillan ſtands in the firſt Rank; in the ſecond, Sherwan. Jouſcan ſells excellent Wool, and from Muſhat is brought the beſt Iron and Copper, theſe being Cities in Carmania. At Derab is the true Piſſaſphaltus:

ſphaltus: At Nerez, Aſſa Fætida: At Shabanat are the beſt Bezoar-Stones. Chap. XI.

The Buildings of their Cities are of Three Sorts, the Houſes being diverſified in reſpect of the Place, Time, and Perſons; for the Forms of thoſe of the Citizens, Nobles, and Peaſants, are not all alike: As thoſe in Sandy and Hot Places are of one Shape, and thoſe in Rocky, Stony, and Cold Parts of another: So likewiſe the Anniverſary Mutations in any of theſe, make them fit their Habitations for thoſe Quarters. Houſes.

The Palaces of the Potentates are built moſtly after this manner: Towards the Street appears little or no Frontiſpiece, more than the Porch, which makes a ſquare ſtately Building, arched at top, under which is a ſtately Balcony, open on every ſide, over the Haſtle, which compaſſes neat Apartments, and are defended from the Sun's Heat by large Umbrelloes or Penthouſes, ſtretching themſelves wide to draw in the cool Air, the embowed parts whereof are fretted, and the out-parts ſhine with Blue inlaid with Gold: The Caſements, or Folding-doors rather, ſparkle with Glorious Panes of Glaſs of ſeveral Colours, and declare the Workmanſhip of the Carvers; as does the outſide Slates the Skill of the Tilers in Glazing and Painting, as well as the Marble Facing the Ingenious Deſign of the Surveyor.

From the Portal runs on each hand round the Garden a Mud-Wall very high, though not very thick, which another Wall thwarts juſt in the middle, from the Porch to the main Building, thereby to part the Mens Quarters from the Womens; the latter whereof encloſes the Kitchen-Garden; the other is deſtined for Fragrant Plants, Aromatick Flowers, and outſtretching Trees for Pleaſure, as well as bearing Fruit for Uſe. The Houſes are ſo contrived, that in the Summer they are open Banqueting-Houſes, refreſhed with Fountains as they ſit in Friſco, which deſcend thence to all the Quadrangles by Water-Courſes. Since the greateſt part of this Empire is not far off the Northern Tropick, it is therefore no wonder it ſhould complain of Heat, eſpecially in the Summer, at which Seaſon the Sun ſtrikes the Earth more directly with its Rays; for which cauſe, amongſt all of them, Aquaducts and Fountains in the very Rooms below Stairs, are mightily prized, with Water-works playing to cool the burning Particles of the incenſed Air; and the whole Structure is conſtituted ſo, that it may receive theſe Refreſhments every way it is capable: Wherefore they defend their Dwellings from the Sun, and are conſtantly ſprinkling Water around their Seats from theſe Currents; and from their Tops have many Breathing-places to receive the Wind, which are ſo fixed, that whatever Breezes ſtir, they ſhall ſuck them in, and tranſmit them to all the Rooms of the Houſe, as they liſt.

In Winter, if they be remote from the Sea, they ſhut up their open Halls and Parlours, and make them cloſe Apartments, by letting down thoſe Umbrelloes that ſhaded them in Summer, to keep them warm in the cold Winter, till its Severity be paſt, ſpreading all the Floor with Quilts thick and warm, and kindling Stoves in all their Bedchambers: Theſe alſo are of a different Model from thoſe nearer the Sea, They being moſtly flat, Theſe arched: Their Roofs are made of Wood fetch'd from India, with tranſverſe Beams upon Clay walls, or Stone with untempered Mortar, till they come to the juſt Altitude of their Houſes, when the Interſtitia or Spaces between Beam and Beam are filled with Palm-Leafs neatly laid and painted, which ſerve for Cieling.

It is univerſally common to Spherical, Arched, or Plain Buildings, to lay vaſt Loads of Mud at top; and what is more wonderful, only with Mud and Clay, they will rear moſt ſpacious Arches, without other matter of Aſſiſtance; whereupon either againſt Snows or Rains, ſhould they continue (which they never do long) they would make but faint Reſiſtance; for being ſoaked thoroughly, they would reſolve into their firſt Entity: Whence in great Snows, to defend and keep their Dwellings ſtanding, they ſhovel it all from the Tops of their Houſes into the Lanes, and thereby obſtruct the Paſſages of their moſt Publick Streets, when the Snow has not fallen above two days, and alſo endanger the Foundations; which the Rich better ſecure by Brick Bottoms, than the Poor, whoſe Fabricks often totter on ſuch occaſions: However, they have a better Opportunity againſt Fire, their Manſions affording little combuſtible Subſtance for that to feed on.

The Citizens are not ſo ſumptuous as the Nobles; and the Villages are content with Cottages, with either Plain or Arched Roofs, neither preſuming to exalt them to an unbecoming Height, in regard of either of their Stations: Their Caſements are latticed, not going to the Price of Glaſs, which is Foreign, and for that reaſon ſcarce. Concluding then with theſe Tenements, we are brought to view on what Baſis their Government ſtands: For the Welfare and Support of Cities, are the Obſervation of their Laws;

Salus Civium in Legibus conſiſtit.

Wholſome Laws the City's Safety are,
Againſt all Violence the ſureſt Bar.

Juſtitia una alias virtutes continet omnes.

Juſtice alone all other Virtues holds.

Spahaun propoſed as a Pattern of their Politicks.

And as a Patern of all their Politicks, I ſhall propoſe Spahaun (or rather Suffahaun, as by and by ſhall be declared), not only the Head of Parthia, but of the whole Nation; which Region by Mercator is named Arac, placed between Media, Perſia, Carmania, and Hyrcania: By ſome it is called Charaſan; by the Inhabitants, Airon; it lies almoſt under the Fifth Climate, in Thirty ſeven Degrees of Latitude North, and Eighty ſix of Longitude Eaſt; the Days differ Three Hours in the Courſe of the Year: Nor are the Seaſons ſo calm and ſedate, that they ſhould be eſteemed temperate, ſo as not to exceed in either Extreme, where in Summer they muſt uſe Caves, Vaults, and Grottoes, and in Winter Stoves and Hot-houſes.

The Air is very rare at Spahaun, and the Wind drying: The City has no need of Walls, where ſo many Marble Mountains ſtand as a Guard, Guard, or Bulwark of Defence; it has indeed a Tower, but it is a Mud one, rather ſerving as an Armory, than to be relied on as a place of Strength; ſo that I ſhrewdly ſuſpect whether ever this were the Hecatompylos of Ortellius, as is related by more than one. The Circumference of the Body of the City I gueſs may meaſure Seven Miles; but if the diſperſed Gardens and Seats of the Great Men, with the Palace Royal be brought into that Computation, we muſt allow it as many Pharſangs. Chap. XI.

The Journy to it is difficult in Bands, Troops, or Companies, by reaſon of the uneven Way encompaſſing every ſide for many Miles together; therefore to attempt coming to it with an Army or Warlike Force, muſt not be aſcribed to Prudence of Conduct or Valour, unleſs there ſhould ariſe another Alexander (which muſt be imputed to his good Fortune, rather than Proweſs or Virtue) hairbrain'dly reſolute to undergo no Repulſe, tho the Exterprize ſurpaſs all human Probability: For it muſt unavoidably fare with him literally, as it did hyperbolically only with Xerxes his Hoſt, who are reported to have been ſo numerous as to drink whole Rivers dry as they paſſed; what then would Ciſterns of Rain-water do, or now and then a ſmall Brook, to quench the Thirſt even of an ordinary Detachment, not likely to put ſo Populous a City in the leaſt Conſternation? But to find Food in ſuch Bye and Deſolate Paths for any conſiderable Force, would be paſt poſſibility, unleſs at the Expence of a Miracle. By theſe Bars, whereby the Paſſes are eaſily ſecured (an Handful of Men being able to withſtand an Hoſt) and the Avenues inacceſſible, the Hoſtile Arms of the Turks have been put to a ſtop, who otherwiſe would have ſet no Bounds to their Deſires, could they have conquered theſe Obſtacles, whereby they would at the ſame time have carried the Empire too.

The ſmall Attendance we carried up to Spahaun, was demonſtration enough of this Truth; for though we fared well, yet it was tireſome, and few elſe meet with the like Conveniences, they being aſſured that we would more than reward their readineſs to provide for us, whereby we the better overcame thoſe Straits, which prepared an Entrance into the large Field where this invincible City lay open to us; deriving its Annual Nutriment from a clear River, which it beſtows plentifully from its hollow Womb: But that which it bears the Bays away for, is its being ſeated in the very Heart of the Empire.

Shaw Abas well adviſed in his Choice of Spahaun for the Imperial City.

For ſake whereof, its Founder (or at leaſt, Adorner) Shaw Abas the Great, adviſedly choſe it for his Imperial Throne, that thence he might more readily diſperſe his Mandates, and be aſſiſting by his Auxiliaries, to any ſuffering Part, aſſaulted by the bold Incurſions of his Enemies; irradiating like the Sun in the Firmament (by the Influence of his Power) all within the Sphere of his Government: So that while the utmoſt of his Dominions are ſeaſonably ſupplied with the comfortable Warmth of his Protection, he ſafely reſides within, invulnerable from Foreign Strokes, and reigns in this his Capital City without Controul. And as the Founders of Old Rome promiſed Eternity to their Empire as well as City, in digging up a Man's Skull, and thence, as from the beſt Omen, were encouraged; as not being perſuaded the Capitol could be a fit Baſis for the Monarchy of the World, unleſs it were built on the Foundation that was ſo luckily offered them: So from the ſame Auſpicious Sign Shaw Abas preſaged the like happy Event, building a Pillar of his Enemies Heads, raiſed as a Trophy to his Valour. What elſe is Auguſt in Suffahaun, are the remaining Products of his Brain, more truly than Minerva was ſaid to be the Offspring of Jove.

Letter V.

The magnificently-arch'd Buzzars, which form the Noble Square to the Palace; the ſeveral Publick Inns, which are ſo many Seraglios; the ſtately Rows of Sycamores, which the World cannot parallel; the glorious Summer-houſes, and pleaſant Gardens, the ſtupendious Bridges, ſumptuous Temples, the Religious Convents, the College for the Profeſſors of Aſtronomy, are ſo many laſting Pyramids and Monuments of his Fame; though many of them begin to ſink in their own Ruin, for want of timely Repair; ſuch is the fatal Calamity of human Structures, Time corroding the moſt durable: But to ſpeak properly and truly, the Cauſe of ſo early a Decay is the ſlothful Nature, and diſregard of their Forefathers Honour, that poſſeſſes the improvident Perſians, leſt any thing tending to perpetuate their Memories, ſhould by reviving their Virtues be made uſe of as a Reproach to their inſtant Supineneſs; and for that reaſon they let all fall to the Ground, never offering to underprop a declining Building.

The Cauns.

This City has Cæſar for its principal Patron; under him the Caun, who is Preſident of the Province, or County-Sheriff, (who is ever one of the Prime Nobility, and of the higheſt Rank among the Courtiers, always on Duty near the Emperor's Perſon, that he may be ready to give an account of his Charge upon demand, and at hand to introduce all Addreſſes that concern his Office to repreſent; being as it were a Skreen between ſo high a Majeſty, and the meanneſs of the Popularity under his Protection, leſt they ſhould intrude too prophanely, or be ſtruck blind by the too bright Rays of an Abſolute Power) is interpoſed as a fit Medium, to qualify by a ſuitable Interceſſion the neceſſary diſtance each Condition ought to be kept at, to maintain the mutual Benefit expected on both ſides. Whilſt he is thus employed, and receives the greateſt Profits of his Lordſhip, he deputes his Lieutenant to the Truſt of governing, who tranſacts all in his Name, as his Chief Vicar.

Etimundoulet, or Chancellor.

But the Suffee's Vicar-General is by his Place the Second Perſon in the Empire, and always the Firſt Miniſter of State, called by them Etimundoulet, The Chief Slave; under whoſe Juriſdiction the Provinces of leſſer Note do fall, and are at his diſpoſing immediately next the Emperor's; whoſe Cauns or Dukes therefore are obliged to conſtant Reſidence in their ſeveral Diſtricts; and if it fortune that at any time they have Buſineſs with the Emperor, they apply themſelves to the Etimundoulet, as to the Lord Chancellor of the whole Kingdom, to whoſe Management they commit themſelves and their Cauſe; who cannot be abſent from their Metropolis at any time, before they have conſtituted a Ganizeen, which is an Under-Sheriff, who thereby tranſmit their Authority to him, only reſerving the Honour to themſelves.

All

All theſe Prefects in their Dominions behave themſelves after the Example of the Emperor himſelf, in reſpect of Grandeur as well as Rule, only remembring they are but Tenants at Will, and therefore fail not to preſent their Maſter and his Family with the Firſt Fruits of the Growth of each Province; which Annual Commemoration is a Monitor of their Homage and Fealty to their Supreme Lord, which he exacts as a due Debt, and they pay as an acknowledgment of their Servitude to him; in which as long as they continue in his Grace, at every New-Year's Day he ſends them a Livery, or Robe of Honour, to be retained his Slaves, which they receive as a Mark of the higheſt Favour; and to be called a Goloomy Shaw, The King's Vaſſal, is the higheſt Apex of their Ambition.

A Ganiſeen is Deputy to the Caun.

Subordinate to the forementioned Officers, is the Droger, or Mayor of the City, or Captain of the Watch or the Rounds: It is his Duty to preſide with the Main Guard a-nights before the Palace-Gates, and thence to make Excurſions through the City, to diſperſe, ſecure, and apprehend Idle and Vagrant Perſons, that can give no Account of themſelves, to puniſh Offenders of that nature, and to keep the Peace.

The Droger.

In all their Buzzars, which are locked up in the dead of the Night, there are Watches to prevent Thieves, at the common Expence of every Shopkeeper.

The next in Office is the Queſtor Zygoſtates, or Clerk of the Market, known among them by the Title of Calenture; he fixes the Price of Corn, has the Overſight of all Bakers, Cooks, &c. and by his own Authority can not only confiſcate their Goods to the Poor, but mulct with loſs of Life ſuch Offenders as are notoriouſly irreclaimable otherwiſe; many times throwing a Baker into his own Red-hot Furnace, that vends poyſonous Corn, or cheats in the Weight; and the Cook into his own Boiling Caldron, for impoſing on the People Carrion, or ill-nouriſhing Fleſh, found in Highways or Ditches: Thus deals he with Malefactors of this Batch. Beſides, he is Receiver of all the Rents of the City, and pays it into the King's Treaſury.

The Calenture.

The laſt Perſon to be treated of is the Cazy, or Publick Juſticiary, who will deſerve a ſpecial Treatiſe by himſelf, and therefore is to be reſerved for a fitter ſeaſon.

The Cazy.

But in the mean time we may obſerve, That by ſuch Cyclops as theſe are formed the Thunderbolts of the Almighty Jove, whereby he both makes the whole Olympus ſhake, and preſerves the Laws of every private City as well as Country to which they belong. As all things by a Natural Tendency move from the Circumference to the Centre, ſo from the Confluence of all Nations of the World hither, it becomes the Chief Empory, as well as an Exemplar of their Government; although it hath declined much ſince the Europeans have diſcovered the way by Sea to India: For long before that it was the Storehouſe and general Market for Indian Wares as well as its own; and by conſequence, as it was the Staple of the Univerſe, it was the common Receptacle of all the Money ebbing and flowing from all Parts: But this Boſphorus being ſtopped, from a Sea it became a Spahaun the chief Empory.

Letter V.

Lake, in which Riches do now ſtagnate, not circulate, or at leaſt not with that Force they did before.

However, as long as the buſy Merchant from the uttermoſt Coaſts, gapes after its Commodities to advance his Pelf, and for his ſake the Publick Buzzars are kept in better Repair than leſs-frequented Buildings, it muſt be allowed it is ſo far from a Total Decay of Trade, that few Cities in the World ſurpaſs it for Wealth, and none come near it for thoſe ſtately Buildings; which for that reaſon are kept entire, while others made of Lime and Slate, belonging to private Perſons, hardly laſt their Founders Lives, for want of timely Care.

The Citizens humbled.

For the Citizens rather chuſe to dwell in a tottering Houſe, than appear laviſh in Coſtly Building or Apparel, for fear their Governors ſhould ſuſpect they have too much Riches, when they are ſure never to be at reſt till they have dived into the bottom of their Treaſuries; which Extortion is returned by the King upon their Rulers, whereby the Emperor's Treaſure grows exuberantly great: Which is the cauſe the Citizens ſo often lay up their Talents in Napkins, ſince it is a Crime to expoſe their Wealth by ſpecious or luxurious Shews, according to the accuſtomed Pride of Wealthieſt Corporations among us.

Courtiers and Soldiers live great.

Whence it proceeds that only Courtiers and Soldiers in this Country, who are maintained by Annual Penſions, are permitted to live gallantly; whoſe regard of the Publick Utility is rarely ſo much conſidered, as to ſpare any thing from their manner of enjoying themſelves, either to adorn or benefit the Cities in which they reſide: On which ground it is, that their beſt Cities ſeldom have ſplendid Edifices to commend them, from mean or private Hands; though in the Suburbs of their Capital City Spahaun, there are many by the Rivers ſide, both of the Nobles and the Emperors ſtately Palaces.

But what celebrates it moſt, are the covered Buzzars, or Market-places, continued through the whole City; and the Inns of Strangers, occupying them in the time of their Buſineſs; their Baths, Temples, and Convents, which have Stipends to ſupport them from being an Eyeſore and Blemiſh in their principal Places; all which deſerve a particular Deſcription.

Their Caravans.

And therefore I ſhall begin with their Inns, or Caravan Ser Raws, which are divided into Three Species, both in reſpect of their Site and Form, as well as Matter, through the whole Empire. Thoſe near the Sea-ſhore for Seven Days Journey or thereabouts, are commonly of this Figure; they are reared of unpoliſhed Stones, on an Area Three Foot high, to keep out the Horſes, and leave an outward Space for Servants to lye on, whereon are erected Four Pillars, which ſupport Four bowed Roofs, ſurrounding an Hemiſpherical Arch in the middle, where at each ſide over head are large open Windows (or Doors rather) to receive the Air, and at every Corner of the Square, Forms within a ſeparate Apartment for their Men of Note, which are in open Cloyſters; and without, Four more, cloſe, for thoſe that connot endure the Air, or for their Women; every Quarter has a wide Entrance or open Gate to add to its Airyneſs; to which Inns are no Stables or ſhady Places for the Beaſts of Burthen, unleſs there happen to be Trees, which is a great chance in such Sandy, Wild, and Desert Places. To the most famous of these now and then happens to be an Host provided with Necessaries for Travellers, slenderly provided to furnish them at easy Rates with Cheese and Fruit, Bread and Barley, the first whereof the Poor make their Meals on, and their Beasts on the latter: But they must dress both their Victuals and their Beasts themselves, for he affords neither Cook nor any other to the best that come, no more than to the lowest; offering at no more than to sell Mans-Meat and Horse-Meat.

No Priority at Church, Bath, or Caravan Ser Raw.

They mostly nest in common, and observe no distinction among themselves either at Church, in the Bath, or in the Caravan Ser Raw; he that comes first, is first served, none give way to another; whereby there is in the same Inn a multitude of all sorts, Footmen, Horsemen, Merchants, together with an hideous Confusion of People within, and the Noise of Beasts, Packers, and Servants.

Notwithstanding which, if a Foreign Ambassador with a great Retinue arrive, or any of their Nobles (whom they only respect as Men among them) pitch his Tent, or take up his Quarters with them, these will remove, and proffer him Room, seeking Lodgings on the Outward Lodge, or Advance-Border of the Caravan Ser Raw for themselves; but then this must be esteemed a great Mark of their Compliance, and indeed almost forced, they usually stomaching such a Disturbance with frowning Countenances, and sometimes open Revilings.

This Form, after Seven Days travelling, is from an huddled Stack of Buildings expatiated into a large Square in the middle of the Area, where in the Summer-time both the Cattel and Packs are shut in by Doors lock'd a-nights, and open'd early in the Morn, to keep in the straying Troop together, and for the safety of their Bundles, lest any should be stollen: In the heart of this Square is raised a place as large as a Mountebank's Stage, where the Gelabdar, or Master Muliteer, with his prime Passengers or Servants, have an opportunity to view their whole Caphala.

The Gelabdar not so esteemed in Persia, as the Caphala Basha in Turky.

This Office in Turky is held a Place of Trust and Honour, he being Captain of all the Troops going together, and hires Soldiers, and lists them in his Pay, being a Churlish Nabal to Christians; but he is here of no other Account than to look after his Number of Mules, Camels, or Asses, and to see they bring their Lading safe where consigned, and often becomes subject himself to Bastinadoes on the Soles of the Feet: Whereas the other in his Journey takes upon him a kind of a Bassaship, and never fails to lay any Miscarriage or Misfortune on the Bones of the Fringi, or Franks: But it is otherwise here, because of the Rhadary undertaking to secure Travellers; which is easily done in an entirely-subjected Empire, not liable to Treacherous Insults of Ravening Thieves in Companies, as they are to the Wild Arabs and other Outlaws.

In Winter-time there are Stables capacious of holding Four hundred Carriers Horses together with their Burthens, on the backside of little Chambers, fronting the Peristylium or Cloyster'd Entry, all black with Smoke when they retire into them in the Winter; lying else before them on open Cloysters, which are so many Anticham-

bers

Letter V.

bers to every one of them, and at firſt appearance make a Piatza, were not every diſtinct Arch on each ſide ſeparated by a Party-Wall, being all alike, and did not the Middle Arch of each ſide make a difference by a more ſpacious and exalted diſtinction, each anſwering the Loftineſs of the Porch within, though that riſes higher into an aſpiring ſquare Tower, with lightſome Summer-Chambers aloft, which makes a Magnificent Entry; and thence the Covering of the Caravan runs on a plain Terras, convenient for the whole Number of Gueſts to ſpread their Carpets, Matraſſes, Plads, or Beds, for lodging in the Night time.

They may make Forts of their Caravans.

Since the Architecture to theſe in View and Variety (by their alternate Chambers and Cloyſters, which by diſtinct Arches keep their due Order) is no deformed ſight, it yields beſides a double Utility, for the defence of Strangers againſt both the Injuries of Heat and Cold: And thoſe of them that are built of Stone or Brick, have not once only ſtood it out in the nature of ſtrong Forts againſt their Oppoſers, but have many times been made tenable, being ſtored with Ammunition and Proviſion.

Thoſe nearer Spahaun have moſt an end the ſame Form or Shape below, but are oftner tubilated than tabulated above, and are made of Mud for the moſt part; but in Spahaun its ſelf, where Strangers abide longer, they are more ſplendid, and larger than any where elſe; for to this lower Order we have been deſcribing, they add another, and ſometimes a third, which bear Proportion and exact Symetry with each other.

Their Temples.

Their Temples repreſent no great Bulk to the Beholders, nor exalt themſelves much towards Heaven, unleſs ſome Obelisks, which are ſometimes joined with, at other times ſeparate from them: But moſt an end they obſerve this Form; The Foundation being laid in a Square, the Roof is ſupported by four Pillars, in whoſe middle a great Cupilo lifts up its Head, which the Prieſts viſit Day and Night at every Fourth Hour to call the people to Prayers; the Whole participates more of Moſaick than any other Work. In the Dome is no Ornament, nor Seat; on the Ground Mats are ſtrewed; any manner of Carving or Repreſentation whatſoever is baniſh'd hence.

From the Pomærium to the outward Court they aſcend by Steps, where they bare their Feet, alluding to the Command in Moſes his Viſion, Pull off thy ſhooes, for the place whereon thou ſtandeſt is holy Ground. As ſoon as they have waſhed themſelves in the Porch, where always is a Baptiſtery, or Tank for that purpoſe, they pluck off their upper Garments, eſpecially if they be Cloth of Gold, for Gold alſo is to them Nigeſs, i. e. unclean; wherefore they caſt from them Gold Rings, or whatever is ſet in Gold, not being ſuffered either to ſleep or pray with them upon them; but at the ſame time they open their Silver Phylacteries and Roſaries, wherein in Aggat are engraven ſome Scraps of their Alcoran, and uncovering their Heads they enter their Churches, and fall down on the Ground, and as they recite their Prayers, often kiſs the ſame, always bowing towards the riſing and ſetting of the Sun, and agree with the Indian Moors in ſaluting their Genii, and then they depart; unleſs on their Sabbath-day, which is Friday every Week, the Mullah detain them by a Preachment, ment, or with a Chapter out of the Alcoran, which he undertakes to expound by a large, and, no doubt, learned Periphraſis, to whom on the South-ſide they have appropriated a Pulpit raiſed on Steps, if it may be ſaid to be one without any Desk or Rails, on which he ſits, not ſtands, it being placed in an Oratory apart. Chap. XI.

Sometimes they paſs about by little Portals to the Door of the Temple, ſuch an Oſtle being left open, as we ſee in great Gates of Noblemens Houſes, that he who is about to go in, muſt firſt take heed leſt he break his Shins, before he ſtoop to make his Entrance: This Place carries ſomething ſolemn about it; when it is ſhut up, the Pulpit receives a ſmall Light through Grates inſtead of Windows.

The Colleges in Spahaun are moſtly founded and endowed by Royal Donation, partly by others. Colleges.

There are Twenty or Thirty Fair Ones that have Incomes, and many more whoſe Mannors are devolved by a tacit Preſcript into Secular Hands. To every College there is a Preſident over the Students, and another over the Fabrick, who lets out the Chambers, and receives the Rents, diſpoſing them as he pleaſes, and diſplacing at pleaſure: Every Chamber has One, Two, Three, or more Students, where they ſit and lye; to this the ordinary Door ſtands for a Window; there are no Forms or Benches, more than an old Moth-eaten Carpet, not fit for a Gypſy's Mantle, for to uſe, either for Repoſe or other purpoſe.

The Number of Scholars in each depends upon the Numbet of Chambers, and the Conſtancy of the Revenues, there being in ſome not above Forty, in others from an Hundred to an Hundred and fifty: He who is elected into theſe, lives ſparingly and ſeparately, not eating in common Halls, having no more allowed than two or three Gosbeeks a Day, which is about ſo many Stivers or Farthings, from the Preſident; if theſe are not enough, then he aſſigns the Tranſcription of ſuch and ſuch Books to his Aid, for which they are paid. There are alſo three, four, or more Servants in conſtant Salary from the College, which any Student may of Right command to buy Fruit for their Food, and fetch them other Neceſſaries; who ſometimes, Illiterate as they are, go away with ſome of the College Revenues, and are reckoned among the Students; being fitter to ſhoe Horſes, or drive a Wain with Veſpaſian's Charioteer, than to ſhare in that Character.

Their Balneos or Hummums are the moſt ſumptuous, which are in all their Cities, always hot; and it is lawful for every one of both Sexes, on ſtated times of the Day to bath for a ſmall Price: The Prepoſitor of each Houſe gives Notice to all Comers by blowing an Horn, when the Houſes are ready to attend them; of which there are innumerable deſtined to theſe uſes, each ſtriving to outſhine the other; inſomuch that no time either of Day or Night paſſes, but you ſhall hear perpetual Noiſes of Horns to invite you to them; for no ſooner is the Fire kindled under them, but they let every one know by thoſe loud Inſtruments. Hummums, or Balneos.

In which Places the Treatment is alike to all; for as before was ſaid in the Church and Inns, ſo in the Hot-Houſes all things are common to all: Wherefore if any one deſire to be freed from the Vulgar gar Rout, he muſt hire an Houſe for a whole Day; which may be done, if he pay the uſual Expence and Income of that Day, which Chriſtians are always obliged to, where they have not Balneos of their own to reſort to; for the Perſians preſume too Phariſaically on theſe Baths, judging thereby all their Offences to be waſhed away; according to that of Lactantius, Flagitiis omnibus inquinati veniunt, & ſemet ſacrificaſſe opinantur, ſi cutem laverint; tanquam libidines intra pectus incluſas, ulla amnis abluat aut maria ulla purificent: They come polluted with the heinouſeſt Sins, and think when they have waſhed they have attoned by a ſufficient Sacrifice; as if any River or Sea could purify their Luſts included in their Hearts.

Letter V.

Theſe Houſes are beneath the Earth, only ſome little round Globes embelliſh'd with Painted Glaſs peep out above the Ground to give Light, and are well clos'd, leſt the ambient Air ſhould offend by too forcible a Ventilation through any neglected Creviſe: They are built with divers diſtinct Cells one from another, in which Men ſit, are rubbed, and cleanſed: Immediately within the Porch is the greateſt Cell, or rather a large Room, where they d'off their Cloaths, and being undreſſed leave their Garments; in the middle of this Place is a Cyſtern of cold Water coming into it by ſeveral Pipes: All the other Cells are ſo conveniently framed, that every one may breathe a different Air as to the degrees of Heat, ſuch as may ſuit with the divers Temperaments of ſeveral Bodies, ſince every Conſtitution requires not the ſame Bath: For as Galen has left it written in lib. 7. Morb. Med. Some want an Hot, others a Tepid, and others a Cold Bath, as Hectical Habits declare.

The Pavements are all Marble, on which, the more Hot Water is thrown, the more it increaſes the Heat, although at the ſame time the Subterranean Fire be as Hot as it can be: On theſe Marble Floors they at laſt extend themſelves, when they think they have tarried in long enough, that the Barbers, whoſe buſineſs it is, ſhould wind and turn every Limb and Joint of the Body, before, behind, and on every ſide, with that Dexterity and Slight, that it is admirable to behold them perform it; whereby they leave no Muſcle, Nerve, or ſuperficial Joint, either unmov'd, or not rubb'd: Then with a courſe Hair-cloth and Hot Water they ſcrape off all the Filth and Sweat; and laſt of all by a Depilatory they take clean away all manner of Hairs growing either in Secret Parts, or any Emunctuary to cauſe either naſty Smells, or troubleſome chafing.

When they retire to put on their Cloaths, (this is to be only underſtood of Great Men) there waits them a Collation of Fruit, Sweetmeats, and variety of Perfumes, as Roſewater, Rackbeet, and the like, with all befitting Attendants, beſides the uſual Servitors, to adminiſter either Coho, Tea, Tobacco, or Brandy, if faint. When they are dreſs'd, they emplaiſter their Feet and Hands with a Red Paſte, which wonderfully helps ſweaty and moiſt Palms, as alſo ſtinking Feet.

Theſe things being premiſed, the Benefits coming from the uſe of theſe are, when the Body is inflamed and dried by immoderate Heat, it is finely refreſhed by ſweet Water, and the Pores become moiſten'd; the farther proſecution of which Advantages having been ſpoken of before, before, I refer you thither, and proceed to the other Houſes of Reſort, which are only for the Men, and not for the Women. Chap. XI.

Their Coffee-houſes, where they ſell Coho, better than any among us, which being boiled, has a Black Oil or Cream ſwimming at top, and when it has not, they refuſe to drink it: Hither repair all thoſe that are covetous of News, as well as Barterers of Goods; where not only Fame and common Rumour is promulged, but Poetry too, for ſome of that Tribe are always preſent to reherſe their Poems, and diſperſe their Fables to the Company; ſo true is it, ἐξ ἀργείας πράγματα, Ex Otio Negotium, That their Buſineſs proceeds from Idleneſs. Their Coffee-houſes.

They are modell'd after the Nature of our Theatres, that every one may ſit around, and ſuck choice Tobacco out of long Malabar Canes, faſten'd to Chryſtal Bottles, like the Recipients or Bolt-heads of the Chymiſts, with a narrow Neck, where the Bole or Head of the Pipe is inſerted, a ſhorter Cane reaching to the bottom, where the long Pipe meets it, the Veſſel being filled with Water: After this ſort they are mightily pleaſed; for putting fragrant and delightful Flowers into the Water, upon every attempt to draw Tobacco, the Water bubbles, and makes them dance in various Figures, which both qualifies the Heat of the Smoke, and creates together a pretty Sight.

At Night here are abundance of Lamps lighted, and let down in Glaſſes from the Concave Part of the Roof, by Wires or Ropes, hanging in a Circle.

The Buzzars having been mentioned before, I ſhall only add, That however Great all their other Buildings are, yet theſe carry away the Glory from them all; as much as the Halls of the Citizens of London exceed Noblemens Houſes about the City, being the Work and Buſineſs of Joint-Stocks; and their Shews and Entertainments are as Pompous as Princes, however ſparingly they live at their own Homes: For theſe being the joint Advantage both of the Emperor and his Subjects, he encourages their forwardneſs in adorning theſe, though he ſuppreſſes all their Extravagancy of Garb, or Exorbitancy in Building, if it bears not with it the becoming Deſign of giving him the greateſt Share of Honour in the Foundation.

Their Bridges are made either of Brick or Stone, and want neither for Skill or Ornament in their Contrivance; and are chiefly built for Oſtentation, or to preſerve their Memories, as their other great Buildings are: They are of more Uſe to join divided Rocks for Paſſengers, than to lay over Rivers; the former of which are more frequent in the Road to the Port than the other.

Of the present Inhabitants; of the Jews being interspersed ever since the Captivity of Babylon; the Custom of exoculating their Princes; Nobility among the Persians; the Esteem they have of the Emperor's Person being Divine; his Name and Succession: Of the English overthrowing the Portugals at Ormus; the Procession of the Court; its Grandeur, and Reception of Ambassadors: Of the Suffees; of their Cavalry, Infantry, Seamen, and Navy.

The present Persians Scythians.

THE Inhabitants of this City, as well as of all Persia (the Ancient Stock being, as it were, extinct) spring from the Overflow of the Northern Scythians, by whom the Native Persians were either totally expell'd, or so suppress'd, as to remain of no Account among them: These notwithstanding, by the Benefit of the Climate, have chang'd so much of their innate Roughness, as they have acquired the more coruscant Beauty inherent in the Temper of the Air; for they are of a delicate Composure of Body, Tall and Strait, especially the Women, who though not generally so proper, yet excel in Softness of Texture, and Comeliness of Form: Their Outside is no false Indication of their Natural Ingenuity, which exceeds all the Eastern People both for Facetiousness of Wit, Civil Behaviour, and Gallantry in Appearance, as much as they do the Barbarous Africans.

They cohabit generally with their Relations together in one House, or at least as near one the other as it is possible.

Jews here ever since the Captivity.

Jews are among them of the same Antiquity as the Exportation from Jerusalem to Babylon, who live in the same Cities, though in distinct Streets, and with less Mark of Reproach here than elsewhere: But how far their Liberties extend, I pretend not to tell; only they congregate on their Sabbaths, New Moons, and Feast-days, in full Synagogues, without any Disturbance.

Here are store of Banyans, dwelling in their great Inns, but degenerate from the strict Indian Banyans, indulging themselves in most sorts of Flesh, and all kind of Wines.

In this City of Spahaun, besides the Romish Monks, Us, the Belgian Representative, and the Polish Ambassador, are no Christians suffered to live; the rest repair to Jelfa among the Armenians, unless accidentally some Strangers tarry a Night or two in a Caravan Ser Raw, which are the Receptacles of all Foreigners.

On the Death of their Emperor, the new one causes his Brothers and near Relations Eyes to be put out.

These being of a lower Orb, creep safely on the Ground, while those exalted to an higher Sphere, like Fortune its self, are set on slippery Places, and are deprived of their Eye-sight. Long since that Barbarity has been exploded here, which as soon as the Witnesses of Virility appeared, to testify their being Men not of an Hours Birth, or of a Minutes rather, were delivered to bloody Villains, crueller than than Beasts, (whose unrelenting Mercy spar'd not the Royal Infants Cries) to make away inhumanly, or at least suddenly dispatch them. Such is the fatal necessity of Tyrants, that least can credit those that are most allied to them; which addition to their Crimes they think is somewhat extenuated by exoculating them only at this Court; whereby they are render'd uncapable of the Throne, (being to be presented to the Supreme Government, like the Levites in the Old Law, without Blemish, being whole in every Member): But certainly those are bound up in hard Circumstances, who to avoid Disputes of Succession to the Crown, unmercifully butcher Tender Innocents, hurrying them to Execution as soon as they have escaped Imprisonment from their Mothers Womb: On this Basis the Old Monarchy of the Persians was founded, as if no other Cement could so firmly knit, as Blood.

And at this Instant their Jealousy is so fervent, that they keep their Sons like Captives, till the Father's Death enlarges the Eldest; when the Younger Brothers, Uncles, and Nephews on both sides, on the Appearance of the Rising Sun, see their last: As if the Blood-Royal were prophan'd, unless they fled to the Hot Iron, as the only means to expiate for its Affinity; which being drawn over the most sensible Parts (their Eyes), strikes from the Rays of their Kinsman's Diadem such a Sparkling Lustre, as for ever after makes them irrecoverably blind; to seek Recovery whereof, or any for them, is a Treason unpardonable. So abhorrent are they of a Partner or a Rival in Empire, that they endure not any to emulate or outdo them by an overforward Strain of Loyalty, whereby they might seem obliged to their Subjects, or that they should outshine them by a Popular Affection, however meritorious their Deeds have been; whereby they teach their Children perfect Obedience, before they permit them to think of Command.

But whether by this way it is best; to be conversant with Toothless Old Women, Ignorant and Effeminate Eunuchs, a Tutor more versed in Books than the Affairs of the World, and all these bound in the highest Allegiance to their Liege, is a fitter Topick for the Machiavilians of our Age, than for me to handle. Although Plutarch has delivered this as a Maxim to Posterity, Those who are generously and Princely instructed, let them be compared with these, and the difference will presently discover its self which is the more eligible Education: But for the Good of the Chief Ministers of State, it is more profitable, I confess, to keep their Princes Judgments always in Minority, provided they can thereby make them more pliable to their Ends and Designs.

Nobles by Birth among the Persians.

Contrary to the Principles of the rest of the East, Nobility is regarded and maintained among the Persians, confiding rather in their Homebred Honesty, than entertaining Mercenary Foreigners in their Armies, to whose Fidelity and Conduct most other Countries commit their greatest Strength, while these rely on their own Subjects: For though they claim Nobility of Race, yet they are not of the same Stock with the Royal Line, and therefore (content to move beneath) aspire not to the Top of Empire; nor can they stretch out their Hands to the Diadem, without apparent Usurpation, which thoſe of an Equal Order would oppoſe, as having as good a Title thereto as the bold Violator himſelf; which they who are of a more ſublime Spirit would never brook, much leſs bear ſuch an Indignity, or pay Homage and Reſpect to One they muſt have in Scorn and Contempt. On this Account it is they have ample Lordſhips aſſigned them, which they poſſeſs by Inheritance and Lawful Right, with the ſame Tenor as our Barons, who are before others in Wealth and Honour, but are ſomething reſtrained in their Power, leſt they ſhould take up Arms againſt their King.

The Emperor often rewards theſe with great Offices and high Employments, where he finds Deſert meet with the Grandeur of their Birth; gracing them with his Commands the rather, becauſe (to their Eternal Renown be it ſpoken) they ſeldom deſert their Sovereign, or prove unfaithful to the Throne: So innate a Steddineſs being ingrafted in their Souls, to conform themſelves to their Maſter's Wills, that they are always found obſequious; which if it be not altogether to be attributed to their Virtue, muſt admit of the Dread the Anger of their Emperor impreſſes (being like the Roaring of a Lion), which frights the trembling Herds among the Woods; for their Lives are immediately at his Diſpoſe, which keeps them in Awe.

The Government Hierarchical.

They eſteem their Emperors not only as Lords Paramount, but reverence them as Sons of the Prophets, whoſe Dominion therefore is grounded more on Hierarchy than bare Monarchy. For as of old the Perſians adored the Sun as a Deity, and celebrated his riſing with Morning Hymns, and were daily employed in Sacred Anthems to its Praiſe; ſo now from Idolaters becoming Infidels, they ſtill eſpouſe the Divine Right as well as Lineage of their Sovereigns: From which fond Belief, the Potenteſt General at the Head of a Puiſſant Army, or the Provincial Cauns, though ſurrounded with Legions of Soldiers, upon the Arrival of a ſingle Chuper (that is, a Poſt with Royal Order), attended with no other Warrant than being one of the King's Creatures, and he pronouncing Death from the Emperor, they lay down their Heads without any Tumult, with an entire Reſignation to their Maſter's Pleaſure.

They refuſe the Emperor nothing he commands.

And what is yet more ungrateful to men of their Jealouſy, (it being ſo baſe and diſhoneſt, that no Reparation can be made among the Moors for an Indignity of that kind) if he commands them on the great Feſtival (begun by Ahaſuerus, and continued to this Day by the Perſian Monarchs, an Hundred and Fourſcore Days every Year) to bring their own proper Wives to Court, to remain there all that time proſtitute to his Luſt; this ſo hated a thing they are ſo far from refuſing, that they obey him in every thing, no leſs than an Immortal God.

From which piece of Service, no Man that is known to have an Handſome Woman to his Wife, is exempted; for after his Pimps and Panders have had the Scent, he is not long from the Hunt with a full Cry: To that end, in whatſoever Quarter of the City the Puſs ſquats, he ſets up his Crook, or Interdict, that no Man preſume to ſtay within doors, till he be paſſed whither he intends; but in the mean while, the Females are permitted, nay, commanded to ſtay at home, and ſo he comes and finds the Form, and then is ſure not to miſs of his Game. But to cloſe up this; ſo devoted are they to him, that as the Ancient Hebrews ſwore by their King's Health; the Egyptians, by the Life of Pharaoh; the Romans, by Cæſar's Honour; they have no more obliging Teſt, than Seir Pedeſhaw, By the Emperor's Head.

Whereon is grounded the Emperor's Security.

On theſe Terms it is, that the Affairs at home, and of the Militia abroad, are ſo negligently treated, by the Emperor's being thoroughly aſſured of his Peoples Integrity and Allegiance; all the ſtrong Caſtles and Places through the whole Realm hereupon being demoliſhed, or lying in Ruins; unleſs ſome few near the Confines of Turky, and Candahar, taken from the Indians; ſlighting them only as Neſts for Thieves and Robbers, well knowing when it comes to the Puſh, the Mountains will prove the better Security: Nor is the Army at preſent in a much forwarder Poſture for Fight, it being vilely defective in its Muſters; but the worſt provided of all are the Fleets in either Seas.

His Wealth.

When at the ſame time the Treaſury never more abounded in Caſh, holding thereby the Sinews of War in his own hands; for which reaſon he ſleeps, while the Burthen of the Kingdom is rejected, and the Weight thereof lies on the Chancellor's Shoulders. He has not for theſe Eleven Months paſt ſtirred out of his Palace, nor on any occaſion ſhewed himſelf in publick; which hath created matter of doubt to the Populacy, whether he be well, or ſeized with any Diſtemper: But thoſe that are better informed (for even the Actions of Princes cannot eſcape being canvaſs'd, however abſolute they are) ſuſpect him to be wallowing in his Libidinous Courſe of Life.

His Courſe of Life.

He lives like a Tyrant in his Den; for his Domeſticks and his Whores, with whom he commits Beſtialities (which are innumerable) often feel his Cruelty by unheard of Tortures; as witneſs the dilacerated Bodies found after the Removal of his Tents on any Progreſs; in confirmation whereof are many living Examples about this City, of thoſe that have been his Menial Servants, converſant about his neceſſary Affairs, who ſlipping in any one Point, are daily to be ſeen eſcaping with their Lives, but not without the loſs of ſome Member, ſacrific'd to the Rage of an unreaſonable Maſter. He is a Winebibber and a Drunkard; they reporting, That he is able, after his full Doſe has already made him reel, to drink a large Flask, more than a Gallon, of Siras Wine, before he can be ſaid to finiſh this Exploit by a ſilent conſenting to have had enough: Nor can Sleep heal him, for as ſoon as he hath outworn his Doſe, he with moſt greedy haſte returns to his Vomit before he comes to himſelf; or if by chance he happen to be ſober, the Brute gets up, and he is loſt among the Women: To crown all, he is curſedly Covetous, beneath the Majeſty of ſo great a Monarch, repining even at ordinary Expences: Whoſe Name, for fear it ſhould periſh, we come next to mention.

His Name and Genealogy.

The Emperor's Name is Shaw Schelymon, or King Solomon, the Son of Shaw Abas; not of him that was truly ſtiled the Great; but however, he may be called, The Good, being a Lover of Chriſtians; by

by the Father's ſide, of the Sophian Extract; by the Mother's, of the Houſe of Georgia, which Illuſtrious Dame ſtill lives the Relict of her Worthy Husband; ſo that he is ſprung from Kings of long Continuance: Which to underſtand the more clearly, we are to unfold the Succeſſion from Sardanapalus his Reign, the laſt from Nimrod: After his killing himſelf, the Empire was divided into the Monarchy of the Aſſyrians, Chaldeans, and Medes.

Begun by Arbaces in the Year of the World, 3146. and ended by Cyrus, who reſtored the Ancient Honour to the Perſian Sway; to whom ſucceeded Cambyſes. After him, the Impoſtor Smerdis obtained the Kingdom by the Craft of the Magi, until the Noble Otanes diſcovered him not to be the true and lawful Brother of Cambyſes. When by the general Suffrage it was agreed, That he of Seven Competitors ſhould be Emperor, whoſe Horſe ſhould Neigh firſt after they came to the Place appointed for the Choice; which Lot fell upon Darius Hydaſpes, through the Cunning of his Groom, who cauſed his Maſters Horſe to Leap a Mare the Day before in the ſame Place. From him Xerxes and Artaxerxes Longimanus were elevated to the Supreme Dignity; from whom Darius the Mede, vanquiſhed by Alexander, was the Fifth in order; at whoſe Deceaſe the Power was diſtracted among the Captains of the Conqueror; till Artabaces reunited it to Parthia firſt of all; then Artaxerxes, by Caracalla and Macrinus their Treacheries, cutting off Artabanus the laſt Parthian King, again Enthroned the Perſians; who alternately reigned the ſpace of Eight and twenty Kings, and then obſcured by the Confluence of the Saracens; who continued till the Year of our Redemption, 1030; in which they implored Tangrolope and the Turk to accept the Royal Seat; from whoſe Promotion Cuſſanus was the Third, who was expelled in the Year 1202 by the Great Cham. Haalam was the firſt conſtituted King of the Tartarian Race: From him Abuzaid was the Ninth, who dying, they ſtrove among themſelves for the Kingdom; when Gemſus delivered himſelf and his Countrey from the Slavery it groaned under; whoſe Progeny at laſt Tamberlane, or Timurlan, extirpated. Timurlan's Dynaſty being ſoon ſpent, Cuſſanes the Armenian preſently put an end to that Stock, in the Year 1471; who gave his Daughter in Marriage to Adir Sophi, or rather Suffee, which ſignifies White; in Arabic, Suffet; wherefore Spahaun is corruptly ſo called, it being in the Perſian Language Suffahaun, or the City of the Whites; which ſince the Irruption of Tamerlane, the Scythians affect as well here as in India, (Mogul, as we have ſaid, ſignifying no more in Indoſtan); which I purpoſely inſert, having promiſed before to give the reaſon why this City ſhould be called Suffahaun, as the Perſians now do call it, and not Spahaun, or Iſpahaun, as Strangers pronounce it.

The Suffees introduc'd, from whom Spahaun is called Suffahaun.

Craving leave for this Digreſſion; Adir Suffee, the Son of Guin Suffee, receiving Cuſſane's Daughter as his Wife, was enabled to revive the loſt Caliphſhip, a long while continued in his Family (tho obſcurely), deriving it from Muſa Ceraſa, one of Hali's Twelve Succeſſors; from which time till then it lay buried, as well by their own Diviſions, as the Malice of the Turks, who diſown that Extract of the Caliphſhip with the ſame Inveteracy to each others Claims, as as among us Papiſts and Proteſtants we diſpute about the Lawful Succeſſor of our Saviour; for Haly took the Daughter of the falſe Prophet Mahomet to Wife, and thence took upon him and bore away the Succeſſion of the Caliphs amongſt the Perſians; Repudiating Abubequer, or Abubezar, Omor and Oſman, in right of Mahomet's Brother, with all the Turkiſh Followers; and thus the Suffean proclaim Mortis Haly the next of Kin, being Son-in-law to Mahomet, and in that Right Lawfully inducted into the Caliphſhip; and though hereby in proceſs of time the Caliphſhip and Empire were united, Adir Suffee maintaining his Claim and his Sons, at laſt got honourably enough into the Throne; yet here aroſe matter of perpetual Animoſity, never to be extinguiſhed, while the Omerans, whence ſpring the Ottoman Family and Sect, ſtill Oppoſe, Contradict, and Perſecute the Suffean Sect. Chap. XII.

Inſomuch that the laſt Imaum, or the laſt of the Twelve falſe Apoſtles, from Haly, by Name Mahomet Mehdi Saheb Elzamon, i. e. The Lord of Times, being taken by the Snares of the Omerans they would have ſlain him; when (ſay the Perſians) God rendred him Inviſible, and retains him out of harms way, and Alive, till Beggage come; which with us is rendred Antichriſt; then the Lord of Times ſhall appear and ſhall reduce all thoſe that are led away by Magical Inchantments, into the right way; declaring moreover, Chriſt Hazare Taiſſa at that time ſhall be reſtored to the Living, and be received by Mahomet Mehdi into his Service; that by his Prayers and Meritorious Interceſſion, he, with all the Faithful Mahometans, may be partakers of eternal Glory at the Day of Judgment. Not underſtanding in the mean time, that at the name of Jeſus every knee ſhall bow, both of things above and things below; and that there is no other name given in earth or heaven whereby we can be ſaved.

And while the Turks and Perſians contend at this rate, it is alone the pretence of an everlaſting War, while the Perſians Eſpouſe the Suffee, being uncertain where to place the Caliphſhip after the Aſſaſſination of Mahomet Mehdi, and the Inter-regnum thence enſuing, better than on this Adir Suffee, who though he was ſlain by Cuſſanes his Succeſſors, was afterwards revenged by Iſmael his Son, who was firſt ſaluted King of Perſia, as well as acknowledged Caliph by right of Conſanguinity; obtaining the firſt by right of Conqueſt Two hundred Years and more, after the Caliphſhip was covered in the Embers of Oblivion raked up, and in the Perſian Annals is ſet down;

Letter V.

Commanded by Captain Joseph Wedal, when England was at Wars with Portugal, and Imaum Cooly Caun, the famous Warrier-General of the Emperor of Persia's Forces, was then set down against Ormus, and all the Harbours the Portugals had in Possession on this side the Gulf; which Ship of our Nation coming in, the Captain was implored to Assist the Persians against his and the Emperor's Enemies; which the General asking, the Sea Captain consented to.

Articles of Agreement between the English and Persians.

First Stipulating, That the Persian Soldiers should not meddle with the Spoils before the English Mariners were satisfied; (which were such of all sorts of Jewels, Gold and Silver, that they refused to carry off any more).

Secondly, That Bunder Abassee, now Gombroon, should Yearly divide Half the Customs between the English and Persians, and that whatever English Ship should enter the Port should be free from any manner of Tribute.

Thirdly, That it should be Lawful for them to Transport Twenty Horses, of which Number Two might be Mares, Yearly.

Provided First, That the English should keep Two Men of War constantly to defend the Gulf. And,

Secondly, That they should deliver the Portugals Forts into the Persians hands; in doing which the English should always be esteemed the Emperor's Friends. And,

Lastly, Should have the First Seat in the Council, and their Agents be looked on with equal Grace to their Prime Nobility.

The Articles being Ratified on either side, the Enterprise is undertaken; though of it self it was too great an Action for one Ship to perform, or even a well-appointed Navy, had they been upon their Guard (or any Commander to Promise without the Consent of the King his Master) wherefore the English betake themselves to Stratagem, and gaining leave to Careen their Ship under their Guns, whilst the Portugals dreamt nothing less, they poured in Men (the Persians being hid under Deck) at unawares, that they were put into a Consternation before they could think of their Defence; whereby they became Masters presently of the Castle, strengthned both by Sea and Land, by this unexpected Attempt Vanquished, which otherwise was Invincible; being possessed whereof by this Rape, the rest of the Island soon fell prostrate to the Lust of the Surprisers; and the English having got their Booty, left the Christians (Oh Impiety)! to be spoiled by the Infidels.

Vengeance pursues the Enterprisers.

Which thing, as it gained us Esteem among the Persians, was the utter Ruin of the Lusitanian Greatness, it ever since declining, and is almost at its fatal Catastrophe; for immediately upon this, their Fleet before Muschat is Defeated, and they were driven out of all their strong Places in the Gulf, so that the Loss was greater than if they had lost Mosambique, from whence they have their Gold; because all the Trade of the World centred here, all Merchandize both going and coming paid them Tribute; that the Wealth of this place thus entred was incredible; yet to see the just Vengeance (where (where private Avarice and Self is preferred before Virtue and Honesty, and a due Respect to the only Supreme Deity) overtakes those Wretches who were the cause of their Overthrow. How it fell out with the Persians, who seemed to have the juster Cause, I cannot tell; but some of Those People now alive, who were the Undoers of These, are as Miserable, and it may be more, than those they made so; the Captain's Children having been known to go anights to the Brew-house for Grains for their Subsistence, and the rest of them who are still surviving are the unhappy scorn of all that know them; whereas they thought by this deed to have purchased a lasting Fame, and lived to have enjoyed their Ill-got Goods; which how it did thrive at home, those from whose Information I take this, have been, in part, Eye-witnesses; but here I am sure, at this time both Persians, Arabs, and Turks, fare the better for it, while they have divided among themselves what was entirely the Portugals; the Persians in the mean while doing what they please with us, so that at this present, all things considered, they allow us little more than a Name; but even here the truth must be confessed, it is because we have no Ships to guard the Gulf; which if done, and the Persians could be made to stand to their first Terms, in my Opinion must turn to a good account, and be a thing of greater concern than can be well managed by less than a Royal Company; though as things now stand they have free recourse to Tigris and Euphrates, this Sea being open, which was always kept shut by the Portugals, to their no small profit. Chap. XII.

This Emperor, Shaw Abas, in whose time this was Atchiev'd, was Cotemporary with our King James I. who had been happy in a Son, if the Fates had not envied so great a Man his Father's Favour; but for his Virtue he reaped Hatred; for there were not wanting fawning Parasytes, who abused the Emperor's Ears by spreading abroad, and casting out words, as if his Son Mirza Suffee courted the Popular Air; whereupon he withdrew his Countenance, and deprived him of the common Light, by that barbarous Custom of the hot Iron drawn over his Eye-balls; but seeing that could not sufficiently break his Spirit, he having gone thus far, could not rest till he had perfected his Mortality by Poyson: Thus what Virtue had raised to full growth, Jealousy soon cut off, although he could leave no better Effigies of his Manners, Virtue, Constancy, Piety, and towardly Disposition, than his Son Suffee; to whom our Countryman Dreyden has ventured to give Immortality in his Tragedy called, The Sophy; which move together. In the beginning of his Reign, like another Nero, he gave good Specimens of his Inclinations, not unworthy the Heroes that were his Ancestors; but when he began to hearken to Flatterers, and give himself over to Idleness, he left off to Govern, and listed himself in the service of Cruelty, Drunkenness, Gluttony, Lasciviousness, and abominable Extortion, where he perpetrated things not only uncomely to be seen, but even offensive to the Ears; wherefore at his libidinous Feasts, to enquire what he transacts, or how he behaves himself, is fitter for an Aretin than a modest Author.

The way of receiving Ambassadors.

But when he is enthroned and encompassed with the flower of his Courtiers, and gives Audience to Foreign Ministers; the manner is thus:

An Ambassador is Introduced his Presence by the Master of the Ceremonies, who instructs him and tells him his Duty; the Emperor is Seated on a Throne alone, boulstred up by Embroidered Cushions; his Counsellors are placed behind him, with Caps on, proper to the Kings and Magi of Persia, the Emperor being distinguished only by one White Plume of Feathers from theirs; when the Ambassador enters his Presence, he makes three profound Obeysances, after which he is permitted to deliver his Message, and then produces his Presents to the Emperor, having gratified the Chief Officers before his Admission.

Those Men of Note that are Governors, or Cauns, stand now attending with Guns hung over their Shoulders, performing the Service of our Gentlemen Pensioners: If the Emperor is pleased to Honour the Person entring, or is pleased with the Message, he orders him to sit at his Feet, and a Table to be richly spread: About the King stand Vessels of Gold beset with Gems, and the Carpets, are of high Value, one of which, not a Yard Square, I saw worth Fourscore Thomands; and all his Plates he Eats out of, are Gold inlaid, or beset with Jewels, as well as the Cups he Drinks out of; as Lipsius Notes the Custom of Old; Capacibus gemmis inter se propinarent: So Lucan, Gemmæque capaces excipere Merum; and Cicero confirms it in ver. 4. Non pauca pocula ex auro, quæ ut mos est, Regibus & maxime in Syria gemmis erant distincta clarissimis.

Whatever Cup the Ambassador is drunk to out of by the Emperor, whether of Gold Enammelled, or beset with Jewels, it is filled with the same Liquor, and the Cup is his Fee of Right, which, first Pledging the Emperor, he receives and carries away with him: The Civility of the Court being passed, he is Clothed with his Retinue in an honourable Habit; and if the Petition be granted, he wears the Pharmond open in his Turbat, to be seen by all as he is reconducted from the Palace to his Lodging.

When the King pleases to Mount on Horseback, he is guarded by a mighty Band of Horsemen that follow him; before him pass a Legion of Footmen, all with Guns, and Shotters, or Pages, about his Horse in great Crouds; these all wear Feathers; the first in a kind of Hat or Steeple-Crowned Cap, the other in their Turbats, which are covered with them, but the Gunmen have only one Plume bolt upright; the others are of any Colour, and sometimes many Colours.

The Procession of the Seraglio, or Haram.

When the Emperor marches out with his Women, and all the Seraglio, it is forbidden the Day before by a Publick Cryer, for any Man on pain of Death to invade his Walks; nor is it lawful for any one to stay within doors, though sick or decrepit with Age, till the Female Procession is passed by; which observes this Order; The King, like a Dunghil Cock, struts at the Head of the Amazonian Army; him, his Mother follows, and the Royal Consorts, which are reckoned as Wives; all the rest, Concubines or Slaves, according to the Grace they have merited; carrying Hawks on their Fists, get a straddle on Horseback, bearing Consort to the Musick Gereed, i. e. Tilt and Turnament, play with the Ball as Men do. For this Effeminate Shew, Virgil's Description for Dido may serve:

Oceanum interea surgens Aurora reliquit,
It portis jubare exorto castrata juventus,
Retia rura plagæ, lato venabula ferro
Regem quem Thalamis cunctantem ad limina prima Charbaug Astroque insignis & auro,
Stat sonipes ac fræna ferox spumantia mandit.
Tandem progreditur magna stipante Caterva;
Illi Londina estque chlamys circumdata limbo
His pharetra ex humeris crines noduntur in unum.

The early Morn had left the Sea,
And flaming Day bore Company;
When the Gelt Youth afore the doors,
Stood pimping to the King and 's Whores;
With Nets and Toils for Countrey Sport,
At the Charbaug expect the Court;
Where in as ample manner wait
The fiery Courser, full of State;
Bedeck'd with Gold he chews the Bit,
And paws and foams as he were hit.
At length comes forth with a great Train,
The mighty Monarch through a Lane:
A Scarlet Cloak, edg'd with a Welt,
Was thrown him o're, and hid his Belt.
But the Women that went with him,
Were clad with Silk, and may be Linen.
Yet all their Hair was ti'd in Braids,
And Bow and Arrow by their sides.

If he chuse a Nocturnal Perambulation, he makes them put on the Dress of the several Nations they belong to; Europeans in Hat and Feather; Turks, Indians, and Arabians, in their own Habit; and having Tapers in their hands they go two and two abreast; and between every third File an Eunuch with a large Flambeaux marches, both as a Spy and Guard.

Letter V.

The Soldiers that are to guard the Outskirts, are relieved by a Band of Eunuchs, who line the Way for their Paſſage, and ſpare none that are led out of Curioſity to behold this Sight; but upon diſcovery, never examining who they are, diſcharge their Pieces, as if they had found a Wild Beaſt; for which they receive great Commendation from the King, and are rewarded with great Gifts, getting thereby into the Chief Places of Truſt in the Family.

The Gruelty of the Black Eunuchs.

The moſt ready for this Miſchief are the Black Eunuchs, the White being generally more ſparing of Life, and leſs inclined to ſuch unnatural Barbarities; wherefore he has Regiments of both, the one to ſerve his Pleaſure, the other his Black Purpoſe.

Thus is the Life of this Prince taken up, rarely permitting himſelf to be ſeen either by Strangers or his own Subjects; according to that Ancient Axiom of the Empire, Majeſtati major è longinquo reverentia; as if they feared that of Livy, Continuus aſpectus minus verendos magnos homines facit; Leſt an often appearing to the Vulgar ſhould make them contemptible and common.

The Cavalry.

But that which he leaſt cares for, is to go forth armed at the Head of his Army, againſt his Enemies, chuſing rather to be Terrible at Home under the Perſian Banner, (which when diſplayed, is, A Bloody Sword with a double Point, in a White Field, and is always carried next the Emperor's Perſon) than become Formidable abroad to his Foes: Let others reap thoſe hazardous Praiſes of Grinning Honour, he has no Stomach nor no Mind to Feats of Arms, whilſt Colorogoſſe, the Generaliſſimo, leads the Hoſt.

Corgee Baſhee, Adjutant-General, is next him, Commander of Twelve thouſand Horſe.
Min Baſhee is a Colonel of a Thouſand Horſe.
Eus Baſhee, Captain of an Hundred Horſe.

Below this Office none of Noble Extract will accept, chuſing rather to ride Volunteers till they gain Preferment, being liſted Goloomy Shaws, the King's Slaves, which is a Titlé they of the higheſt Dignity pride themſelves in.

Under theſe, thoſe who compoſe the Main Body of the Cavalry, are the Cuſle Baſhees, or with us, the Chevaliers; who are not left quite without hopes of riſing by a juſt Deſert, for the Prize lies open to them as well as others; and they are often advanced on that ſcore to great Authority, both to animate them to atchieve, and their Superiors to prevent their being put over their heads; for, Ubi honos non eſt, ibi cupiditas gloriæ eſſe non poteſt: Where Honour is not the Recompence, there can hardly be a deſire of Glory. Wherefore of theſe are made Sub-centurions, Commanders of Fifty, and ſo downwards to Ten Horſes.

Their Arms, and manner of fighting.

Theſe, agreeable to the Old Scythian Cuſtom, ſmite their Enemies with Arrows at a diſtance, and Hand to Fiſt fight with Sword and Spear, (though they are long ſince skill'd in Weapons of another nature, as Guns and Piſtols.) Their Bows are ſhorter than ours, not made of Wood, but glutinated Horn; which being not ſo long, makes them more ſerviceable on Horſeback; but being made of Horn, they are are less fit for Rainy Weather: They draw their Bows with the Thumb armed with an Horn Ring, not after the same manner as our Archers do. The full number of their Cavalry may be Sixty thousand Horsemen compleat, many whereof are double-hors'd; out of so great a Strength, Six thousand Horsemen are upon constant Duty every day.

The Suffees, a Warlike Order of Church Militants.

More than these, as a Guard du Corps to the King's Majesty, when he is to take the Air abroad (within doors they are Footmen, abroad Horsemen) a select Band wait on his Person, of the same Race with the King, challenging Kindred with Adir Suffee, but of a lower Stock than to conspire against the Empire, and are therefore bound in a common Tye of Consanguinity to preserve a firm Faith for the Head of their Tribe, as well as the Common Father of the Countrey: And since their Pretence reaches no higher than a Superstitious Affinity, or Adoption rather, the Throne is so far out of danger by them, that they are the Chief Pillars that support it; they being allowed to brag both of their being of the Blood of their Emperor and their Prophet, which obliges them to a double Obedience both of Children and Subjects.

Erected to check the Siads.

The countenancing of this Sect, is not to be ascribed to this plausible Argument, more than to put a Check to the growing Perverseness of the Siads, boasting their Original from Mahomet himself, and to be more immediately sprung from his House and Lineage: These are so bold as to infringe the Royal Prerogatives, and to let the Emperor know, That whenever he girts his Sword about him, he ought to draw it only in their Defence, and at their Commands; not despotically to rule according to his own Dictates, but patiently submit to their Instructions: This Order is uneasy under Monarchy, nor are they for any Government where they are not uppermost. A Doctrine unpleasant to the Absoluteness of the Persian Emperors; and had not the Sword of the one the prevalency of the others Preaching, it were no ways to be redressed; for as the one keeps them in Awe, so the Reverence paid the other on account of their Religion, makes them presume to inveigh, and often raise Factions against their Princes.

Wherefore the Foresight of their August Ancestry is commendable, in providing another Church-Militant Tribe to suppress and reclaim the Insolencies of the Siads; for out of respect to their own Laws, which are still unalterable, as well as to withhold their Hands from violating what the People repute as Sacred, they rather sought by one Nail to drive out another, than openly to denounce War against them: Wherefore when they find themselves perplexed with the same Dilemma, they seek not to abrogate any former Decree of their Emperors by a direct Contradiction, but study to impugn it some other ways: As for Example; In Shaw Abas the Great's time, on the days of their Feasts and Jubilees, Gladiators were approved and licensed; but feeling afterwards the Evils that attended that Liberty, which was chiefly used in their Hossy Gossy, any private Grudge being then openly revenged; it never was forbid, but it passed into an Edict by the following King, That it should be lawful to kill any found with Naked Swords in that Solemnity. And on these substantial tial grounds this new Order enjoys not only the Name of Suffees, but the Emperor himſelf will be their Captain, and ſuffers none elſe to head them, and thence takes on him the ſpecious Name and Title of Grand Suffee; and to perpetuate their Memory, has given it indelibly to Spahaun, for this reaſon joined with the former, to be called Suffahaun.

Their Habit, and the Perſian Standard Red and White.

To diſtinguiſh theſe from the others, who cloathe themſelves in Green Attire, and forbid it to any elſe, they wear an high Red Velvet Cap, plaited at top like a Cap of Maintenance; whence on a Wooden Creſt they fix a little Braſs Ball, tied on with three wreathen Chains, which they bring down ſtrait to the fore-part of the Bonnet, whoſe lower Brim is bound about with a White Saſh, and ſometimes a Plume of one Feather is ſet up with the Creſt, much after the ſame Faſhion the Noble Senators wear in the King's Preſence: Beſides which they have a Surcoat of Scarlet Cloth, as it were in defiance to the Graſs-green of the Siads; ſo much monopolized by them, that in Turky, if any other wear it, he pays dearly for his Folly: The Grand Signior's Standard is alſo of that Colour, being called Mahomet's Banner: In oppoſition to whom, the Grand Suffee erects a double-pointed Bloody Sword in a White Field, and brings it out in honour of Mortis Ally.

Their Privileges.

To his adopted Kindred (now Regulars under him, their Chief) are many Privileges granted, and by them to be held inviolable.

They are allowed a peculiar Miſſa, or Service, in a Chappel apart in the Alacoppe, or place where the Grand Council ſit, where they attend the King, or one in his ſtead, every Friday Night, at the Sacrament of Holway, (or Wafer made up in Sweetmeats,) in Imitation of the Shew-bread.

When any one has run into Debt, or committed any Capital Crime, as Murther, Adultery, Theft, or the like; if the one to defraud his Creditor, and the other to avoid the hands of Juſtice, make their Eſcape to the Alacoppe, the firſt Gate of the Palace-Royal, or to the King's Stables, and implore their Protection, and they engage for their Refuge, it is a Piacular Offence to force them thence; nor will they reſign them to the Emperor, though he command them to be taken from their Sanctuary.

Nor are they ſo wholly devoted to compaſſionate others Afflictions, as to defend their own Rights; for whoſoever's Face the Emperor commands them to cover, they are dead in Law; nor will they ſcruple being Executioners, no more than the Roman Lictors, who bore the Rods and Axes; the latter of which are their proper Weapons of War, as well as a fit Badge of their Office.

Their preſcribed Number cannot enlarge its ſelf to all of their Sect; wherefore they are interſperſed among the common People, ſome following Trades and Husbandry, and others other Employments; retaining always their Habit, which none of the Vulgar dare affront or ſtrike, however provoked; but taking off their Suffean Cap firſt, and kiſſing it, laying it down reverently, they will not then be afraid to cuff them, or drub them to purpoſe; being careful in the mean while to offer no Indignity to the Order, while they revenge themſelves on the Perſons.

Beſides

Besides these, there is another Mark of Honour wholly in the King's Power, and never bestowed but on those of the Prime Nobility, and those who have endeared him by some famous Performance, for which they are signalized by wearing a small Kettle-drum at the Bow of their Saddles in their Cities; which at first was invented for the training of Hawks, and to call them to the Lure, and is worn in the Fields by all Sportsmen for that end; but he who is rewarded with it from the King, is a Man of Supreme Dignity; and therefore, Chap. XII. Other Knights.

——Titulo dignatus equestri
Virtutem titulis titulos virtutibus ornans.

——A Knight of high Degree
Adorns his Title by his Chivalry.

And thus having muster'd the Horse, let us dismount and take an Account of the Foot, who are not so formidable for Multitudes as Valour; the Infantry are all Gun-men, and are better in Garison, and under Covert, than in open Field, fighting Hand to Fist; chiefly because having been brought up under that Discipline, they are unacquainted with any other way of Engagement. But the Georgian Veterans (who are in the same nature among the Persians, as the Janizaries among the Turks) will stand it out either for Victory or Death; both Persians and Georgians, are thus disposed of in their Ranks: The Infantry.

The First Order is Cool,	Their Salary	9 Thomands per An. At the King's Charge for Cloaths and Diet.
The Second Order is Corge,		6, without Charges.
The Third, Jeserve,		5, all Charges defray'd.

Which are the King's own Regiments, walking with Feathers in their high Hats, armed with Muskets and Axes.

The Fourth, Topangee,	Their Salary	5 Thomands, without Charges defray'd.
The Fifth, Taterdars,		4 Thomands, without Charges defray'd.

Armed only with Poleaxes and Muskets.

Of whose certain Number, Rumour and common Fame must be believed, where no other Notice can be had.

There are in readiness 40000 Georgians: Besides 80000 Stationaries to and again in Garisons.

All these receive their Pay out of the King's Treasury, or from Set Rents.

To these may be added the Provincial Cohorts, as Subsidiary Forces, which are reserved for the last Push, to succour the declining Army

Letter V.

Army in great Neceſſity: Theſe differ both in the manner of their Function and Pay: Otherwiſe, whatever the other foregoing Orders perform to the Emperor, theſe are bound to pay to their reſpective Cauns, receiving their Penſions from the alotted Lands of ſeveral Colonies, not from the common Bank.

The Watchmen.

The loweſt Degree of all theſe are the Watchmen on the Roads, maintained at the Charge of the Shawbunder, to clear the Ways of Robbers, and to demand Cuſtom; for which, if any are ſet upon, in the King's Highway, whatever Loſs is ſuſtained, the Countrey is at no Charge, neither does the Merchant or Traveller ſuffer the Damage; but whatever is entred at the Cuſtom-houſe, the Shawbunder becomes obliged to ſee ſafe through the Kingdom, and makes full Satisfaction for any Miſcarriage of this nature. The Men that ſerve under this Warfare are armed with Halberts, Bills, and Falchions, and are hired by the Day as need requires.

The Navy.

Now follow the Sons of Nereus, or the Seamen; theſe in the Perſian Gulph are either Fiſhermen, or ſuch as bruſh the Ocean to get a Penny by Freight: What are in the Caſpian Sea, I cannot be poſitive in my Relation, but I never heard them boaſt of more hardy ones: In the Perſian Bay, they have at Ormus, Bunder-Abaſſee, Larack, and Kiſmaſh, ſome few Gallies laid up, but unprovided either of Men or Tackle; and if at any time they are launched, they fill them out of the Provincial Auxiliaries under the Caun of Bunder. Thus have we run through this kind of Warlike Men from Top to Bottom.

CHAP. XIII.

Of their Bookmen and Books; of their Religion and Religious Worſhip; of their Notions in Philoſophy; of Heaven and Hell: Their Aſtronomers, Phyſicians, and Lawyers.

A Learned Clerk rare.

AFter Theſe come the Academicks; for ſuch is the Civility of theſe Regions, that Arms take place of the Gown, Letters being of ſmall Eſteem among them; for the Incitements to Study are but few, the Toil and Labours are many; whereby it is no wonder that ſlenderneſs of Profit, and Aſſiduity, ſhould be alike irkſome; when on the contrary, a Military Condition ſlights theſe Inconveniences and Auſterities, and lives more at large, taking Pleaſure, and commanding all where they come, and are in a continual Proſpect of Advancement: On which ſcore, a Learned or a Noble Clerk in theſe Parts is as rare as a Black Swan, they being raiſed to that Station out of the Dregs of the People.

The School-Language.

The School-Language among the Perſians is Arabick, as Latin is held ſo among us; in which not only the Myſteries of their Alcoran, but of all their Sciences are written.

Their Books written with a Pen, not Printed.

They have their Grammars, Dictionaries, and Vocabulaes, in which are the Roots of the Arabick Tongue, which with other Books

Books are all written with the Pen by great Industry and Pains, not committed to the Press; wherefore they are chargeable, and less free from Errors; to correct which, they compare with others more correct, one reading with a loud Voice, while the other takes notice of the Faults: They reckon Fifty Letters to a Verse, and for a Thousand Verses of ordinary Writing, they give Two Abcees; from Five to Ten and upward, for that which is more exquisite; after this rate are their Books for Sale valued. An Account of the Character being stated, they numerate the Verses of any one Page, and multiplying the other Pages thereby, the Price of the Book is produced: If there be Lines of Gold, Silver, Oker, or the like, surrounding the Margin, for Ornament, as is their Custom, they reckon nothing for them, but bestow them gratis on the first Buyer, and only pass as a better Grace to set off the Book; they being mightily taken with a fair Hand and good Writing. This agrees with the Custom of the Ancient Romans: Chap. XIII.

Candida nec nigrâ cornua fronte geras
Nec titulus minio nec cedro charta notetur. Ovid.

Et Frontis gemino decens honore
Et Cocco rubens superbus index. Martial.

They use Indian Ink, being a midling sort, betwixt our common Ink, and that made use of in Printing: Instead of a Pen, they make use of a Reed, as in India. Pens made of Reeds.

The Children of Nobles, or other Rich Men, are brought up at home, not stirring out of their Houses without a Train of Eunuchs and Servants, for fear of Sodomy, so much practised among the pestilent Sect of Mahometans: Other Children of Inferior Rank are taught in their Publick Schools for a small matter. Education of Youth.

Their Childhood being passed, and they beginning to write Man, they frequent the Schools and Colleges, and every one chuses a Master where he pleases; and having chose him, after a few Months leaves him at his own Will, and goes over to another: For such a strange Itch is here of Learning, that before they are half way instructed in one Book, they are desirous to be perfected in another; and before they have read Philosophy, Morality, or any other Science to qualify them, they leap into the Alcoran; for here are neither Publick Professors to examine, or Publick Acts to be kept, either in Divinity, Law, or Physick: They are constituted by the Primate of their cursed Fabulous Doctrine, without formal Disputation, or other Approbation than the Popular Fame, Interest of Friends, and a false Appearance of a Pious Life, and are introduced by these means into the Pensions and Benefices of their Wealthiest Mosques. Prepostrous way of Learning.

Whence it comes to pass that they are so inclinable to read to all Comers; for he whose Lectures are most frequented, stands fairest in the Noisy Applause of the Town, and seldom misses of Promotion; though it is known many of them consume their Patrimony in purchasing Disciples, and after all, reap nothing but Poverty for their Pains: Which kind of Philosophers are always attended with Emulation in gaining Disciples.

Letter V.

Envy and Ambition; nor care they who they defame, may they but extol themſelves: And after a long Invective both of Maſter and Scholar, againſt whomever they think fit to beſpatter, or they are in danger of being outdone by, inſulting in the mean while over them as the greateſt Dunces and Aſſes in Nature; at length, out of kindneſs to themſelves, having ſtretched their own Worth to the higheſt pitch (leſt the ſwoln Bladder ſhould burſt by too much Wind) they feign an humble ſelf-reprehenſion; which becauſe nothing is more practiſed, I will uſe their own Phraſe: Ezked tacrit gouſton ai beheſt amma hemme keſs me donet. 'It is indecent for a Man to 'ſpeak his own Praiſe; but were I ſilent, this is a Juſtice you would 'do me, it being nothing but what you know. Whereby it is viſible, if they abate of their own Tumour, it is likely to be very little to the favour of him they declaim againſt.

Notwithſtanding theſe Tricks and diſingenuous Inſinuations, yet this ſcabby Herd increaſes ſo, that they are at their Wits ends how to live: Some find Mecænas's among the Noblemen, and content themſelves to live ſlaviſhly, according to their Humours, for a Morſel of Bread: Others, by ſaving what they have ſcraped up from the poor Trade of Scribes, and teaching School, hire an Houſe, purchaſe an Horſe, and a Servant to run before them, (it being a ſign of the greateſt Poverty to foot it through the City); and if by good Luck they get a Name, and are reputed Men of Note for Learning, they then enlarge their Stock and Family: And theſe are they that pride themſelves in being the greateſt Doctors among them, and ſo ſet up for Academies of their own; and teach Ariſtotle's Dialect, and the Four Figures of Syllogiſm; though the Queſtion being propounded, they bind not themſelves up to the ſtrict Rules thereof; but they beg the Premiſe by way of Interrogation, as a Truth granted, and from thence draw their Concluſions.

Logick.

The Terms of Negation and Conceſſion are exotic among the Perſians, contending that Diſtinctions and Laconical Evaſions, on which the Streſs of the Ariſtotelian Doctrine ſeems to be laid, are not to be held for the true Solution of the Argument; but by a long Harangue and Affluence of Speech, the Auditors are brought both to admire them, and be of their ſide; whereupon the greater the Convention of Auditors is, the more earneſt will their Contention be; for to yield in ſuch Aſſemblies, is not at all to be expected, unleſs he that holds his Tongue firſt, intends to loſe both his Credit and his Cauſe.

Their Phyſicks.

Univerſals, Catagories, and their depending Queſtions, they often reject; concerning the nature of a Body, Place, Vacuum, Corruption, Quantities, and Qualities, they inform their Students after the Ariſtotelian way; being unacquainted with the Reſolution of Cauſes of Sublunary Beings by Atoms, according to our modern Carteſian Diſciples, revived in honour of Epicurus; whom they ſuppoſe they have ſufficiently Confuted by the Name of Zimorat, with ſome vain and boyiſh Inſtances againſt Compoſition without Interruption and infinite Particles; preaching up a Vacuum, whereby they believe the Abſurdity to be demonſtrated.

In

In their Theology, after the Contemplation of One Eternal Divinity, after its Unity and Attributes, which they maintain to be all one with its Essence; they hold the World to be from Eternity, and such a Treatise of the Soul and Passions, with the other precisions of the Intellect, which is no where to be found in Metaphysicks. In these, as in their other Speculations, they cleave so pertinaciously to their Books and undoubted Authors, as if it were piacular to depart from their Traditions. Chap. XIII.

They fancy to themselves a Chimerical Creation of the World by Ten Intelligencies, which by the same inexpugnable Reason passes into their Creed; and being freight with this Notion, they say, from one most simple Cause can proceed no more than one Effect; and therefore God framed the first Intelligence, and that mediating the First Heaven, and so in their subaltern order to the Tenth.

That the World was many Ages before Adam and Eve, (our first Parents Eduction out of the Earth) Inhabited by Devils; and that the Possession thereof was so long entrusted in their Hands, till they had extirminated the true Worship of God (which at first they applied themselves Religiously to observe) and gave themselves up to Uncleanness and Prophaneness; when Man was Created in their room, and they cast out of any farther Possession, and Men took their Places. Metaphysicks.

That Souls were from all Eternity, and commanded by God on the actual Exigency of any Body to enter a Relation, or a certain dependency with them, not an Information, or real Presence, tota in toto & tota in quâlibet parte corporis vitam habentis; being all in all, and all in every part where Life does exist; from this foolish Conception of theirs, they attribute Place and Circumscription to the Soul; therefore they Object not a Spiritual, but a Corporal Substance to be inferred.

They acknowledge Four kinds of Causes, viz. Material, Formal, Efficient and Final; they allow not of an exemplary, but admit of a total Cause; by which they understand such an one as no condition is defective to put it into Act; and on these Foundations they suppose the World's Creation from Eternity to be enough proved.

The Books of greatest vogue, are those of Corge Nessir Tussi, of the City Tus, in the Province of Korasam, wrote Five hundred years ago; he, as it is credible, understood the Greek Language as well as others; from whence he has explained some Ancient Authors, as Euclid, Ptolomy's Alguma and Opticks, and has reduced them into a Compendium, as also the Works of Plato. Some Expositors they have of their Law, with Rules of Justice and Morality; which they admire and extol to the Skies, and rest implicitly on the ipse dixit of their Prophet, never enquiring farther: If any thing happen to oppose common Sense, they protract the meaning Mysteriously or Anagogically, not to the disquisition of the Truth, but to defend their Fopperies. Among which they have in the first esteem, the Written Letter of their Prophet, as immediately prescribed by him, and these are Oracular. In the Second place, those who are since published by the Mahometan Sectators, and these are look'd upon as Human; any whereof, if they appear foolish, yet Books in Esteem.

Letter V.

they doubt not but their Prophet uttered them, that he might bring himſelf to the Capacities of his Hearers, and of the Arabians, to whom he was ſent to call them from Idolatry to the Worſhip of the only One God; for which the Perſians make this Anſwer, Should a Doctor talk to a Ruſtick, and ſpeak as if he were diſcourſing with a Profeſſor, and not conform himſelf to the apprehenſion of the Countryman, How ſhould he be underſtood? Which courſe, ſay they, Mahomet took for the better Information of his Proſelytes.

Who leaving Natural Cauſes, declares theſe Secrets were Revealed to him: That Mahomet's Revelations.

The Winds were raiſed by an Angel's moving his Wings.

The Flux and Reflux of the Sea was cauſed by an Angel's putting his Foot on the middle of the Ocean, and compreſſing the Waves, the Waters ran to the Shores, which being removed, they retired to their proper ſtation.

Falling Stars are the Firebrands wherewith the Good Angels drive away the Bad when they are too ſawcily inquiſitive, and approach too near the Empyreum (the Virge of the Heavens) to hearken to, and eves-drop the Secrets there.

Thunder is nothing elſe but the Cracking of an Angel's Whip, while he ſlaſhes the dull Clouds to ſuch and ſuch a place, where Rains are wanting to make the Earth fertile and remedy its Drineſs.

Eclipſes, he delivers, happen not by the mutual Interjection of the Heavenly Bodies, but that the Sun and Moon are ſhut in a Pipe (a Cupboard as well) and turned up and down, and that from each Pipe is a Window by which they enlighten the World; but when God is angry at the Inhabitants thereof for their Tranſgreſſions, he bids an Angel clap to the Window, and turn the Lights towards Heaven from the Earth; then the Light is taken away from the unworthy Miſcreants, and an Eclipſe is made; for which occaſion he has left them Forms of Prayers to be uſed by the Mahometans, that God would be pleaſed to avert his Judgments and reſtore Light to the World. In an Eclipſe of the Moon they beat Pots and Pans, or any other brazen Inſtrument, as in time of Idolatry it was a prevailing Cuſtom, even in Europe (as well as here and in India) which ſtill ſome ignorant Old Women, and the dregs of the People are ready enough to continue; for the Tradition was handed down to them, wherewith they were ſeduced of Yore, that the Moon might be Inchanted, and unleſs it were rouſed up by this Noiſe would certainly fall down dead aſleep upon the Earth from Heaven.

Juvenal in his Satyrs Comments pleaſantly enough on the Garrulity of the Female Sex, by this Invective on one of them:

Una laboranti poſſit ſuccurrere Lunæ.

Whoſe Tongue alone could help the Moon,
Recover its Lethargick Swoon.

But the incomparably witty Perſians have an evaſion for this, telling telling this Tale; Their Learned Doctor Neſſir (on whoſe Words they'l Swear) had Predicted to the Reigning King an Eclipſe of the Moon, but fearing leſt the drowſy King ſhould be aſleep, and ſo he ſhould loſe the fruit of his Prediction, perſuaded the Vulgar, that to drive away the ill Influences the Eclipſe Preſaged, they would ſmite with all their force on ſuch Inſtruments; whereby the King being perfectly awaked, he lift up both his Hands and his Eyes in Aſtoniſhment, and admired the Skill of his Aſtrologer, for which he was well Rewarded. But this is but a Story, however poſitive they are, ſince it was a Cuſtom all the World over long before. Chap. XIII.

Their Thick-ſcull'd Prophet has ſet another Angel at work for Earthquakes, who is to hold ſo many Ropes tied to every Quarter of the Globe; and at God's Command, he is to pull and ſo ſhakes that part of the Globe; and if a City, Mountain, or Tower, be to be overturned, then he tuggs harder at the Pulley, till the Rivers dance and the Valleys are filled with Rubbiſh, and the Water ſwallowed up in the Precipices. Such Stuff as this he has abundance of; and the moſt impartial Interpreter of the Alcoran, as the Mahometans themſelves confeſs, can afford no better: But for all that they hold that it contains profound meanings; for it has ſeveral degrees of Senſes, the ſecond of which it is hardly poſſible for the greateſt Doctor to apprehend; wherein are couched Words of ſuch efficacy, which if they were pronounced by Unpolluted Lips, and whoever ſhould underſtand them and Pray, might both Raiſe the Dead and work Miracles; and that of an unqueſtioned truth this Book came from God, as both the Fœcundity of Stile, and admirable Eloquence doth teſtify. For they are not afraid prophanely to ſay, That God accommodated his Miſſions to Place, Age, and the exigency of Times; in the Days of Chriſt there were excellent Phyſicians, Irlenus, i. e. Galen, Pichagor, Pockate, Afflaton, (prodigious Reconcilers of Time!) all theſe Healed Diſeaſes by their Plants and Herbs; but God to outdo theſe, gave Chriſt Power to Raiſe thoſe from the Dead who had been Buried; acknowledging withal, that this Prophet exceeded the degree of meer Man.

When Moſes lived, many Magicians and Cunning Men were entertained by Pharaoh; God therefore gave Moſes a more wonderful Art, that his Serpent ſhould devour theirs, whereby they were compelled to own him ſent from God.

And now to nick Mahomet, when he had the Impudence to ſet up for a Prophet, Oratory was in its full perfection; wherefore Mahomet, by the Miniſtration of the Angel Gabriel, brought forth the Chapters of his Alcoran; which when he had propoſed to the Wiſeſt Men of that Age to pronounce but Three or Four thereof, and they not being able, were forced to confeſs, that That Work muſt be certainly of God, ſince they knew Mahomet to be Illiterate; which he relates in his Alcoran, and takes thence an opportunity to boaſt, undervaluing the Pſalms of David in the mean while (which are David's Pſalms) becauſe they know not with what Figures of Words and Sentences they are Illuminated, nor with what vehemency they incite a Devout Soul; that the Perſian Interpreter, could he expreſs the Numbers and Elegancies of Speech contained in

Letter V.

in the Hebrew, would leave off to admire the Nonsense of the Alcoran, and look upon the mistake with detestation: Nor would they dare to call their Impostor, as they do, the continual flowing Miracle of Rhetorick, but rather a meer Stammering Fool, and his Bastard-brood the Alcoran, Sottishness.

Assisted by Sergius the Monk.

The Antiquaries among the Christians, who have searched more narrowly into this upstart Religion-Monger, have scented who was his real Instructor, though he belied the Archangel Gabriel; for this Hodge podge was forged between him and one Sergius a Monk, who fled to him in Arabia, when the Nestorian Heresy, which he professed, was Condemned in Syria; Mahomet received him, being now risen to Power from a poor Lad, of the Father's side a Pagan, by the Mother a Jew; by their joint perverting the Holy Bible, sprang up this Motly of Blasphemous Dotages; in which that he made use of Sergius as his Tutor, may be discovered by some Footsteps still appearing out of the very Alcoran; for in the Chapter entitled Nahil, thus it is rendred word for word; The People accuse thee, that whatever thou pretendest to utter as from God, thou art taught all this by thy Companion.

His Blasphemous Opinions.

But the whole matter is related by Pomponius Læt. and Ignatius; thus Sergius the Master of Mahomet, was, as many believe, the Author of the Monothelites also: He cherished the wicked Heresy of Arius and Nestorius; therefore being Excommunicate, by the Orthodox, he was sent a Vagabond into Banishment, and at length he came into Arabia, where the false Prophet Mahomet obliged him by his Friendship, and by him learn'd to corrupt the Holy Scriptures, so as to frame a New Religion, which was neither Christian, nor altogether Jewish, but a Composition of both, obliterating what was not to their purpose; whereupon the Hagareens and Saracens, held Mahomet not only as their King, but also as a Prophet Divinely Inspired, and follow him in all his Absurdities.

He denied the Trinity, affirming it to be ridiculous to believe Christ to be God; wherefore with Socinus and Eumenius, he allowed him to be only a Creature, but with Carpocrates, an Holy Prophet. He held with Cedren, that it was a thing impossible that God should Beget a Son who never had a Wife.

With the Manachites he would not have Christ Crucified, but another so like him that he could not be distinguished.

With the Disciples of Origen, he held that after a Revolution of time the Devils might be Sav'd; ascribing with the Anthropomorphites, Members and Human Shape to the Deity; placing, with Cerinthus, all Felicity in Pleasure.

He has Commanded Circumcision, with Elion, though with Eucrates, he has forbidden Wine to his Disciples; he Damns those to Hell that speak against the Alcoran, asserting it to be given by Inspiration.

Friday his Sabbath.

Friday is his Sabbath; and two Fasts are by his appointment, the one the First Moon of October, the other before the New Year at the Vernal Equinox.

Polygamy.

Polygamy is his Masterpiece, it being lawful to play the Brute with what Women they please; although to Eat Swines Flesh be a Crime

Crime unpardonable; attributing to Beasts, as well as Men, a capability of a Resurrection. Chap. XIII.

The Holy Baptism he explodes as insignificant, preferring thereto his Superstitious Washing before Prayers, and at Exonerating the Body; he lets them not Cut the Foreskin before the Eighth Year; he esteems the Eucharist given in Commemoration of Christ, as frivolous, because he confesses not that he suffered Death; but that the Eucharist was instituted of God for the benefit of worthy Receivers, and for the destruction of such as should not receive it worthily.

His Ecclesiastical Orders are the Mufty, Cadies, and Talmen.

The Mufty is the Head of the Law in Turky; to Kill, Depose, Despise, or to behold whom with Disregard, is a Sin of an high nature: But in Persia there is one in Title only, without any Authority of the Keys; for that our Persians insist, It is a Reserve only for Mahomet and his Twelve Successors; yet as their Vicar there may be Moutched, i. e. Doctor Vitæ, one of that approved strictness of Manners, and eminent Knowledge for a Director and Guide to the People, that all Affairs and Strifes concerning Conscience may be determined by him; but what is more, all Preferments relating to the Church are at his Disposal. Where this Carcass is, there the Eagles will be gathered; for to this High-Priest is not lacking wherewith to maintain his Inferior Brethren, would he spare something from his own Hoards; but he is a-kin to that sort of Animal which the more it hath, the more it craveth; nor is any thing more griping than he. The Mufti.

There are more than 60000 Thomands reckoned Yearly to be coffered up; a Stipend sufficient to feed the whole Herd, were it not perverted from the intention of the Donor, and converted to private uses; so true is it in him who is Head of their Law, while he presumes on that Office, he becomes the greatest Grievance thereof; whereby it is plain he is an Amphibious Creature, only affording the Priests an half Patronage, from whom he receives his Dignity; but the Lawyers give him Power and Wealth; so that though he delight to be called Primate of the Mullahs, yet he covets more the Rule of the Cadies or Cazies, from whom there is no Appeal. His Revenue.

For as in Nuncupatives the irrevocable Decrees and Commands of the Emperor stand firm, so his Determinations in the Written Law are as Authentick; so that where he has Wit to keep his Canons from interfering with the King's Prerogative, he acts as he pleases: They were formerly so resolute to interpose where they found their Sovereigns about to do a rash Mischief; but that Permission is laid aside, and he sings that Lesson to King Solomon, as to one that is deaf, he being impatient of any Reproof; not being willing to be drawn off from his Cups and his Gormandizing, nor at leisure to be present even at their Sacred Rites, having not saluted the Temple Twelve times since he began to Reign, which is Eleven Years; which his Forefathers were wont to do once a Week with great Pomp and State. His Authority.

Godliness is not only the chief, but the Foundation of all other Virtues; for therein is a great Tye upon Men to keep them in their Duty; and where no other Arguments prevail upon their Reason, yet Religion compels: Pietate autem ſublata, inquit Cicero, Fides etiam, Societas humani generis, & una excellentiſſima, Juſtitia, immo omnis Probitas tollitur. Lib. 1. nat. Deorum. Piety being neglected, ſays Cicero, Truth, Human Society, and the excellenteſt part thereof, Juſtice, yea, all manner of Goodneſs is taken away and periſhes.

The Talman, or Mullah.

Now the Ædile may lock up the Church Doors, and the Reverend Prelate, whoſe Office it was to Adminiſter before the King, may follow other Works, or ſupinely take his eaſe in his Cathedral Chair, while at conſtant Hours the Inferior Clergy ſtretch their Lungs from their Obelisks and high Towers, and ſtrenuouſly call to the People to Pray; any one of whom, if he can Read like a Clerk a Chapter out of the Alcoran, let his other endowments be as mean as his Brethrens, he ſhall be crowned with the honour of being a Mullah or Talman; wherefore though Learning be an Ornament, yet they eſteem it leſs neceſſary than that it ſhould interrupt their quiet or repoſe, to acquire it.

Their Funerals more Pompous than the Turkiſh Sects are.

The greateſt Burthen here too, is to perform the Funeral Obſequies, when to their Liturgy they add an Oration: Before the Herſe they carry Banners, taking their Way through the high Streets to the Burial Place; after the Corps the Mullahs follow Singing, the Corps its ſelf being decently Vailed with a Coverlet of divers Colours, and carried by Four Bearers, it lying on the Herſe arrayed in the beſt Cloaths the Man wore, when alive: If it be a Woman ſhe is put into a Coffin, or Cheſt, and an Awning made over the Herſe, covered with a White Sheet inſtead of a Pall; after theſe come the Relations and People Hired to Mourn; at the cloſe of all are carried on ſtately Voiders, the Holway, as among the Turkiſh Sect, which the Chief Mullah, after the Ceremonies are over, diſtributes to the Attendants, being, if required, obliged to repeat every Moon with the Kindred, who come with Lighted Lamps, Sherbets, and this Holway, to Pray for the Soul of the Departed, which they modeſtly continue Twelve Moons. This is the thing makes the Clergy ſweat, for they have nothing elſe to do for the Republick, leaving the People to Pray for themſelves that are Alive, only concerning themſelves with the Dead.

Their Tribes Clarified by Pilgrimage to Mecca; their Names given by the Patents.

Barbers Circumciſe their Children when they think meet, when the Parents give them the Name, joining to that of his Fathers his own, as Mahomed Hoſſeen, i. e. Mahomet the Son of Hoſſeen; taking their Sirnames, as the Old Jews, from their Tribes, which they glory in, though it be that of Iſmael; of which Tribe they have many among them tranſmitted out of Arabia hither; which notwithſtanding, are yet reckoned a Villanous ſort of Breed; agreeing well with the Pſalmiſt's Paraphraſe on them, Wo is me that my dwellings are with Meſech, and my habitation among the Tents of Kedar; comparing theſe Men, among which he was an Exile, to the wicked Iſmaelites, addicted to Pilfering and Stealing, Prophaneneſs and Blaſphemy; Kedar was the Son of Iſmael, Meſech of Japhet, which Stock are very plentiful.

But thoſe of them that think the beſt Tribe not clarified till they have enobled it by ſome Religious Act, are not at reſt till they have wiped off theſe Stains; which ſet them on foot ſo often to Mahomet's Tomb, Tomb; returning whence, all former Taint is abolished, and they become pure Musselmen indeed, which is the strongest Confirmation after Circumcision: For That is a time of Jollity, This of Labour and Travel, whereby they approve themselves what their Parents only Sponded for them; and this is a Task impos'd mostly on their new Proselytes. Chap. XIII.

The Cadies, or Justices, can both Marry and Unmarry: Which Lay-Clergy, with the whole Bookish Tribe, is hard to be known from the Gross of their Nation, by Strangers; unless some affect White Vestments in token of Purity, and walk with Eyes fixed on the Ground, a Rosary in their Hands, an outward Appearance of Demureness and Sanctity, and a Neglect of the World; a Book of Hadis in their Breast; and if any seem to mind them, they tune their Pipes to the Uncertainty of Riches; the Frailty of Human Nature; that all things are vain and fleeting; that our Minds ought to be fix'd on our End; with all the Train of Hypocrisy well personated. No Garb to distinguish their Clerks.

The Parish-Priests are maintain'd in the Country by Collections; in great Towns or Cities, by the King, or Cauns. How they are maintain'd.

Besides these, those who are called Hodges are such strict Puritans, that if they meet a Christian, Jew, or Banyan, and by chance his Garment brush against them, they hye them home, shift and wash, as if they had been defiled with some unclean thing, a Dog or Hog; undervaluing all but their own Sect, as if there were no Holier Creatures in the World.

And now having dispatch'd this Crew, moulded up in dull Clay, let us mix with those of more liberty in their own Language, allowing them at the same time to be kept in Bounds by the rigid Compressures of their Taskmasters in Religion, so that all the Strain of their Wit must bias that way.

And first, They have some (though few) set up for Admirers of the Muses, and value themselves in being call'd the Wits of the Age, and these are their Poets; who confine themselves to Rhime and Numbers, and sometimes to Quantity, inferring their Verses with Comparisons, Exaggerations, Flights of Ingenuity, and Fictions, which they repeat with Gestures both of Hands, and Body, and Mouth contorted, animating them with suitable Tones and Articulations, proclaiming them dead without such Information. Poets.

They have Romances of Famous Heroes and their Deeds; among which are pleasant Rancounters, Huntings, Love-Intrigues, Banquetings, descriptions of Flowers and delightful Groves, emphatically set down, with Cuts and Pictures represented lively enough, would their Colours endure; for which Skill, otherwise than for hitting the Life, their Limners are to be reckon'd defective, not knowing how to mix their Colours. Limners.

The exactest History they have to brag on, is Rouze el Saphet, a Book of Three or Four Volumes, in Folio; which gives an account from the first Habitation of Men upon Earth, till the Two last Centuries. They are but bad at Chronology, making nothing of a Thousand Years confounded together: Had they the Æra of Augustus, or the Julian Period, or a faithful State of Time, there might be some Historians.

likelihood of Truth in their Hiſtories; but they being Convicted of inadvertency in theſe Points, the whole Superſtructure muſt fall; which to defend even in their very Alcoran, they are forced to Forge Aſperſions to confront the lameneſs of its Stories, whereby they endeavour thus to come off: A Wicked Emperor having obtained the Rule of the World, got the Sacred Writs together by force, and burnt them; after which, what occurred to the Memory of the Chriſtians, were committed to Paper juſt as every one could recollect or fancy; and hence aroſe the ſeveral Miſtakes and Differences.

Others pretending to a farther reach, follow our Saviour to the Fourth Heaven, where they affirm he now is, whither he carried the Goſpel with him from the unworthy Nations, excited by the ſame Zeal Moſes was, when he brake the Two Tables of the Decalogue. With ſuch Artifices as theſe they ſtudiouſly beſpatter the Chriſtians and their Religion, to uphold their own Dogmatical Tenents.

Sed magna eſt Veritas, & prævalebit.

A Book like our Æſop's Fables, called Emuel Sohaly, is preferred before all others, written in the Perſian Language; yet their Superſtition is ſuch, that they dare hardly give it Houſe-room, or afford it a place in their Libraries, leſt it ſhould bring ill luck.

At the ſame time this was Tranſlated out of Indoſtan into the Perſian Speech, there was Cotemporary another Perſian, who had compoſed a Book of his own, but of a far inferior Stile; and being ſenſible his Work would be Poſtponed thereby, he induſtriouſly took care to ſpread a rumour among the Vulgar, that this Book of Emuel Sohaly was an ill thing, becauſe it introduced Creatures irrational Talking one to another, alledging for proof ſome Texts of the Alcoran; and at that juncture laying hold of an Accident which happened to a Youth ſleeping while he was reading this Piece, that fell down from the Upper-Room to the Ground, whereby he brake his Skull, and his Thighs, confirmed the Mobile in the New-broached Opinion of this Book; it ever ſince bearing an ill Name, becauſe they looked on this as an Exemplary Judgment, wherewith their Prophet was pleaſed to forewarn others, and denounce his Anger againſt ſuch as ſhould attempt the reading of it.

Alchymy.

Alchymy has bewitched ſome of them to ſpend both their Time and Money without any other benefit than to ſupply them with a peculiar Cant, and affected Terms of their Teachers, which thoſe, who ſeized with that Itch, not only infect themſelves but others, with vain hopes, which at laſt, together with the Conſumption of all their Subſtance, vaniſh in Smoak. Theſe are ſuch as cry up the Tranſmutation of Metals, till they have refined them to be the moſt Excellent in Nature's Cabinet, whereby they would arrive to that degree of Midas's Wiſh, that whatever they touched ſhould become Gold; a ſottiſh and imprudent thirſt of Wealth, as if it were in the power of Art to outdo the deſign of the Creation, wherein every thing was formed good in it's kind; by which theſe Dabblers caſt a ſcan-

a scandal on the Noble Profession of Chymistry, to which is owing the true Knowledge of Physick, by an Analytical Separation of the Parts of the Compound, from the gross Dregs of the mixture, whereout may be sucked such Particles, as are applicable for the Remedies of Human Infirmities, while they depart not from the nature first impressed on them. Here are many good Writers in this Honourable Science, but are at present unskilful and unprovided with their Instruments or Furnaces, such as we find the Learned Sons of this Art use in their Laboratories elsewhere. Chap. XIII

Mathematicks being the Foundation of all Arts, should have preceded; but Treating of an indigested Nation, I deliver you them conformable to their own method; they understand Euclid's Elements, and Cœlestial Phænomenas, though they want the Citations and Adjuncts in the Demonstration of their Propositions: They have the Theodosian and Autolican Doctrine of the Spheres, some Fragments of Archimedes, but have not the Contracted Proclivity. Mathematicks.

Practical Geometry is common with them; Arithmetick in intire Numbers and Fractions they Exercise, performing their Multiplication and Division in Transverse Lines: The Ancient Algebra, a Calculation by Geometrical Progressions is not hid from them, though they have no specious Invention.

Trigonometry of streight Lines and Spherical is their own, with the Canons of Signs and Tangents, yet without Secants: The Staff of 60 Parts, with so many Fractions, by a Prolix reckoning, they bring to Three, Four, or Five Minutes, our Chymical Arithmetical Transmutation never entring their Thoughts of the Sixtieth Number swelled into an unity by Cyphers, that all the Chords may evade absolute and intire; no more have they any smattering of that never enough to be admired Science of Logarithms.

The Theory of the Planets, the Middle Motions of Ptolemy, and the solid Orbs, as delivered by Purbachius, they are perfect in: Copernicus, or rather before him Pythagoras's Hypotheses, are confusedly and ignorantly disapproved by them, neither desiring to be informed, nor caring to concern themselves with any other than what they have imbibed Traditionally by their Forefathers; For which reason Ticho's Instruments for Observation of the Heavenly Phenomenas are undervalued by them.

Their Astrolabe is the most Workmanly Tool among them, it being neatly framed of Brass, Copper, or Silver, in a truly plain and familiar method, on one double Square only divided into 180 Parts each, with their Tangents; from the Structure of which Instrument, all the Centers of the Circles, are sooner found out by Steel Compasses, hung in an Arch with their Screws, than by our old way of Stæfler, and Regiomontanus, which though true in it self, yet it hardly is made to come right.

They have Tables shewing the exact Motion of the Planets, and thence collect their Ephemeris, which is Twofold; One whereof is Cameri, Answering to our Almanack, where are set forth the Conjunctions and Oppositions of the Luminaries, the Rains, the Alterations of the Air, also obscure and implicit Predictions, to catch the believing Multitude: The other is Chamesi, in which the Longitudes, Latitudes, and Aſpects of the Stars, the Eclipſes ſometimes agreeing, ſometimes diſagreeing with ours. In this Book are the ſuſpicions of War, ſcarcity of Corn, and other Incidents not diſcernible in Human Learning; but ſo adapted, that like the ſound of Bells to the Fancies of ſome, ſo theſe admit of an interpretation agreeable to every one's ſenſe, that the Prognoſticator may not be reproved of unskilfulneſs. Such an itch of knowing Contingencies reigns here, that no Journey is undertaken, no New Book read, no Change of Garments put on, no freſh Dwelling entred upon before the Stars are conſulted; here is controverted when is the good, when the unlucky Hour to begin or end upon any Enterprize: The Moon's or other Planets ingreſs into Scorpio is much dreaded among them; and if that Planet be Retrograde, a ſtop is put to all buſineſs.

Whence comes the vulgar Juggle of the oblong Cubes, in which equal and unequal Numbers are diſpoſed, where they being caſt at adventures, what Figures they happen to be upon from thoſe Points they thence make their judgments: Something parallel is found in the occult Philoſophy of Cornelius Agrippa, in Page 221.

Necromancy.

Theſe draw Schemes, and are puffed with Necromantick Problems: If a Thief have ſtolen any thing, if a Servant have run from his Maſter with ſtolen Goods, if any would be acquainted about Husbands or Wives, they betake themſelves to ſuch Oracles as theſe.

Who begin their Deluſion with a Gipſy Cant, with Eyes and Hands lift up to Heaven; then caſting the Dye, he obſerves the Points, and ænigmatically canveſſes the Event; ſometimes hitting the Caſe, and ſometimes as wide from it as the Eaſt is from the Weſt; and though by Experience they have found them tripping an Hundred times, and upbraid them for the Cheat; they put it off as if they had not ſtated the thing fairly; that a Minute in the Calculation varies the truth; that this is the true profeſſion Daniel tranſmitted to Poſterity; and if it anſwer not the Queſtion, it is not becauſe the Art is defective, but becauſe few are ſo happy as to attain its perfection; and thus do they willingly continue in their belief of the Gull: They encourage an infinite number of theſe Southſayers, as many as can invent new Tricks to get Money by it.

When they conſult for future ſucceſs in Matters of great conſequence, they go to ſome Learned Doctor, who Divines by the Alcoran; and he having prayed, opens the Alcoran, (that Legend of Lies;) and the firſt Page he ſets his Eyes upon, if the Firſt Commandment happen to be in it, the Augury is of force, and they have no delay allowed them, but haſten with all ſpeed about their Work; and if Twenty more come on the ſame Errand, they are ſent away with the ſame Reſponſe, which after comparing Notes, though the Event be as unfortunate as may be, yet they contentedly acquieſce in the verity of the Prophecy, however contradictory to their Senſes; and ſhall repeat the ſame method, as if it were a Point of their Faith to go on in palpable Abſurdities, by conſtantly enquiring of the Alcoran.

Aſtrologers.

The Emperor nouriſhes a great many Aſtrologers, the chief of whom is always by his ſide, with his Aſtrolabe at his Girdle, and dictates dictates the good hour or bad hour, when to riſe, when to go to bed, or to perpetrate any action of Note; erecting a Scheme on the Sand; whoſe Advice is always followed, though ſome Stories are upon Record to their diſadvantage: Two whereof I ſhall relate. Chap. XIII.

About Eighteen Years ago, it being famous, and no longer ſince, remains freſh in memory, and is made uſe of to make ſport with the Aſtrologers: The Coſſaks on the River Tanais, came thence over the Caſpian Sea, and made a Deſcent into Perſia, and carried off a great Booty, loading their ſmall Ships without any oppoſition: The Emperor of Perſia incenſed with this Affront, and Depredation made on his Subjects, arms ſuch a Fleet as he thought ſufficient to correct their Inſolence with his Soldiers, and bad them take the Sea at the preciſe time the Aſtrologers ſhould direct, that the Heavens alſo conſpiring, they ſhould effectually chaſtiſe their Enemies; which being without doubt carefully ſtudied, ſhould as infallibly come to paſs, ſo that upon their invading them, not one of them ſhould eſcape; And for the better obtaining their end, adviſed 'em to faſten their Ships together by ſtrong Chains, that ſo they ſhould keep their Body intire, leſt the Coſſacks ſhould ſet upon any ſingle Veſſel, and at the ſame time ſhould encloſe the Pirates ſo, that they ſhould by no means get out of their hands: But the cunning Coſſacks being uſed to Stratagems, foreſeeing their Deſign, fell upon the firſt Ship with their Guns, which ſo bored her Sides, that ſhe ſunk, and by her weight occaſioned the reſt to ſink one after another, ſo that 500 Men, and Twelve Ships were ſent to the bottom in a well-choſen hour, and the Coſſacks by this Exploit left Maſters of the Sea, and the Borders thereon liable to their continual Incurſions.

Three Years after, one of the ſame Tribe contriving how to augment his Penſion, in a choſen time, preſented a Petition to the Emperor, when he happened to be out of humour; and therefore commanded an exact Account to be given him of the expence he was at in maintaining this Vermin; the return whereof amounting to 20000 Thomands Yearly, made him exceeding wroth, ſo that he not only denied an addition of Salary, but had extirpated the Function had not great interceſſion been made.

Des Cartes, the Prince of Philoſophy in this Age, gives his Sectators caution nè nimis ſuperbe de nobis ipſis ſentiremus decreta Dei à nobis intelligi ſupponamus; leſt we ſhould too vainly conceit the Decrees of God to be underſtood by any of us; and theſe had done better had they ſtuck to their primitive Aſtronomy.

of better faſhion alſo: Which here opens a Gap for all pretending Knaves, who fatten themſelves on the folly of this Licence, which in all civil Governments is puniſhed by the ſevereſt Laws; whoſe execution are ſo far neglected in Perſia, that even now in the King's Court an old Hagg is reſpected; a relation of which, becauſe it has as much of rarity as truth, I ſhall not think tedious to inſert.

A Pythoniſſa, or Witch.

A certain Turkiſh Woman, born at Conſtantinople (by theſe People named Stambole, and Romeree) now an old Witch, in her young days provoked by the heat of her Luſt, ran from her Husband with her Paramour; with whom enjoying her beaſtly pleaſure for ſome time, at length ſhe was carried into a Wood, where ſhe lived five years without remembring how ſhe came there, or what befel her in that ſpace; but that time being ſpent, ſhe perceived her ſelf poſſeſſed with the Deviliſh Spirit of Prophecy, and ſo returned to the City from whence ſhe had fled a Strumpet, a Pythoniſſa; which being noiſed abroad, and coming to the Grand Seignior's Ears, he cauſed her to be baniſhed as a Portentous Evil out of Conſtantinople: Who thence wandering here and there, found ſmall encouragement, till ſhe came to Suffahaun, where being arrived, and the News brought to Court, without imprecation of the Gods to avert the miſchief, ſhe is the daily diverſion of the Perſian Monarch, and he delights to diſcourſe her often.

She calls every one by their proper Name, though never ſeen before: She gives an account of actions paſt, both ridiculous and ſerious; which though it be the Emperor's ſport to hear, the Courtiers are ſhy of her Company, becauſe of reaping up their old Sins; and being proved in this point to anſwer expectation, it is granted that ſhe can Divine future Contingencies; toward which the Genius of this Nation being diſpoſed, ſhe is eſteemed not only by the King, but by all People as a Prodigy.

When ſhe is ſeized with a Fit of Prophecy, the firſt inſult begins, (where the Devil firſt entred,) at her Belly, which works ſtrangely; and at ſuch times there may be heard as it were the noiſe of Three or Four Kitlins, ſucking and crying when ſhe falls into an Extaſy. After which, the Spirit ſeems to anſwer from the bottom of her Belly to all queſtions propounded; and being in this tranſport, gives this account of her ſelf: "I (ſays ſhe) am a Dæmon, whether of an "airy, fiery, or either ſubſtance compounded, I know not; nor of "what Principles I am made, either heavenly or human; but that "we are many and divided into Three Tribes or Orders; in eve-"ry of which we have learned and wiſe, fooliſh and illiterate among "us; the ſame Religions and Opinions prevail as are upon Earth; "ſome profeſſing Chriſtianity, others Mahometiſm; and again others "are Pagans and Idolaters, and there are ſome few Atheiſts among "us: As for my ſhare, I follow the Perſian Sect of Mahometiſm, and "confeſs my ſelf an Ideot, underſtanding no other Language than "Turkiſh (where under a Cloven Foot may be diſcerned conforming to a Foreign Religion, though skilled in no other Language but her Native; a pretty Wheedle to inſinuate into the Suffee's favour) "if therefore any thing be asked beyond my reach, that needs an "Expoſitor, I betake my ſelf to ſome OEdipus of our Order, who "unfolds

"ction of my Inquirers.

This being a new Doctrine to the Suffee, he commanded her to give him some Demonstration of the truth of what she had told; and therefore put her upon discovering how he might believe the airy Region to be peopled after this rate; she consented to convince him, and ordered all the Nobles attending the Emperor, to retire with him into one part of the Room, and leave her to work their Conviction, which she did after this manner:

Falling into her usual Trance, she at that instant wrought their Fancies to be persuaded of the confused Articulation of Multitudes met as in a Fair, conversing and making a chattering, to the amazing of them all.

Father Raphiel the Capuchin, who gave me this account, was set upon by the Emperor to encounter her; but he prudently enough avoided it, lest he might be brought into some Præmunire about Disputes of their Religion, in which he found the crafty Slut would involve him; but besides his single Testimony of this Affair, here are many Turkish Merchants in Town who all declare the same as to her being possessed, having known her many Years ago at Constantinople, from whence she was expelled by a special Precept of their Sultan.

Here is a large Field of Controversy offered, to wit the Possessions of Cardan, and the Lapland Witches; but these being Foreign to this intended Account, I purposely omit what might be said on this Subject, referring it to more acurate Pens.

But not to let the credit of this Opinion lie as if it were of this Beldams broaching; Plato had long ago declared his approbation of it, that there were Dæmons wandring about the World: In Epinomede: Summos Deos, ultra mundanos amplissimam rerum providentiam habere, sub his in cœlo quosdam conspicuos esse, tertio infimoque loco Dæmones horum genus, unum ex æthere, alterum ex aere esse, at neutrum conspici totum potest; sed quamvis hi Dæmones propè nos sint, nunquam tamen manifestò nobis apparent: Et mox; Aliud vero ex aqua, &c. Post Dæmones Heroas. Several sorts of Dæmons.

And what Plato promiscuously calls Dæmons, the Latins distinguish by their Offices, as those presiding over Countries are Penates; those over Families Lares; those that are frightful and terrible representations are Larvæ or Hob-goblins: But these that are Witnesses of the actions of every individual person are termed Genij, and those the Ancient Greeks called Heroas, the Latins gave the name of Lemures, Ghosts or Spirits to.

But to return to our Men of Learning, from whence we have been Will-ith-whisped; the Longitude and Latitude of the Stars are written in an intire Volume, together with eight and forty Signs beastly pictured; these compared with our Maps or Globes, differ seven or eight degrees in Longitude; only some few Minutes in Latitude. Longitude and Latitude.

Dialling and its profound Sections and Projections of the heavenly Circles in the Plain, by the mediating shadow from the World's Axis, is not understood by them; no more than Conic's, although Apollonius his Books are often turned over by them. Dialling.

Musick.

In Musick they lift up their Voices with a loud straining behind a Taber, which is the only Instrument, with the Flute, used with the Vocal; for Instrumental, they have little regard to Stringed, but the Orgiastick they are very expert at, and use it on all Festivals, at the Rising and Setting of the Sun in their publick Midans, or Courts, before the Emperor's Palace, as also before all their Governors; though within doors they chuse the other, where the Stage-players, Tumblers, and dancing Wenches usher in their Interludes by Songs, Tabers, and Flutes.

Medicks.

At length I convert my self to that Noble and Excellent Art, so beneficial to the Life of Man, Physick; which though it be here in good Repute, yet its Sectators are too much wedded to Antiquity, not being at all addicted to find out its Improvement by new Enquiries; wherefore they stick to the Arabian Method as devoutly as to the Sacred Tripod, which they hold as Infallible as of old that Delphic Oracle was accounted.

Anatomy rejected.

On which score Chymistry is hardly embraced; nor to the Pathological part do they think the Anatomical Knife can bring much Profit: However, many of them have Wealthy Presents from their Grandees.

Whoever applies himself to this Profession, takes a Master of that Calling, who Instructs him in the Stile and ordinary Characters of Medicine; where being throughly versed in the Employment, and able to set up for himself, he consults whereabouts the fewest Physicians are planted in the City, and the likeliest place to draw Customers to him; there he joins an Apothecary to him to make up his Prescripts, and sell them to his Patients, the half of which Gain comes into his Pocket: Thus by degrees increasing in Fame, he covets many Students to Read to, who are sure to spread abroad his Fame, like so many Speaking-trumpets, and are sent about in quest of Prey, to bring in Game like so many Decoys.

But the Bait that takes most, are the Womens crying up their Man, when he is found to please them by a fair Carriage and voluble Tongue, who never leave off till they have rendred him gracious to all their Acquaintance; who flock to him in Droves, and are as full of Chat as a Magpy when she has found an Owl in the Wood at Noon-day; nor wants he his Lime-twigs for such sort of Birds, by whose frequentings he arrives to the top of his hopes, and sucks those Riches Galen is said to offer his Disciples: Dat Galenus opes.

But as all the Eggs laid under one Hen do not always prove, so many of this Tribe miss their aim, and after an expence of time and endeavour, are forced to fall upon other Trades to get a Livelyhood. Here is no precedent License of Practising, but it is lawful for any one to exercise this Function who has the impudence to pretend to it.

The Suffee's Death required of his Physician.

The Suffee retains several in Ordinary, and others in Extraordinary, without any Salary; the Chief of whom is Hakaim Bashed, and suffers on his Master's Death, not only Banishment from Court, but Dispoyling of all his Goods, and must acknowledge it a Favour to escape with Life.

In

In the matter of their Phyſick, Extracts, or Eſſences of Plants, Roots, or Minerals, are beyond their Pharmacy; only they uſe cooling Seeds, and Medicines of that nature; ſo that in repelling a Fever, they make but one work of that and the Innate Heat, where moſt an end both become extinguiſhed at once; or at leaſt, the Body is left in that condition, that Obſtructions or an Ill Habit ſucceeds; although I am not ignorant, that ſometimes after the greateſt Care in Chronical Diſtempers, ſuch things will happen, according to the Experience of Hippocrates, yet in Acute Diſtempers ſo frequently to fall into theſe Indiſpoſitions, I cannot excuſe the Indiſcretion of theſe Medicaſters, whoſe Patients in Suffahaun ſeldom paſs out of this Life by any other way to their Graves. Chap. XIII.

Their Preſcripts.

Beſides this Abuſe, their Preſcriptions are Pancraſtical, a Salve for every Sore, without reſpect had to difference of Temperament, or Conſtitution; nay, or even to the Diſtempers themſelves; but asking ſome frivolous Queſtions, viewing the Veins of the Hands and Feet, inſpecting the Tongue, they write at adventure. The Apothecary diſpenſes the Ingredients into ſo many Papers, and leaves them to be boiled according to his Directions, and given to the Sick Party at ſuch and ſuch hours of ſuch a day, by any good Woman, or heedleſs Servant; who not attending the Quantities of the Liquor more than the Qualities of the Ingredients, boil more or leſs, not as the Exigency either of the Medicines or the Patient requires, but as if they were to make Pottage, and give him to drink of this heterogeneous Broath, ſometimes Three or Four Pints at a time; ſo that if it fails moving the Belly by its excitative Faculty, yet by its exceſſive Doſe it makes way for Evacuation: And this they do repeat moſt an end for a Fortnight or Three Weeks together; which if it ſucceed not, another Phyſician is conſulted; for among ſuch ſtore they think it hard to miſs of a Cure; and in that are ſo opinionated, that if their own Nation cannot give them Remedy, they think none other can. (Though as to Chyrurgery they are of another mind, thinking the Europeans better at Manual Operation than themſelves.) But to proceed, being ſeverely handled by one, they fly to another; and he from extreme Cold things runs upon the other extreme; ſo that between theſe two Rocks its no wonder the Patient ſo often miſcarries, and ſo many concurring Cauſes joined with their Diſtemper, hurry them to another World.

What Purges approved.

Rhabarb, Turbith, and Scammony, are dreadful to them; but Sena, Caſſia, Manna, and Turpentine, are ſwallowed without any apprehenſion of evil. Many of their Phyſicians inſiſt on Diets unuſual elſewhere, as Goats-fleſh, Horſes, Aſſes, and Camels fleſh; for which reaſon they have diſtinct Shambles for the ſame purpoſe.

What Authors in Eſteem.

Avicen, Averroes, and Rhaſis, are known Authors among them; and among the moſt Learned, Galen and Hippocrates, and ſome more Modern, who have treated of Botany, and Human Parts.

Their Law forbids them to inſpect a dead Carkaſs; they therefore lean implicitly on what they find among Ancient Anatomiſts, and yet think themſelves at no loſs in that Science; whence it is their Practice is lame, and their Theory no more than the prating of a Parrot.

Letter V.

Unskilful in Chyrurgery.

Hence it follows they are imperfect in the Chyrurgeons Art; they can tell how to protract slight Wounds into Length of Time, but for things of real danger they are to seek which way to handle; especially where Ense recidendum ne pars sincera trahatur.

The Knife is us'd to part the dead, and give
The Vital Part occasion to live.

Yet they are bold enough with the Blood, where they command Phlebotomy, bleeding like Farriers.

Endemial Diseases.

The Endemial Diseases of this Country, are Phrensies, Plurisies, Peripneumonies, Empyemaes, Catarrhs, distempers of the Eyes; Red Gum, which besets our Children in Europe, is pernicious to Old Age here; St. Anthony's Fire, or more properly the Persian Fire, impressing on the adust Blood the nature of Atrabile: But the fashionable Malady of the Country is a Clap, scarce One in Ten being free from it; which the unbounded Liberty of Women, Cheapness of the Commodity, and the Encouragement of their filthy Law, are main Incentives to. And to back this Lewdness, they bring the Example of their Prophet Haly, who lying down without a Female Companion, is reported to be Author of this doughty Dialogue between the Earth and him, wherein the Earth upbraided him by saying, 'Whilst you lye on the Ground an unfruitful Log, a burthen to 'my sides, I sweat and labour in producing Vegetables, Minerals, 'and Animals for your use; Why then do you not busy your self in 'getting Children, to transmit your Offspring to Posterity? Which pleasing Reproof of the Venerable Prophet's recommending to his easy Disciples, they embrace with both Arms, while the Poyson creeps into the Marrow of their Bones, so that they are not come to Maturity, before they are rotten; though by reason of the Pureness of the Air, it seldom or never arrives to that height of Cruelty as in Europe; inasmuch as when any are so dealt by it, they reproach it with the Frank Disease, Atecheque Fringi, when it breaks out into Sores and Ulcers, after it has seized the whole Mass of Blood, and eats them up alive; while they wear theirs dormant almost to extreme Old Age, which makes them not much solicitous for Remedy, nor are there any who profess its Cure.

There is another Infirmity as general almost, proceeding from their Ceremonial Washing, when they exonerate, too frequent using of Baths, which causes a Relaxation of the Muscles of the Anus, whereby the great Gut of the Fundament falls down: Most of them by a Fulness of Body are subject to the Hemorrhoids; but what chiefly vexes them, walking or riding, (putting them into miserable Pain, and contorted Postures of the Back, and whole Trunk of the Body), is a Fistula in Ano, which they contract from their Athletick Temper, and constant being on Horseback; as has been observed not only by Sennertus, but Platerus, Fernelius, and others: Nor does it seldom fall out, from their aptness to Venery, and proneness to make use of Boys, that they are afflicted with terrible Mariscæ, riſcæ, or ſwoln Piles of ſeveral forms, by them called Obne; where- Chap. XIII.

in Worms, as they perſwade themſelves, are bred, that excruciate them with ſuch an Itch as they cannot lay, without adding Sin to Sin, and therein they report their Cure to be compleated; and this brings on them a white Leproſy, not incommoding the Body with Illneſs, but diſgracing it with Spots in the Face, Arms, Thighs, Breaſt, and other parts about them. Children have frequently Scald Heads, which makes them keep cloſe ſhav'd.

The Plague has not been known among them this Eighty Years and upwards, but the Spotted-Fever kills them preſently, yet is not contagious: The Bezoar-ſtone in this Caſe is highly approved.

The Gout afflicts few here, the Pox commonly ſecuring them from it; however as painful as that proves to their Bones, or rather Membranes ſurrounding them, they applaud all Provocatives in Phyſick, and will purchaſe them at any Rates; which are ſometimes ſo ſtrong, that they create a continued Priapiſm to theſe Goats and Satyrs, and by their Bows being always bent, are brought to an Inability of reducing them.

To divert their Care and Labours, they are great Devourers of Opium, and Koquenar (which is Poppy-heads boil'd), which they quaff when they have a mind to be merry; for which reaſon, as Hemp is ſown among our Fens and Fields, ſo they ſow Poppies, and when ripe, make Inciſion for the Juice, which gathering, they inſpiſſate and eat; to do which, thoſe unaccuſtomed adventuring unadviſedly upon too large a Doſe, inſtead of the expected effect of cheering the Spirits, chain up the Vitals ſo that they are never looſed more, for they never awake from the Lethargy it intrances them in: So that they begin gradually, and then arrive to great Quantities; as from a Grain to half an Ounce, without any Harm, beſides a frolickſome ſort of Drunkenneſs; by means whereof, without any other Suſtenance, they are qualified to undergo great Travels and Hardſhips: But having once begun, they muſt continue it, or elſe they dye; whereby it becomes ſo neceſſary, that if they miſ-time themſelves, as in their Ramzan, or on a Journey, they often expire for want of it: Yet thoſe that live at this rate are always as lean as Skeletons, and ſeldom themſelves; but ſuch is their love towards it, that they give themſelves up to the ſtudy of infatuating themſelves by all the ways they can, never ſmoaking a Pipe without the Leafs of the intoxicating Bang, and Flowers of the ſame, mixed with their Tobacco; beſides which, they contrive many more Medicines to put a Cheat upon the Pungency of their Cares, and drive Sorrow from their Hearts; which indeed diverts them for ſome few hours, till they return with a more fixed Melancholy, burthenſome to themſelves and others: While the Operation of their forced Mirth laſts, they are incapable at that time of any Buſineſs; Whence they proverbially ſay, Belque Teriac ne reſid, to any Trifler, or Fiery Spirit; That the Force of your Treacle you have eaten, ſtill remains.

Large quantities of Opium eaten at a time.

Moreover, they have other Treacles, ſuch as are taken notice to be ſold in the Markets, by Apulcies, and the Circe of Homer, prepared as Counter-Poyſons, which are compounded of Garlick, Mother of Thyme, and other Herbs beaten together: That Rich one made uſe of only by the Nobles, is adventitious, and is brought by their Merchants from Venice, the Poor not being able to go to the Price of ſuch Medicines or Phyſicians as exceed the common Rates; and therefore is it that their great Towns and Buzzars are full of Mountebanks, Charmers, and Quackſalvers, to gull them of their Caſh.

Letter V.

Their Lawyers.

After theſe Sons of Fate, follow the Lawyers, who hold the Chief Cazy or Codre for their Oracle, which is here uſurped by the Mufti, who ſubſtitutes others under him; who though the Courſe of Law meet moſtly with quicker diſpatch here than in Europe, yet they know well enough how to retard a gainful Cauſe; which is conſentaneous enough to the Comedian,

——O Lernæam vere ſobolem
Pragmaticorum, qui lites ex litibus ſerunt
Mortalibus immortaliter——

O wretched Crew of Pettifoggers, who Raiſe Striſes from Striſes, the Client to undo.

Againſt whom he has ſet down this wholſome Advice;

——Lites fuge,
Macrum arbitrium judicio potius eſt.

Flee lingring Suits, a lean Arbitrament
Is more than Trial gain'd, when Money's ſpent.

Here are no Inns of Courts, or Courts of Chancery; no Mootings, or emulous Conteſts for Victory; no being called to the Bar, or a ſelect, Learned, and upright Bench, which juſtly concert the Right of the Community; no diſtinct Courts, or ſubalternate Chambers to appeal to, which are illuſtrated with Venerable Knowledge of Eloquence and Oratory, beſides the Splendor of Nobility and Majeſty to adorn them: Here are no Counſellors, Advocates, or Secretaries diſtinguiſhed by their Robes.

Here only a Mullah is choſen by the Codre or Mufti, to be Cadi (corruptly called Kazy) or Judge, in his own Houſe, at his own time, and in no other Garment than uſual, unleſs a Red Cap make ſome Note of Dignity.

The Cadi.

To him comes the injured Party to complain of his Adverſary, and implores the Cadi to do him Juſtice: At the Cadi's Elbow ſtand ſeveral Officers ready to execute his Commands, to whom he pays no Wages, but what they get by Catchpolling; to one of theſe he gives his Mandates, ſaying, Fetch ſuch an one hither; who, glad of the Employment, ſeizes him by the Cadi's Authority, and brings him before him; nor ſhall he be let go, till he have diſcharged his Fees, guilty or not guilty; ſo cloſe do theſe Harpies hold their Prey, that they never let go their Graſp, unleſs a Morſel be offered to their Mouths, in lieu of their Purchaſe.

Some-

Sometimes when the Cadi ſits, one of the Parties is preſent, and the other abſent; then a freſh Meſſenger is ſent, and freſh Money muſt be paid; at other times both Contenders are preſent, and the Cadi ſits not, and the Cauſe hangs in ſuſpence while the Charges go on: But after delays of this kind, ſuppoſe they at length meet, and it prove matter of Debt contracted in the time of a former Cadi, whoſe Writing is produced and atteſted, when the Cadi gravely reproves the Debtor, Why doſt thou not fear God and pay thy Debts? He nothing concerned at the Admonition, replies, this Bond and Hand-writing I know not, it may be Counterfeit, I never had any thing to do with this man. Here Bonds unatteſted are of no force, by reaſon of moſt impudent Cheats, but they muſt have not only One or Two Witneſſes, but Thirty or Forty, and ſo to Sixty, who muſt be approved Men of Integrity, never accuſed to have told a Lie; and even then they will oppoſe their Evidence, inſinuating, That for a ſmall matter Knights of the Poſt may be Suborned, becauſe that Intereſt may ſway a many to be againſt one, and that a plain Truth may ſuffer through the conſpiracy of a multitude: Moreover, if they ſhould be detected, they only undergo a Reprimand from the Cadi, and no corporal Puniſhment, either of Death, or other Chaſtiſement; and ſhould it be like to go hard with the Defendant, or either Party, Plaintiff, or Defendant prove faulty, the conſcious Party ſeeks out ſome Familiar of the Cadi's, employed on this account to ſollicit the Cadi in his behalf, and ſecretly he obliges himſelf, either by Bond or Deed, to Bribe the Cadi to be his Friend, and therefore, either a Pledg is depoſited, or good Sureties brought to ſatisfy the Cadi. Chap. XIII.

In the mean while both being driven away from the Judgment-Seat, the Cadi with ſevere looks and angry words, threatens the Delinquent to clear his Debt; when begging for readmittance, he entertains the Creditor with a pleaſing ſmile, and tells him, Juſtice is from God; at the which he chears himſelf up with the hopes of receiving his Money, and the corrupt Judge acts his Cue ſo well, that few ſuſpect otherwiſe; when the other Party, as if hard meaſure were offered him, creeps with a dejected countenance to the feet of the Cadi, calling him Mirza, (a Title for the moſt noble Courtier) let me beg the favour of being heard but one word; the Cadi, as if provoked to wroth, bids him ſpeak; when he goes on, Your Worſhip knows in this City there are ſuch who on purpoſe are ſet to practiſe Cheats, that will do it ſo exactly, that the moſt diſcerning Eye ſhall not diſcover the Fallacy, and that Money will purchaſe Witneſſes, therefore let the Oath be put to me againſt my Adverſary, otherwiſe by theſe Tricks what Wealthy Man in Suffahaun can eſcape Poverty?

A Corrupt Judge.

This Gap being opened, the Cadi with a milder countenance asks him, if he dear ſwear this Debt to be unjuſt; then lays open to him the horrid Sin of Perjury, how that Hell flames are prepared both by God and their Prophet for breaches of Faith, and thoſe that preſume on that manner can never eſcape Damnation; whereat ſhaking the Borders of his Garments, as it were with pure hands bruſhing them, he anſwers, I fear God, and from my Youth hitherto have never omitted

Letter V.

omitted our prescribed Prayers, or the Fasts enjoined by our Law, and for my Honesty none can reprove me; besides, I am an Hodgee, and have the Honour conferred on me to be one of the Sons of the Prophet, and can any of that Sacred Stock tell a Lie? Then the Cadi calls for the Alcoran, which being brought, he rises out of reverence to the Divine Code, and Exhorts, Admonishes, and Preaches; yet he fearless lays his Hand on the Book, and by Swearing with a loud Voice that he owes him nothing, is dismissed from ever being accountable more; for here are no other judiciary proceedings or Tribunals to appeal to, where Mistakes may be rectified, or Inadvertency by too precipitate a Sentence corrected.

Lex Talionis.

Punishment in Criminal Causes are mightily biassed by Gold, which at any time or place shall prevail more than Right; but if it cannot be bought off, lex Talionis, an Eye for an Eye, and a Tooth for a Tooth, is the Law, according to Moses's Institution, and the Execution is committed to the fury of the Friends.

Drubbing on the Soles of the Feet.

For Theft Immuring serves turn, where they can make no other retribution, and for petty Larcenary, and for correcting of their Slaves and Servants, drubbing on the Soles of their Feet beyond Moses's allowance, laying thereon some hundreds of Blows, that they are disabled to walk a long time after.

The Law of like for like, affords us this memorable passage of the Emperor Severus, who made a bold Impostor in his Court undergo a suitable Punishment for his Offence, who had deluded several of his Courtiers with great Promises, and never had effected any; wherefore on their complaint, the Emperor commanded him to be stifled with Smoak, and the Crier at the same instant to make proclamation, qui fumum vendidit eodem pœnas dat, Who Sold Smoak perishes therewith. But this Law, though it seems the most equal among many Nations, cannot square in all points without difficulty, therefore it is the more prudently among us referred to the determinations of the Judges in Life and Death; who are to give Sentence according to their discretion and the common usages in Capital Offences.

Poligamy allowed.

Since Celibacy is exploded by their Law, simultaneous Poligamy is not only Tolerated but Commanded, and Whoring is reckoned Meritorious among the Moors; for this carnal Gospel allows Four Lawful Wives in Matrimony at one and the same time, besides Concubines, an indefinite Number, as every one's substance is able to provide for with Serving-maids and Slaves; besides which they may have for a determinate Price, such as they shall hire for an Hour, Day, Month, or Year; and any Born in these Three Families of Bedfellows, may be reputed as Legitimate, provided the reputed Father claim two parts, and the Woman one of the Child; whereby however speciously they boast of the Clarity of their Stock, it is apparent from what Puddle it is derived.

They Buy their Wives.

All Women here, contrary to our Custom, are Bought with a Price, the Husband that is to be, Bargaining to give so much for his Wive's Virginity by strict Indentures before the Cadi.

Are often Divorced.

Divorces are common among the ordinary People, though seldom among the great ones, who count it a shame. A Bill of Divorce called Talak is taken out when there is either an averſion from the Bed, or there are conceived home-bred troubles on account of the former Obligation, or when they have engaged themſelves to perform more than they are able, then they make quarrels among the Wives, ſetting them together by the Ears, and the Man grows ſurly to the new married Wife, not only giving her ill Language, but cruel Blows more than ſhe can bear; who preſently runs to the Cadi for a Divorce; but he willing to pacify them, returns her to her Husband with Exhortation to live peaceably; whereupon the Siege is renewed, and freſh Aſſaults are made by new Torments, till ſhe have remitted part of her Dowry, if not the whole. Chap. XIII.

Talak

Sometimes ſhe retires to her Father's Houſe, the Portion being retained, whence ariſe new Jars. The Husband going to the Cadi complains the Father keeps his Wife from him, and intreats his Warrant to fetch her back; where being brought afore the Cadi, and the Father with her to demand her Portion, ſhe opens againſt her Husband, and he againſt her, with that noiſe and thunder, that often the Cadi being tired with their bellowing and roaring on all ſides, cries out, they kill me with their bawling; and though he command ſilence, it is to no purpoſe, till being thoroughly vexed, he cauſe the men to be Baſtinadoed, who though they were deaf to Words, muſt give ear to Blows, for they eſteem it even indecent to lay hand on a Woman, or to ſtrike her before Folks.

If the Man propound the Divorce, and the Woman accept it, the Cadi pronounces the deciſive Sentence, becauſe the Mahometan Law obſerves to keep the right thereof in the power of the Man, not the Woman: But if the perverſe Woman inſiſts in her reſolution of Divorce after the Cadi hath perſuaded her to cohabit, and the Man refuſe to give it her, the Cadi declares them to be ſeparated; but the Woman in this condition cannot marry again, as being bound to her Husband; wherefore the Cadi commands the Man to give her Alimony, and maintain her at his own Charges while they refuſe to live together; but if they can reconcile themſelves, they may come together without the Cadi's revoking his Interdict for the firſt and ſecond time of Divorce; but after the third time they cannot come together without abominable Sin; yet ſuch is the Heat of Luſt in theſe Countries, that the Women cannot abſtain from the Man, no more than the Men from the Women; wherefore if ſhe takes another Husband, and ſome Months or Years living with him, if ſhe will, ſhe may be Divorced from him, and return to her firſt Husband.

All Contracts made before the Cadi.

To the Cadi's Cognizance belongs all manner of Contracts, Conveyances, and Settlements; to which purpoſe near his Door are ſuch as make Inſtruments ready written for ſale, in the Stile of their Law, to be preſented for the Cadi's peruſal: Into which inſerting the Names of John-a-Nokes, and John-a-Stiles, Zeid, and Ambre, the Cadi calls aloud, Zeid, where art thou? Who anſwers here, upon appearance: When the Cadi proceeds; This Houſe, Garden, or Land, or any thing of that kind, Doſt thou ſell willingly, and of thy own accord to Ambre? He affirming, aree, yes. Is the price agreed between you? Yes. Where are your Witneſſes? ſays ſays the Cadi; Then he replies, I have brought them, who anſwer for themſelves; the Cadi asks them, Do you know this to belong to Zeid? Who affirm, it is known to all the Town, even to the Children.

Letter V.

The Cadi after theſe Interrogatories, liſts up his Voice, and ſays, Does no one forbid this Contract? At which, they jointly cry aloud, no one forbids: Whereupon the Cadi calls for his Seal, which are words Engraven on Silver; and dipping it in Ink, ſtamps it three or four times in three or four places, eſpecially at the junctures of the Indenture, that no room may be left for fraudulent dealing, they not putting their own Hands, nor delivering it as their Act and Deed; but the Cadi makes the Obligation firm on this wiſe.

Uſury forbid by Mahomet, yet his Diſciples are cruel Extortioners.

Uſury is forbid by Mahomet, yet no place extorts more for Money lent; for Ten Thomands in a year, ſhall at a moderate Calculation bring them in Thirteen every year; for the Needy giving a Pledge (without which they do nothing) to the Broaker or Uſurer, which you pleaſe, Ten Thomands are procured for a Month, on condition he pays a Thomand for a Months Intereſt, and the Principal to be payed in, or the Pledge become forfeited; and for the firſt Months Intereſt he ſubducts aforehand, a Thomand, conſtraining the Borrower to return the Ten intire, or elſe ſeize the Pawn; ſuch intolerable exactions befitting only Turk, Jew, and Indian Banyan, who reap ſuch unconſcionable Gain by this Trade.

Thoſe who deſire to ſecure their Money thoroughly, come to the Cadi for a Bond, being agreed firſt on their Contract among themſelves to pay Fifteen, Twenty, and ſometimes Thirty Thomands for the uſe of one Hundred for one year. When the Money is brought in Two Bags, with a Knife, Book, or Mantle, and the Owner Zeid cries out before the Cadi, ſitting on the Seat of Juſtice: "I Zeid do give frankly for the ſpace of one year One hun-"dred Thomands; but I ſell this Book for Fifteen, Twenty, or Thirty "Thomands to Ambre, and he is content to give it; therefore I de-"ſire in the preſence of the Cadi, that Ambre may be obliged at "the years end to repay me my Hundred Thomands, according to "agreement, and then ſeizes the Fifteen, Twenty, or Thirty Thomands, according to agreement for the Book; or if he lets him have the whole hundred, the Cadi asks Ambre, Art thou content to give this Sum? And he anſwering, aree, yes, goes on, ſo thou art Debtor to Zeid an Hundred and Fifteen, Twenty, or Thirty Thomands, payable this time Twelve Months, being fully expired; to which he replying aree, it is valid in Law: In which Form of Writing ſuch caution is uſed, that they truſt not Figures, nor bare Words that expreſs the Sum intire, and at length, but half it and part it to prevent equivocation. For Example, the Sum of an Hundred Fifteen Thomands is the Principal, the half whereof is Fifty ſeven, and an half; the Fifth part is Twenty three; deluding hereby the skill of the moſt ſubtle Sophiſter, ſince the Subſequents ſo inexpugnably ſtrengthen the Antecedents.

They have another way of borrowing Money upon an Houſe, which they pawn for a certain Sum for ſo many years, and Hire their own Houſe of the Creditor at his terms, till the Sum be payed; payed; in which if there happen any lapse or failure, the House becomes forfeit at the end of the time, and is seized for the use of the Creditor, as well as if the Principal be not restored: And this is held good in Law among them.

The Sheik.

Besides the Cadi, they have another Splitter of Causes, called Sheik el elloum, being Interpreter of the Ancient Laws, or something like our Court of Chancery; (the other being for the Common-Law) who sits in his own House also without any subalternate Jurisdiction.

The Codre.

Nor does the Codre or Mufty disdain to Hear sometimes; but this Eagle catches not at Flies, hæc Aquila non capit Muscas, the most weighty Affairs being reserved for his Audience.

Guilty of Bribery and Injustice.

And through these muddy Streams runs the Law over all the Realm, they acting under the Cauns in the several Districts, and the Codre under the Emperor; which how consentaneous to self-preservation, let any one judge, where Bribery and Extortion get the upper-hand: For where Nature has prescribed that Rule as a Fundamental Maxim, That every man without respect to any ought to Patronize the innocent, or help the injured, whereby we seek to uphold the Community, and therein indeed preserve our selves, how can this come to pass, unless it should be alike diffusive to all, whereby every one of us become united in the same Law of Nature? which if Magistrates would consider, they would find the Press of the Argument lie thus, To preside is to do right and profitable things, agreeable to the Laws of self-preservation; for as the Rulers are over the People, so the Laws ought to be above the Rulers, I mean so far as to Govern by them, and act nothing contrary to them: Nor can that Man be just or vertuous, who conforms himself to any other Sentiments; or are they otherwise to be esteemed, than those whose Senses being depraved have not the true relish of their Food; who enslave the Laws, and act not within their prescript, and must come under the denomination of lustful, flagitious, covetous, and insensible persons, who have not the true Taste of Justice, but stupidly follow the Dictates of their own Wills; which is too truly the Case of this Government.

Nor need this be wondered at, since even their Summum bonum is placed in such Sensualities, as no ways consist with rectified Reason.

Their Paradise.

A Paradise Calculated for their blockish Temper, whose Reach is not superior to the groveling Beasts, and therefore aim at no higher Felicity;

Which makes them rely on their Interpreters of their Law when they preach, That after this Life the blessed Mahometans are to be received into pleasant Gardens, where they are to lie under the spreading Boughs of shady Trees; Clothed with soft Raiments; Adorned with most costly Gems; hung with Rich Chains, and Precious Rings; fed with the most delightful Fruits, delicate Fowls, and inticing Cates; shall quaff the best Nectar to Eternal Healths, without Intemperance; their Liquors distilling from Vines that are not ebriating, which shall never offend the Brain; their Couches shall be stuffed with the yielding Down; their Quilts shall lighty press their Bodies; and Virgins with never-dying Beauty shall bear them Company, who shall love none besides their own Husbands, nor never be less Virgins than when first enjoyed, constantly renewing a full Tide of Glee, which is never to Ebb into dull Sadness, but continue an uninterrupted course of self-complacency: These are the Excellent Attainments of their Cœlestial Happiness, and those that think these Promises of no avail, their Prophet denounces Hell-fire and Brimstone for their Unbelief.

Letter V.

Flectere si nequeat superos Acheronta movebit.
If in his Heaven they doubt there is no Room,
Hark how he Thunders out his fearful Doom.

Their Hell.

They shall be punished in smoaky Fire and Brimstone; their Meat shall be Pitch and Tar, mixed with Lime and Hair; their Drink a Composition of Flame, which shall cause intolerable Pains.

The Progress of their Religion.

A Religion suitable enough to this Meridian, where Polygamy, or the use of many Women is Authorized, which from these Borders has exspaciated it's self over the whole East with such impetuousness, that from the stinking Lake in Arabia, whence it first sprang, it has like a Torrent ran bearing all before it: Until it was a little distracted by the Ottoman and Suffean Factions, but so that its Course was not broken, but divaricated into two Streams, and so became more diffused, and the Channels made more rapid and extensive; so taking is this Doctrine, fitter for Brutes than Men.

The Souls of Men superior to Brutes.

For Man, to speak with the Philosopher, whether God or Nature the Mother of all things has given him a Soul, than which nothing can be more Sublime or more Divine, can he be so stupid or senseless abject to imagine there should be no difference betwixt him and Four-footed Creatures? Homo enim, ut cum Philosopho dicam, cum illi sive Deus, sive Mater rerum omnium Natura, Animam dederit, quo nihil præstantius neque divinius sic ipse se abjiciet ac prosternat, ut nihil inter illum & quadrupidem putat? On which consideration it might well be concluded with what the Author of Religio Medici writes on this Subject: The Alcoran is a Book composed unadvisedly, stuffed with idle and ridiculous Errors in Philosophy; sustained by apparent Solicisms, Subterfuges of Ignorance, the decrying of Academies, and the banishing of all manner of Learning, upheld by Force more than Reason, the Fortune of their Arms being their greatest Argument. To which Lypsius consents, O Nugamenta, &c. which made Avicenna, (of an extraordinary Happiness of Wit, though unhappily born under the Mahometan Sect, after he had seriously reflected on the Imposture,) blush to think their Prophet had placed Eternal Felicity in a life of Carnal Pleasures; insomuch that he was forced to confess he could do no otherwise than abjure his Faith to become Master of his Reason. "For, says he, The Law Mahomet has delivered to us, has "limited both Beatitude and Misery under Corporal Terms; but the "Promises and Hopes of Eternity, must be of other Blessings more "refined sure and solid, which can no ways be conceived but by "an immaculate and rectified Intellect, and the highest pitch of Ingenuity. *Avic. Chap. XIII.

what our Divines have rightly determined, That Spiritual Benedictions, abstracted from Earthly (as too mean) are the chief Object of Happiness, whereby we are united to the first Truth: And for no other end were we created by God, and a Soul stamped on our Body, and on our Soul Intelligence or Understanding, says the same Lypsius, but that we should live faithfully and godly on the Earth, and thereby proceeding towards Heaven, we should, being blessed together with him, reap Everlasting Felicity, which should be so, because Spiritual, which is Eternal; not Carnal, which vanisheth of its self, and passeth away, being but Temporary: And then, if the Happiness expected hereafter by all wise men, is Spiritual, our present Worship here ought to be directed thither, of which M. T. Cicero, though an Ethnick, was not ignorant, who has transmitted it as a Rule to Posterity, Lib. 2. De Nat. Deorum, Cultus autem Deorum, optimus, idemque castissimus, atque sanctissimus, plenissimusque Pietatis, ut eos semper purâ integrâ incorruptâ mente & voce veneremur: The adoring of the Gods ought to be the best Service we can pay them, which must be most chast, and holy, and full of Piety, that we may always reverence them with a pure, intire, uncorrupt Mind and Voice. And Hermes, Θεσμὸς τὸ θεῖ μὸς.

But an Holy, Pure and Spiritual, which is no where to be found but in Christianity.

And hence by the Mouths of the Heathens it is allowed, that an Holy and Pure Profession is an entrance to the Celestial Mansions. What better Conduct, what holier Guide than the Captain of our Salvation, the ever Blessed Jesus? who hath by his Apostle given us the true Characteristick of the Right Religion, which is first pure, then peaceable.

Then what depravity of understanding hath corrupted the Minds of these Sectators, that hath framed to themselves a nasty Stable, more full of Filth than Augeus his, instead of that beautiful and undefiled Structure of the Gospel; and for the most Holy and Pure Doctrine taught by Christ, embrace with prostrate Body and bended Knees, the Libidinous and Lascivious Worship of Mahomet? What Stupidity, what Inchantment bewitches them to admit an Impostor for a Prophet, a Deluder for a Saviour; for a Juno, as Ixion did, to grasp a Cloud?

Succes no Argument.

Nor let Succes animate them, since it is an Argument might serve the Gentiles as well as them, whose numbers exceed all the Controverted Religions put together, whom St. Paul, their professed Emissary, brands with unadvised Piety, and lays them under equal Condemnation; where he conjoins the Folly, τὸ γνωστὸν τοῦ θεοῦ, i. e. What can be known of God, is manifested among them; and ἐσκοτίσθη, their foolish heart is darkened; which is the fault of the Mahometans as well as them, because the pravity of their Understandings has corrupted their knowledge of God, the only True God, whereby they should know his only Son Christ Jesus, and him crucified, to fulfil both the Law and the Prophets. Thus from the previous Knowledge or Idea of Religion, as it is either true or false, so it happens there results a true Piety, Superstition or Idolatry, which would clearly appear, were Reason Master of our Conceptions.

CHAP. XIV.

The Appellations of the Warrior and the Scholar; of the Merchant, and Mechanicks and Villains; of their Garb, Civility of Manners, Facetiouſneſs, Revelling, Sports, Weddings, Cleanſings and Burials; of their Women, and Licenſe of Curtiſans. The Eunuchs, Vertues and Vices; and laſtly, their Supputations of Coin, Meaſures and Time.

AND now being about to diſmiſs the Two Upper Forms from farther examination, we ſhall part with them with their proper Appellatives; The Warrior bluſtering in the Title of Begue, and the Gown-man priding himſelf in the courteous Name of Miirza; who being thus Marſhalled with Reſpect, and paſſed by with what Order they are allowed,

The Merchant.

The Crowding Multitude preſs for Admittance, ſcarcely affording Priority to the Wealthy Merchant; the moſt Honourable of whom are the Armenians, and therefore ſtyled Cogee, or Rich, by the Perſians; though even among the Perſians many covet to be ſo reputed, but care not to meaſure the wide World, like them, venturing no farther than over to India, which is their ne plus ultrà, while the diligent Armenian, Per Mare per Terras, per quod tegit omnia, Cœlum.

By Sea and Land does ſearch for Store,
And all Heaven's Covering ranſacks o're.

The Moors are by Nature, heavy, dull and lazy; and were they not ſtimulated by Neceſſity, would not trot from their own Homes; for they are content with the Rags of Poverty, rather than to put their Hands to labour; and when they do exert their Faculties, they rather ſtudy to impoſe by Fraud, than by Induſtry and honeſt Gain to repair their Fortunes.

Cheats in all Profeſſions

Underpullers to theſe are the Shopkeepers, whoſe Mercurial Parts are fitted to put off the worſt Wares, by making appearance of the beſt, either by falſe Lights, or crafty obtruding the Choiſeſt to the view on their Stalls, and foiſting Goods diſagreable to the Patterns on their Chapmen.

Nor are the Handicraft free from Sophiſtry, having taſted the ſame Philtre; the Cook, a Cheating Knave, will ſell Aſſes, Camels, or Horſe Fleſh, inſtead of Ox's; and that often fetched out of the High-ways, being killed with Labour, or dead of Diſeaſes, while the Unwary Buyer pays for wholſome Food.

The Baker mixes with his Meal ſome Chalky Earth, which the Imprudent ſuppoſe to be good Wheat; though theſe when detected (as intimated already) ſuffer ſeverely for it.

The Artizans alſo conſpire in this, that Strangers are to be cozened; from whence reſults the neceſſity of employing Broakers or Banyans, that the Cretes may deal with the Cretes; or as our Engliſh Proverb hath it, Always ſet a Knave to catch a Knave.

Make the Broakers neceſſary.

For all theſe Miſcarriages, not the Government ſo much, as the Adminiſtrators of Juſtice, are to be blamed: For the Laws are ſound enough, were not the Magiſtrates faulty in the Execution; and the Reaſon is plain, their Offices being purchaſed at high Rates, indirect Courſes muſt be taken to repay themſelves: Wherefore there is hardly any Villany unconnived at, if they bribe but honeſtly, and have the wit not to be open in their Cheats; ſo that thoſe, whoſe duty it is to preſerve the Commonweal, are ſo far from being intent thereon, that on the contrary, their main ſcope is directed how to vex and oppreſs the Innocent; whereby, inſtead of being Diſpenſers of Equity and Right to the Citizens, they are the only Plague and Grievance they lie under: For their Gain ariſes moſtly from the Ills they contrive for thoſe under their malevolent Authority, as may appear by the ſubſequent, much to be lamented Story.

The Villany of a Droger.

A certain Droger or Calenture of a City, being introduced by the power of Gold, that he might the better make himſelf whole, began to ruminate within himſelf (nor is the Devil wanting to ſuch Servants;) wherefore, beſides the uſual Exactions, to wit, to load the Rich with Injuries, Tributes, Priſon, Stripes and Shackles; whereas he could not bring that to account to all, he deviſed a more ſure and available Stratagem; he enters a League and Amity with all the Men of Note, treats them civilly abroad, and invites them friendly at home, but not without deſign; entertaining at the ſame time correſpondence with all the Pimps, Panders and Bawds of the Town, and charges the latter to mix with all the lawful Wives in the publick Baths (ſince only Men of the higheſt Rank have them in their Houſes) and to obſerve their Manners, Geſtures, Garments, Shoes, and their very Smocks, and give him an account; nor dare they be deficient in their part: At the next Aſſembly, where every one ſtrives to the utmoſt of his Gravity to behave himſelf, he puts on a ſober Vizor, looks concerned, and out of order; after many Expreſſions of ſincerity, and a deep ſenſe of Honour, he burſts out into heavy ſighs, at which the Good Man, to whom he directs his Diſcourſe, afflicted to ſee him in theſe Dumps, muſt to his own ruin ask the occaſion of his ſudden alteration: He craftily returns, The buſineſs is no otherwiſe mine, than as it relates to my Friend, whoſe Credit is dearer to me than mine own, nor can I endure to ſee him abuſed; then the deceived Coxe grows more inſtant, begging that he would not conceal it from him.

The Droger being Maſter of his Science, perſiſts; What comfort can I reap from your diſturbance? It were better I ſhould be ſilent; yet—whereat the other inflamed, thinking the Miſcarriage aimed at him, greedily ſwallows the Bait; and whilſt he endeavours to clear the doubt, is much more intricated than before, and therefore leaves not off till he have wrought him to diſcover the dangerous Secret; the Droger with much ado ſuffers himſelf to be overcome, and then he he declares, to his great grief, he took his Wife in Adultery with a Scoundrel, on whom, according to the Law, he inflicted sudden Death, as he deserved; but for the Respect born to him, he permitted his Lady to escape; nor had he made more words of it, had not he extorted this Confession; nor should he have known it, even at this time, had he not feared some less affected to him might have reproached him openly, with what he now privately advised him only of, otherwise it should have been buried in silence for all him.

Letter V.

The Husband astonished, by degrees hardly recovers himself, but speaking incoherently as his Temper provokes him; sometimes breaks forth in a passion and hurries to the destruction of his Wife and Children, sacrificing all to his Fury, cutting off both Root and Branch by a desperate depriving them of their Lives; than which the Droger desires not a greater benefit, seising both him and his Goods for satisfaction of the Law: But if he begins to consider, and cooly to examin how can this be? Such a night I am sure she lay with me, or was so and so employed at such a time in her own House.

The Droger in nothing abashed, goes on, Has not your Wife such a sort of Smock? Such a Pair of Breeches? Such a Vest? And then particularizes her Habit; which things are too well known by him to be denied, and so is possessed with a belief of the Levity of his Wife, and the Kindness of the Droger not to publish his Shame; which compells him to gratify the Favour by good Sums of Money, and either Repudiate, Beat, or Kill his Innocent Wife for the malicious and wicked Invention of an unjust Magistrate.

The Persian in his City Dress.

Hitherto we have taken notice of little change in Apparel to distinguish them, the Patricii, or Nobles, being of the same make with the meaner Multitude, only their every-day Cloaths surpass in Richness, being Surbaffs, or Cloath of Silver or Gold, and the middle Sort only appear so on great days, otherwise they are Habited alike, unless Business, or Necessity of the Weather create a difference; they Ride shorter, and are booted over their Stockins, with a kind of Buskin with flat Heels, only shod with an Iron Horse-shoe; in the Winter they wrap themselves in Furs, and in the Summer-time go in looser as well as lighter Garments: Most an end their Stockins and upper Jerkins are made of English Broad Cloth; within doors they are clad more carelesly, as also when they are on Foot near their own Homes.

But the set Dress of the Persian is after this manner; His Head being Shaved, a large Turbat is placed upon his Crown, of divers Colours, either Silk or Cotton, in the Figure of an over-grown Cabage, with a great broad Leaf a top, which is wrought of Gold or Silver, and spread to make a shew; his Beard is Cut neatly, and the Whiskers kept in Cases, and encouraged from one Ear to the other, in fashion of an Half-Moon on the upper Lip, with only a decent Peak on the under; not so mossy or slovenly, as either Turkish or Indian Mahometans: Next, upon his Body is a Shirt, which he covers with a Vest, tied double on his Breast, and strait to his Body as far as the Waste, from whence it hangs in Pleats to his Ancles, sometimes Quilted, sometimes not; his Loins are Girt with Phrigian Girdles or rich Sashes, above which his Belt carries a Falched Sword or Scimiter; from his Hips long close Breeches of Linnen, come down to his Hose, of London Sackcloth of any Colour, which are cut loose, not respecting the shape of the Leg; over all a loose Coat of the same, without Sleeves, Lined with Furs, or Sables, or else Silk; the outside either Scarlet, or the finest Wool of Europe, or Cloath of Silver or Gold of their own Manufactory; his Shoes of the best Shagreen Leather, mostly Green, with narrow Toes, high narrow Heels, shod with neat Iron Half-moons, without Shoe-ties or Quarters to pull up about their Heels, being the readier to slip off and on as occasion requires; instead of Gloves they Tincture not only their Hands, but Feet, with a dark Red Colour, which they do with the Alkena, or Hen of the Arabs, small Twigs of which Plant Lobelius writes, are brought out of Africa to be Sold, wherewith they Dye their Hair Yellow, or of a sandy Red; and not only the Turks, who are delighted with that Colour, stain their Hair, but their Hands and Feet, with the Nails on each, and other parts of the Body, to restrain Sweating and filthy Smells proceeding therefrom, Plat. p. 165. de Discoloratione. Both which are mistakes, in relation to the staining of the Hair, but as to the other part it is true. Chap XIV.

They only use a Glove when they carry their Hawks on their Fists, with which they are as often seen to carry them on Foot, as on Horseback. And thus have we Robed the Sparkish Persian in his City Dress; and now we shall attend the Ruder and less carefully Attired Rustick about his Country Affairs; which we shall bring under a Threefold consideration; for whether they be Carriers, Herdsmen, or Farmers, or rather Hinds, they are all Vassals to supreme Masters.

The first therefore are such as Travel to and again, who must not enter upon that Trust without a sure Return, non est abire domum vacuumque redire; for they, for so many Beasts of Burthen, with their Bells and Trappings, much like our Pack-Horses, (suppose Twenty Mules, Thirty Asses, Forty, Fifty, Hundred, Two hundred, more or less committed to their Care,) stipulate for an equivalent Profit to the Owners; the Pack-saddles are a Load themselves, being thick and broad, and made afore with an high Steeple, or Pyramid, and the Ridge in the middle is like a Mountain, over which they hang their Carriages; the like is to be said of their Camels. The Chief Drover is called Golabdar, and is priviledged only to Command over his Fellow-Servants, not to Domineer over any Passengers, whether Franks or Natives, as among the Turks is practised, but rather to yield themselves to the Obedience of those who employ them. The Drover.

Those that breed up Cattel are wandring Shepherds, and have no stated Habitation; but where they find the best Pasture they pitch their Tents, together with their Wives, Children, and Families, with all their Troops, in the fattest Vallies, living abroad far from great Towns, like the Wild Arabs, whose Chief, or Father of the Tribe, is owned by them, and no other, he giving account to the Emperor for the Number of their Flocks, and the Annual Increase; for they are Morose and Untamed, and are apt enough to Worry The Herdsmen.

Letter V.

Worry any who fall unadviſedly among them: Their Dogs, with which they guard the Folds, are like Wolves, as fierce and ſtronger than their Wolves are here.

Among theſe we muſt reckon thoſe that bring up the King's Breed of Horſes, becauſe they lead a Life very like theſe, though under the Juriſdiction of a Prime Courtier, who lives like a Perſian both for Eating and Pomp in his Pavilions of State in the open Fields, keeping there a kind of a Court with his Fellows and Companions, while the Inferior Servants provide for innumerable Droves of Cattle; for whoſe Foles newly colted, the Mules are the beſt defence, (ſecuring them from the attempts of the wildeſt Creatures when their Mares ſhall deſert them, by a vigorous reſiſtance with their Heels,) never leaving to proſecute them till they have drove them from their deſigned Rape; and to this End ſhall muſter themſelves together when they perceive any danger threaten the Young ones in their reſpective Droves, and for the ſame purpoſe are nouriſhed to be their Keepers.

The Husbandman.

Theſe then are Vagrants, while the Husbandman fixes himſelf in the Villages, to whom the native Soil is ſweet, who reaps the Fruit of his Labour, provided he take care to diſcharge his Landlord, who generally is the Emperor, or elſe as bad a Task-maſter.

Theſe go clad in courſe Cloths underneath, above with Felts, kneaded into the form of a Coat, and are covered with Hats of the ſame, but their Hats are grey, bound about with a Linnen Cloth either of White, Green or Blew; their Coats are of what Colour they pleaſe, but moſtly Blew; their Hats are high-crowned, and the Brim ſlit before and behind, which if it be cold, they pull down and bind with their Cloth; if the Sun offend their Eyes, they draw it over their Faces, or cock up when it is ſhady: When they reſt, the upper Garment is put on with Sleeves, armed with an undreſſed Sheep's-skin againſt the injury of the Weather; their Shirt next their Skin is rugged enough; over it a plain Jirkin is tied with an hard Linnen Girdle of the ſame wooft with the Shirt: About the Calves of their Legs they bind Rowlers for want of Stockins, and their Shoes are ſoled with Wood, and the upper part wrought over with Packthread.

The Derviſes.

The Derviſes profeſſing Poverty, aſſume this Garb here, but not with that State they ramble up and down in India; being without Beaſts of Burthen, without Wallets full of Proviſions, which the others ſeize by force, without Attendance, without other Enſigns or Weapons more than a Staff and Horn; travelling without Company, or indeed any Safe-paſs; and if they fix up their Standard, it is among the Tombs; none giving them harbour, or encouraging this ſort of Madneſs, as well for the natural Antipathy to Beggery, as for that under this Cloak many Intrigues and ill Deſigns have been carried on.

Vine-dreſſers.

The Chriſtians labour in their Vineyards, as do the Jews alſo.

Slaves made of the Old Perſians.

In all other Servility and Slavery the Old Gabers or Gaurs, the true Ancient Perſians, who differ from the preſent in Speech, Inſtitutes, Laws, Countenance, Voice and Gate, which they retain with all the Abjectneſs and Sordidneſs a continual preſſure of Misfortune can reduce reduce them to; being once Lords of all the World, are no more now than the Off-ſcum of the Earth, and the meaneſt on whom the Sun ſhines, although ſtill he is adored as their Deity. Ch. XIV.

The Eunuchs.

And theſe being the Loweſt of Mankind, made ſo by their Sloth; we ſhall paſs from them, to thoſe diſabled from being Men by the Barbarous Cuſtom of theſe Nations; whoſe Favour muſt be courted before we can come to the ſpeech of their Women, I mean the Eunuchs; who barking, ſtraitly wake their Maſters; to whom being well diſpoſed, it is hard to caſt a ſeducing Bait before them; for ſince they are incapable of Enjoyments, though not of the Thoughts of Venery, their Maſters confide in their Impotency to preſide over the Female Senate, ſetting them as Spies over their Incontinency, and as faithful Keepers of their Vertue of Neceſſity: They order all their Cloths, and ſee that every one be arraid as becomes them, and that nothing indecent be committed among them; ſo pertenacious are they in the Authority placed in them, out of a tyrannical Humour, that they are never brought over to their Miſtreſſes Deſigns, but are ever truſty to their Maſter's Pleaſure, being moſt exquiſite in the Art of Bawdery, and impure Aſſiſtants to Lechery; inſomuch, that whoever beholds them, muſt pronounce them a Map of Villany; for they look as if they had ſtolen an Old Woman's Face, and a Puppit's Voice, ſeldom Fat in Body, but always Lean in Viſage, without Beard, that not ſo much as the Hair of a Good Man appears, and the very Image of that Divine Creature ſeems utterly eraced; that one would ſuſpect them to be Gypſies inverted, transformed from Young Men into Deformed Old Beldams, unleſs their Cloaths were allowed to be the ſame as the Mens; for they have no other Teſtimony left of their once being of the ſame Sex; for they are Gelded ſo inartificially, or Butcherly rather, that All is cut off, nothing of witneſs being left, but as clear as the Skin will permit; and thus are they given over to Nature to cicatrize: If they live, it is well; if not, they try others till they do; wherefore a Chyrurgion skilled in this Art, is of greater value, than if he were expert in every other part, and deficient in this.

They have both White and Black; the firſt from Georgia, the other from Arabia and Africa; theſe are the fit Tools of their Beaſtly Offices, and therefore the more endeared to their Maſters, by how much the more lewd they are.

The Old Women.

Which would hardly be born with ſilence by the Ancient Procurers of the Female Sex, had they not been found faulty in their often contriving and helping their Young Miſtreſſes out in their Aſſignations; of which they being conſcious, they the more quietly admit them into their Quarters, not to ſay more contentedly; for they look upon them to be Overſeers of their Actions, and impoſed as ſo many Argus's to diſcover all their Intrigues.

Their Women.

In the mean while, the Women of this Country are in a bad State, where Jealouſy reigns with ſuch a ſway, (and it is ſaid not without cauſe;) for which reaſon they are without hope of redreſs, or any one ſo much as to pity them, ſince they'r known above once to break through thoſe Bars; nor is it wonderful when their Profoundeſt Divines teach them to be ἄψυχας, without Rational Souls, and therefore exclude them their Moſques; nor are they trained up in thoſe Principles from their Youth, which ſhould render them fit to become prudent Matrons; but meaſuring from extraneous things the ſweetneſs of their Being, are inſtructed in Affairs of the Bed, Banquetting, Luxury, and Brutiſh Obſequiouſneſs.

Letter V.

Their Excellencies.

They are taught to Ride a Straddle like Men, to Leap, to Dart, and drink Tobacco.

None, though of the Royal Lineage, are permitted in Matters of State to meddle, or have their Cabals or Inſtruments, whereby to convey their Policies; nor muſt they ſtir abroad unvailed, unleſs ſhut up in Cedgewaies, and then well attended.

They have little care over their Children, nor have they much buſineſs with the Reel or Spindle; as if they were created only to be Idle Companions for the Men; their Garments differ no farther from the Mens than Conveniency requires; their Hair is braided with Elegancy under their Veils, with a Golden Crown or Garland, beſtuck with Jewels and precious Stones in pretty Knots and Fancies.

Pectoris & cordis pariter proprieque monile

Annulus eſt manuum, ſicut armillæ brachiorum,
Atque periſcelides exornant crura puellæ.

Beſides the Breaſt, the Neck, the Ears, the Hand,
Their proper Ornaments, the Thighs command.

The Plebean Women walk without Doors, either on Foot, or elſe Ride on Horſe-back covered with White Sheets, with Holes for their Eyes and Noſe; content to enjoy Day at a little Hole rather than proſtitute their Face to publick View; the honeſt Women have no Borders to their Sheets.

The Mark of a Whore.

Thoſe that deſire to be reputed Whores have large Borders, and wear them as a Sign of their Trade; with which to diſgrace a Married Woman, and to ſhave her Head, is the greateſt Mark of Infamy ſhe can be branded with; unleſs to add a perpetual ſtigmatizing Note, ſhe be carried on an Aſs, with her Face to the Tail, quite through the City.

The Women are fair, with rather too much Ruddineſs in their Cheeks; their Hair and Eyes moſt black; a little Burly, by reaſon they wear their Cloths looſe, yet not altogether ſo, but more at eaſe than our Dames; a Plump Laſs being in more eſteem than our Slender and Strait-laced Maidens.

The Lovers court not one another; for the Recluſeneſs of their Condition is ſuch, that ſhould they attempt to carry on a Secret Amour, it could not long lie hid; wherefore when they are at leaſure to Love, they ask the Parents of the Daughter for their Conſent, which if they gain, the Match is ſtruck up: That of Catullus being granted,

Virginitas

Virginitas non tota tua est, ex parte parentum est,
Tertia pars matri data, pars tertia patri,
Tertia sola tua est. Noli pugnare duobus.

Your Virginity is not all your own;
Two Thirds your Parents claim, one Third alone
Remains to you. Fight not then two to one.

She is led through the Streets in all her best Apparel vailed, without Dowry, more than what Goods and Chattels are sent with lusty Slaves, by her several Relations, with a pompous Procession and Illuminations, with noisy Musick for several Nights together; and thus the Men do as it were, buy their Wives, while the Women are ignorant of the Chapman till they come together; it being not reputable for Women of good Fame to enter upon such Bargains.

Curtezans.

Only professed Whores are tollerated to make the best of their Markets; Curtezans therefore are dispensed by the King, they giving him so much for their License when they first set up, and Annually as long as they practise, not exceeding the number of Forty thousand in his Chief City of Suffahaun; and these are always Marrying, as the Poet pleasantly relates,

Quotidie viro nubit,
Nupsitque hodie,
Nubit mox noctu.

Daily Man she Marries,
She has been wed to Day;
If till Night she tarries,
She thinks she does delay.

When they go to Bed, they Clamber not up to them, as we do, but throw themselves on the Ground after Carpets are laid, and a Bed made in a Summer-House in some Garden, left open in Summer-time, or else on the Tablets upon the Tops of their Houses; where, if they observe any peeping upon them, or their Wives, an Arrow drawn up to the head is let fly; nor does any blame the Marks-man when he hits. In Winter-time they keep all close.

Their Children how provided for.

If a Curtezan conceive, and it proves a Girl, she is registred of her Mothers Profession; if a Son, she fixes it on some Father.

There are costly Whores in this City, who will demand an hundred Thomands for one Nights Dalliance, and expect a Treat besides of half the price; these while their Wit and Beauty last, outshine the Ladies of the highest Potentate, and brave it through the Town with an Attendance superior to the wealthiest.

Lyings in, and Purifyings.

In their Lyings in, it is common for the ordinary Peoples Wives to meet together to assist the Woman that Cries out: And the Mother, and the Babe, are purified by washing in their Hummums after forty Days.

Letter V.

When their Husbands dye they make great Lamentations; the Widows howling with their Neighbours and Relations, crying out, Who will take care for us, who will defend the Cause of the Widow and the Fatherless; after the Custom of the Hebrews, where in Sacred Scripture they are termed Mutes, because there is none to plead for them; and if by chance they offer to urge any thing for themselves, no one regards their Complaints: For three Days after their Kindred's Death they change not their Garments; the Men shave not their Heads, or trim their Beards; the Women shear their Heads, vow Widowhood, and go carelesly Clad, only in a Sheet or mean Dress.

Widows reckoned Mutes.

Sodomy.

The Persians, when they let go their Modesty, put no bounds to their lascivious Desires, not being content with Natural Inclinations, outdo the Sensuality of the hottest Beasts, who never attempt on other than the Females of their own Species; but these, oh shame! covet Boys as much as Women; and to speak an horrid Truth, are too guilty of Buggering other Creatures; these poor Children thus abused are sad Spectacles, looking diseased, and are not long liv'd.

Addicted to Pleasures.

So wholly bent on Pleasures are these People, that to grow Rich, be saluted with Honour, appear magnificently, be accounted Noble and speciously Great, to Play, to Ride on Horseback with Gold Trappings on Prancing Steeds, to feast Day and Night, they will venture on any Evil Enterprize, and sell themselves to any Mischief, well knowing without Money they can arrive at none of these, so that they are intent to get it right or wrong: Therefore neither in Court, Camp, or in Judicature, is there catching any thing without a Golden Hook; no one sues in forma pauperis, Justice is not to be had without a Bribe; and if you Appeal to Cæsar, he is deaf, if you knock not at the Door with the Showre that opened the way to Danae's close Confiners.

On the other hand, commit any Wickedness, cast but a Golden Mist before the Chief Ministers, and the King shall know nothing of it; but if the Clamour of the Subject force a Magless, the Case is not represented fairly to the Emperor, but as a Blend they mix Falsities with Truth.

Atque ita mentuntur, sic veris falsa remiscent.

Corruptness of the Courtiers.

No Court in the World is fuller of Corruption than the Persian Court, whereupon the Crowd is sent away no better satisfied than it came; which causes ill Blood, a perpetual Reproach to the King, and if they durst, Insurrections, which whether Fear, or want of Courage restrain them, or the innate Fidelity and Passive Obedience on the formerly mentioned grounds, I shall not determine: Since at this time they seem to be more provoked by the Supiness of the Emperor, and the Ill Management of the Government, and the general out-cry of the Mobile; but yet, even in this Confusion I do not perceive a Propensity to Rebellion, though they refrain not from open Curses, especially the Womenkind, who are set on by the Men to bellow their Oppressions, which they roar at the Palace Gates, by Troops of Women,

in in a Tumultuous manner some Weeks together; to which Vocal Weapons they are sparing.

Women made use on to complain.

When as should the Men come in a Riot, they would handle them otherwise; which is the reason they thrust them on to complain, when they dare not speak their own Grievances, it being not held manly to fight with a Woman.

The Persian places Felicity in Prosperity.

And hence it comes to pass that the Law loses its Authority, and the Subject becomes a Prey to the Avarice and Violence of the Magistrate; and while the one grows exorbitantly Rich, the other becomes miserably Poor, through an unproportionable distribution; and by these Exactions is verified the Proverb, Homo homini Lupus; One Man devours another more cruelly than a Wolf. Nor is it possible for one that is Poor ever to rise without a Miracle, there being no Mean between extreme Poverty and the height of Wealth or Honour, which makes the Great ones truly Great, while the dejected Wretches have no other Sanctuary than to appear under the shelter of the Mighty; and to be reckoned of their Retinue is all the Favour to be expected in recompense for the most notorious Injury; which would augment the Affliction of a Generous Spirit, to follow on Foot the exalted Extortioner that has undone him, who climbed over others Ruin to be eminently Rich, and is still upheld by their Downfall. And this must ever be the state of those Kingdoms where Goodness is banished, and Virtue must give place to Vice; and this unavoidably happens where-ever the Mahometan Religion takes place; which makes a voluptuous Life the only Benediction both on Earth and in their Heaven; and this squares more peculiarly with the Climat and the Temper of the Persians, than any other Nation under the cope of Heaven: For since Misfortunes are looked on as the most grievous Curses, they all aim either to be, or to be thought Prosperous; whence it is not only indecent, but unhappy to walk on Foot out of Necessity; and he that comes abroad with the finest Palfry, the richest Accoutrements, the most Followers, with Footmen with Bells at their Wastes, Feathers in their Turbats, Embroidered Horse-Cloaths over their Shoulders, delicately wrought Saddles for War and Housings, Golden Bridles, Breast-Plates and Cruppers often beset with Precious Stones; has his Golden Headed Coleon behind him magnificently carried, with change of Vests in rich Buy-Shoes or Portmantles; he is the Favourite of Heaven and the Darling of Fortune, is courted by all, and esteemed the chief care of Providence. Thus mightily are the gaudy Bubbles of Fortune admired here; on which account to be most Impious is most emulated, since to arrive at these Ends there is no other method than what has already been related.

Their Recreations and Exercises.

And thus Equipped they appear in their Martial Camps, not to out-do, but out-shine each other, where they have Obelisks for Goals, where they try their Steeds, not giving them a long Race, but short and swift; they, as most of the East do, Ride short, and stop with a Jerk; for which, as has been said in India, their Curbs are useful, that on a motion they Obey; otherwise they (being placed with a sharp Cone, in a round Ring pointing on the Tongue,) so pierce it that it Bleeds as if struck with a Fleme; here they Gerede, or or cast Darts, play with Balls on Rackets, bringing their Steeds to observe the Rebound; here they train their Hawks to fly at Crows, and Crows to fly at Sparrows: Here they Exercise among themselves what the King requires to be presented before him; and the Nobility learn to Shoot backward, as the Parthians, their Predecessors, were wont, and in that were dreaded more on flight than when they stood to it; nor is this the only Skill they pretend to with Bows and Arrows, but Shoot at Marks not far distant, though they seldom practise Rovers.

Letter V.

On these Sands the Anointed Wrestler keeps himself in Breath, and the undaunted Fencer bares his Livid Arm; Rams are set against Rams, and against Bulls, Lions, &c. and against all, our English Mastiffs, who carry the Prize from the Combatants, when they Celebrate the Boetian Games.

They Hunt a long time together.

They are frequent Huntsmen: When they go out on this sport they return not in a Days time, as we do, but remove from place to place, where Game is to be had; take with them their Wives and Family, and Travel in state with full prepared Tables, and act the Bacchinals like Alexander; for which purpose they have their Tents and close Carriages, their Gogdans for Provisions; they carry also Bulgar-Hides, which they form into Tanks to Bathe themselves, and Women, in their Progress; for drinking Cups they have both Gold and Silver ones, as also large Flasks of that Metal; besides Earthen Jars for Water, and Puckeries, which are porous Vessels to keep their Liquor Cool.

How Treated on their return.

Upon their Return, or Entrance of any Magistrate into any great Town, or City, all of any Quality meet them at some Garden, a Pharsang off, with led Horses, Musick, and Banquets, to Congratulate their Arrival, which is also done upon their Departure, with a Train of Servants, and especially those bearing their Tobacco-Vessels, Tea, and Coffee-Pots; which, with hot Rose-Water, and Sugar-Candy, is their preparatory Fore runner to a splendid Entertainment; which they are sure to have at the return to their Palaces, where they Treat like Persians.

Immoderate in their Feasting.

Alighting they are introduced the Guest-Chamber, all bestrewed with Flowers and sweet Herbs, besides perfumed with Odoriferous Gums, or the Aloes Wood alone, or other resiny Matters made into Candles, and in Massy Silver Fuming-Pots very costly and delicate; leaving their Slippers where they begin to tread on Carpets; they take their Seats on Susanees, a rich Tapestry of Needle-Work that Borders the Carpets, behind which are placed huge Velvet Bolsters, before them Spitting Pots to void their Spittle in when they Smoak Tobacco, or Eat Pawn; these Rooms are large and airy, and open folding Windows on every side, where being placed they bring their Coloons; after which they Welcome you by a flood of Rose-Water, or other Compound Water poured on your Head and Beard, then they bring in, in neat Voiders, China Plates of Fruit, as Pistachia's, Walnuts, Almonds, Haslenuts, Grapes, Prunes, Prunello's, Apricots Dried, and Sweatmeats Wet and Dry of all sorts, amidst whereof they fill out Coffee, Tea, and Hot Rose-Water, and all the while have Mimicks, Stage-Players, and Dancers to divert, between whose

whose Interludes is mixed the Custom, as ancient as Nebuchadnezzar, of certain Wise Men repeating Verses in their Praise, or reading Monuments of Antiquity, which continues till Victuals are brought in, and the Cloath spread on the Carpets, every one keeping their places; First, Water being brought in great Silver Basons and Ewers to Wash, the Courses are ushered in with loud Musick, and the Table being filled, the Servitors are placed so as to furnish every one with Plates of the several Varieties, which they place before each, and give them long Wheaten Cakes, both for Napkins, Trencher, and Bread, and sometimes thin Pancakes made of Rice; though Boiled Rice serves usually for Bread, which they mix with their Soops and Pottage. Chap. XIV.

The usual Drink is Sherbet, made of Water, Juice of Lemmons, and Ambergreece, which they drink out of long thin Wooden Spoons, wherewith they lade it out of their Bowls.

The most admired Dainty, wherewith they stuff themselves, is Pullow, whereof they will fill themselves up to the Throat and receive no hurt, it being so well prepared for the Stomach. After they have Eaten well, and the Cloath is removed, they Wash again.

And then most of them will freely take off their Bowls of Wine, (which is brought to each by their several Servants) most of Silver, some of Gold, which we call a Tos, and is made like a Wooden Dish, purposely so shap'd for convenient Carriage, at the bottom of their Coosdans placing their Gurgulets upon it, which Coosdan is a Case made neatly of Rattans or Canes, covered with a Coverlet of Scarlet, Bordered with Silk for Shew as well as to keep the Dust off.

When they have tired themselves with Feasting (which is not suddenly) as they depart, they return Thanks, by Inviting every one in course to an Entertainment of the like nature, where they strive to outdo each other. Thus extravagantly Luxurious and immoderately Profuse are they in their great Feasts, stately Dining-Rooms, magnificent Gardens, and Water-Courses; exceeding the Roman Voluptuousness, of whose Prodigality Seneca.

Turpis libido (scilicet) potens venere
Luxuria victrix, orbis immensas opes,
Jampridem avaris manibus ut perdat, rapit.

Active in Lustful Fires, they heap up stores,
To waste in Riot, and to spend on Whores.
Seize all the World by Avaritious Hands,
Get to consume on Prodigal Commands.

In their Weddings, Childbearings, Circumcisions and Purifying Banquets, they make great Revellings, Fireworks and Rejoycings Night and Day for a Month together, that it is troublesome living in great Cities by reason of their Nocturnal Perambulations, when they Shoot, Shout, and make great Acclamations, with hideous thundring Kettle Drums and Trumpets; and however obscure they live at other times, they are wholly taken up in Expences at these Times, and sometimes ſometimes forgetting the main Chance, they lay out all, and more, to imitate Men of Fame.

But the greateſt Feſtivities are injoined by the Church, ſome whereof are common to the Turks and Perſians, others belong only to the Perſian Sect; as thoſe in the end of their great Faſt of the Ramzan, and that of Imaum Oſſeen, No Roſe, when the Caliph, or Archflamen, or one for him, ſhould ſacrifice a Ram in memory of that intangled in the Thickets, which Abraham offered up an Holocauſt inſtead of his Son Iſaac, and theſe are equally obſerved by each.

When the Emperor, ſeating himſelf on his Throne, arrayed in his Royal Robes, that he might diſplay all the Wealth and Glory of the Empire both to the Plebeans and Potentates, and ought after the Primitive Inſtitution to make a Feaſt for all the Princes and his Servants, the Power of Perſia, the Nobles and Prefects of Provinces, for many days together: By placing Golden Veſſels at the Gates of his Palace for the Lions and ſtrange Beaſts to drink out of, as large Golden Jarrs for Paſſengers; where, upon the frequent expectation of their Liege Lord, and the Shews and Paſtimes repreſented before him on theſe Days, great Numbers of People flocked into the Hypodrome, where the Preſence of the King was as eagerly deſired, as Cæſar's Advent was welcomed by Martial.

Phoſphore redde diem; cur gaudia noſtra moreris, Cæſare venturo? Phoſphore redde diem.

But as if nothing were owing either to the Affections of the Vulgar, or to Honeſt Report, he not only neglects the Sports and Games, but by contracting new Impieties, looſens the very Bonds by which the Subjects Faith are tied; for he being commonly drunk on theſe Solemnities within doors, with his Pimps and Panders comes abroad like a Royſter, neither regarding the Temple, or the Grandure of the Mageleſs: For on No Roſe, the Firſt Day of the Year, which is the Tenth of March, he being attended by the Great Council, ſhould receive the Homage of all his Great Slaves, and they ſhould pay their Feuditory Tributes, for which he ſhould return them Colluts, or Robes of Honour, either by themſelves or Subſtitutes, and at the ſame time entertain them Royally; where, beſides the uſual Sports, on this Day there is a peculiar Diverſion of the Shotters or Footmen, begun at Two or Three in the Morning, and held for Twelve Hours; in which ſpace the Shotter that is appointed, fetches Twelve Small Streamers placed a Pharſang diſtant from the Starting-Poſt, which is before the Palace-Gate, which reckoning four Miles to a Pharſang, is four times Twelve, or Forty eight Miles backwards and forwards, but at a modeſt computation it is full Three Miles that they run, and then it will amount to Seventy two Miles that they run in Twelve hours time; which I once ſaw performed at the Caun of Bunder's (who all over the Realm imitate the Emperor on this Day) on the Sand along the Sea-ſide, we being there at the Vernal Æquinox, when this is performed.

He

Foot-racing.

He sets out with his Fellows, who by Turns wait his return, and are obliged to attend him, both to make way, and to fan him in his passage, and to be ready with Towels to rub the Sweat off his Body: Two or three hours before Noon the Prime Nobility gather to receive the King's Commands; some to be Spectators, others to act afore the Mageless; where at the appearance of the Shotter, with his Streamer in his Hand, the loud Musick proclaims his coming: When he has fetched the last, the King has notice, and all with him ascending their Steeds, wait on the Emperor, who meeting him, the Shotter runs chearfully afore his Horse, and holds his Horse till he alights, and prostrate before him, delivers the Streamer, for which, after he is cleansed, and the Mageless is seated, he is brought before the Emperor of the Suffees, clothed with nothing more than his running Breeches, and then a Rich Vest is thrown over him, and receives a Gratuity besides from the Suffee, whose Example all there present following, he is plentifully rewarded, and made Chief Shotter for the ensuing Year: After the Shotter's Race is over, the Suffee calls all his Nobles to a Sumptuous Feast, which concludes with demonstrations of Excessive Joy.

At the beginning of April they have a proper Feast of their own, where the Emperor is to give the People of Suffahaun a Camel to be slain, which they lead about the Streets with a confused Noise, being dressed very fine with Flowers and Garlands for the Altar; and being brought to the Priest, he cuts the Throat, and burns the Entrails, distributing to each Principal Ward of the City the several Quarters to be eaten publickly after they are roasted, the Head only being presented to an Old Sybil, the only Relict of the Tribe to which it appertains by right, which she preserves till next Year, and then produces it at the Feast, for which she has a setled Pension; and the Blood of the fresh slain is scrambled for to besmear their Lintels and Side-posts, signing them with the Sign of the Cross: What relation it has to the Passover ordained to the Jews, I could never learn from them; but they say it is to keep their Houses free from Hobgoblins and Evil Spirits: It is called Æde Corboon.

About December they observe a Feast for the happy Conjunction of Mahomet and Alli, known by Æde Chudeer.

In January is the Commemoration of the Snares of the Ottoman intended against the Osmeran Family, Æde Bobba Shujawhundeen, which are ridiculous enough.

They celebrate the New Moons with the rest of the Moors; and to speak fairly, they outdo others in Civility of Manners:

Their Valour, whence it proceeds.

Nor (to give them less than their due) are they behind-hand in exerting their Valour where requisite, whether out of the opinion of Fatal Necessity, or an Innate Disposition, I know not, nor will I judge; but that of Lucan prevails with them.

——A prima descendit origine Mundi

Si quidquam mutasse velis.——

Letter V.

Since the World's Frame at firſt began,
All things in ſetled Order ran;
What you'd change, ſhould have been changed then.

Their Urbanity.

Friendly and Courteous Salutation is no where ſo much promoted as among the Perſians, as if they had learned Cato's Preſcript; wherefore I think it not impertinent to give you ſome Forms of their Addreſs, and a Specimen of their good Behaviour; not that I would hereby pretend I underſtood the Language (for I confeſs, beyond the Diſcourſe of Traffick, and for ordinary Occaſions, I do not,) but rather to vindicate the Place, famous for ſo many Ages paſt, from the Barbarity of the reſt of the Eaſtern Nations; and to ſhew that it has tranſmitted ſome of its Civility (though by another Conveyance than the direct Anceſtry) through the repeated Alterations of Fortune, to the preſent Poſſeſſors, who were originally of a moroſe Extract; yet have they put off their Native Ferity, to comply with the over-ruling Influence of the Climate.

For the very Plebeans in other Parts, ſurly and unconverſable, are here Affable and Kind, not Rude and Unmannerly; where-ever you meet them, before you ſalute them, they accoſt you with Salam Aleekum, God's Peace be with you; and if you do the like to them, they reſalute you, and bowing with their Hands acroſs their Breaſt, return Aleekum Salam, God ſave you; approaching nigher, they Embrace with the Appellation of mi Sahab, my Friend, or more properly, my Lord; Cuddah ne gardin, God be propitious to you; in paſſant, they cry with ſome vehemence, Chehauldore; how fare you? to which they reply, Choukoſſee, at your Service; at Departure, Salamut baſheet, Peace be your Companion; at Meeting, Noſajun Baſhut, I am glad to ſee you; at Meals, Aupheat Baſhut, much Good may it do you; if any fail the appointment after Invitation, or come late, being called, they ſay Ja Shamau collee booth piſhee eauroon, Your Seat is empty among ſo many good Friends; and what I wonder at more, many Words in uſe among the High Dutch, are in Common Diſcourſe with them, as Fader ſignifies Father; Moder, Mother; Broder, Brother; bad, beeter, and innumerable of the like ſort; which not only confirms their being Scythians, but corroborates the Learned Antiquary, Mr. Sheringham's Opinion of Woden, and his Aſas or Aſiaticks, (Aſa being a Common Name among the Parſys in India and Gaurs here) and of our being derived from them, as appears in his Anglorum Gentis Origine.

The Courtiers think the Turkiſh Language more commanding, and therefore addict themſelves to that Speech, which is neither ſo Polite or Verboſe, but more Gutteral; the preſent Dialect of the Perſians is much more ſmooth and neat, yet not agreeable with the old Character, as may appear by our Polyglot Bible, which they underſtand no more than they do Welch.

But to perfect their Urbanity; when they Encounter, they pluck not off their Caps, but with a pleaſing Modeſty bow their Heads; within Doors they bare their Feet by pulling off their Shoes, which which they leave at the Entrance upon the Bucchanno's; not that they ſalute thereby, but out of Cleanlineſs to preſerve their Carpets, from which when they deſcend, their Servants ſtand ready to help them to their Shoes, and while they are ſeated, glory to be incircled with Servitors; nor do they preſume afore their Betters to uſe any other Seat than their Heels, till they have Licenſe to ſit at eaſe. Chap XIV.

They are formal in the matter of going Firſt, and ſhall protract the Ceremony into a tedious Contention, and generally are preſſed hard to Precedency, and will ſtrain a Courteſy to Strangers.

The Cuſtom of carrying Aves one to another, is not Obſolete. The Cuſtom of carrying Aves.

Prima Salutantes atque altera continet hora.

No more than among Martial's Paraſites, the very Slaves Reverencing the Threſhold of their Lord's Doors; ſo extravagant are they of their Courteſies, with an hundred ſuch good Morrows; but if any weighty thing be to be preſented, it is with an eye to Profit.

However, not to exempt them from all good Inclinations, could we excommunicate Self-Praiſe, Philautia, from their Pious Acts, we might diſcern ſome noble Deeds for which they merit to be extolled, as the Building of Temples, Publick Hoſpitals for Travellers, (not for Sick or Wounded) which are the Caravan Seraws, Colleges, Bridges, Fountains, plaining Mountains, and raiſing Vallies, for to facilitate the Way for long and troubleſome Journies. Their Virtues.

The Colleges that are not of Royal Foundations, are Adjuncts to the Prophets Tombs, or Built in Commemoration of ſome Noble Warrior; to be Buried near which, is the deſire of theſe Martis Alumni, as much as for Catholicks to be Buried in St. Francis his Habit; which Sepulchres are, as it were, Triumphant Arches, after the Figures of their Moſques, in the middle whereof is depoſited the Corps in a Stone Tomb, like a Cheſt, or Coffin, with Four Golden or Silver Apples, at each Corner One, commonly covered with a Purple wrought Pall, with curious Artifice; over head hang Streamers and Banners, and it is Railed with Iron Rails, in which are Lamps always Burning; nor do any enter with their Shoes on, the Floor being Matted, or ſpread with Carpets; and if a Mullah attends, he goes to Prayers for the Quiet of the deceaſed Soul. They never Bury in the Church, and ſeldom in the City; they permit Repreſentations of Lions or Tigers, on Grave-Stones, as has been ſaid, to expreſs a Man taken away in the prime of his Age; have Inſcriptions and Places for Incenſe; they always lay the Body North and South, in oppoſition to us Chriſtians, who Bury our Dead Eaſt and Weſt; agreeing in moſt things with the other Mahometans.

To this Magnificence and Civility of Temper, we may add a Third Virtue, their Fidelity to their Princes.

For which Excellencies they ſeem to be beholden to the pureneſs of their Air; for it is Hot and Dry for the moſt part, whereby their Hearts are more firm and ſolid, which makes them more conſtant and reſolute, they being of a more refined Head than the other Eaſterns, their Brain being more ſpirituous and clear.

Letter V.

Vices.

To which Three Graces, notwithſtanding, there are a Trine Aſpect of Vices; to Magnificence, Oppreſſion and Covetouſneſs; to Munificence, Intemperance and Luſt; to Fidelity, Jealouſy and Revenge.

How far beholden to Conſtitution of Body and Air.

The Philoſophers agree not with Galen, Ἅμα ἡ τέτις πάσχει τὸ σῶμα; that the Body ſuffers from the Affections of the Mind; they ſaying, That they depend not on the Texture of the Body, but are Conjoined with it; yet Experience teaches, That as often as the Mind is Troubled, the Spirits are variouſly Agitated, which move the Blood and put it on a Fret, whereby the Heart is Convulſed, and many times the whole Frame of the Body is put out of Order.

Their Diet.

And therefore is it neceſſary, that to the excellency of the Air, and diſpoſition of the Body, a requiſite Diet, as well for Meat as Drink, ſhould correſpond with both; and indeed Nature ſeems to have provided them with both, for thoſe they deſire are theſe:

Cabob.

Cabob is Roſtmeat on Skewers, cut in little round pieces no bigger than a Sixpence, and Ginger and Garlick put between each. Thus ſparingly do they feed on Fleſh alone, ordered after this manner; and if at any time they intend a Meal thereon, they have it well Boiled, Baked, Fried, or Stewed, or made into Pullow; which is a general Meſs, as frequent with them as a good ſubſtantial piece of Beef is with us, and reckoned their ſtanding Diſh; which is made either of Fleſh, Fiſh, or Fowl, as the Indian Moors do; but the beſt is made of the fatteſt Meat, for which the pondrous Tails of Suet (which their Sheep bear) is moſt coveted, in regard it ſaves Butter.

Pullow.

To make Pullow, the Meat is firſt Boiled to Rags, and the Broth or Liquor being ſtrained, it is left to drain, while they Boil the Rice in the ſame; which being tender, and the aqueous parts evaporating, the Juice and Gravy incorporates with the Rice, which is Boiled almoſt dry; then they put in the Meat again with Spice, and at laſt as much Butter as is neceſſary, ſo that it becomes not too Greeſy or Offenſive, either to the Sight or Taſte; and it is then Boiled enough when it is fit to be made into Gobbets, not ſlabby, but each Corn of Rice is ſwelled and filled, not burſt into Pulp; and then with Mango or other Achar, they will devour whole Handfuls (for Spoons are not in uſe, unleſs to drink Sherbet with, they mixing their Pottage with dry Rice, and cramming themſelves with their Fingers) and never Surfeit; always taking this for a Rule, never to Drink till they are ſatisfied, it cauſing them otherwiſe to ſwell too ſoon; and then they will Eat as much at a Meal, as an Horſe or Mule can of Barly.

Dumpoke.

Baked Meat they call Dumpoke, which is dreſſed with ſweet Herbs and Butter, with whoſe Gravy they ſwallow Rice dry Boiled.

Stews.

Their Stews are alſo made of Cooling Fruits, as Cucumbers, Gourds, &c. which they mingle Rice with.

But the bulk of their Diet conſiſts of the Fruits of the Teeming Earth, ſowre Milk, with ſoft Cheeſe, Grapes and Wheaten Bread.

They have a kind of Cooling Muſilage of Seeds, like Pſyllium; in the Maritime parts they uſe Dates inſtead of Bread, or Bread made Pancake Faſhion of Rice.

They

They have a Dish they call Cookoo Challow, which is dry Rice and a Fritter of Eggs, Herbs, and Fishes, Cookoo Challow.

They seldom Eat fresh Butter, and as seldom Beefs Flesh; the Poor near the Sea live only on Fish and Dates; the Rich live plentifully every where.

No good Confections.

No Country is more taken with Sweetmeats, not even the Lusitanians; wherefore Sugar is a good Commodity from India, for Persia produces none of its own; they are not such Confectioners, notwithstanding, as might be expected from so constant a desire and practice; the chief reason I can impute it to is Custom, which in every thing they are very tenacious of.

They mightily covet cool things to the Palat, wherefore they mix Snow, or dissolve Ice in their Water, Wine, or Sherbets.

Out of Taylets of Willows they make a compound Cool-Water, very sweet smelling and refreshing.

Sherbets are made of almost all Tart pleasing Fruits as the Juice of Pomegranets, Lemmons, Citrons, Oranges, Prunella's, which are to be bought in the Markets. Thus by Diet, as well as Air, they procure not only a firmness of Constitution, but Properness and Tallness of Body, for none excel them either for Beauty or Stature.

But before we part with this Subject, since they are not so starch'd and precisely bent as the more rigorous Mahometans, we may be acquainted with their constant course of Eating, and lie down with them at Meals, and receive a good Welcome.

Their Breakfast is begun with Melons, Cucumbers, Gourds, Grapes, or other Fruits, as Peaches, Apricots, Cherries, or the like, with soft Cheese or Butter-Milk; which is about Ten in the Morning, from which time they abstain from all manner of Food (I mean when they observe their set Meals till near Sun-set) when they feed heartily on Flesh, or any other hot Meats, and enlarge sometimes till Midnight.

They observe the same usage for going to Stool as the other Easterns, washing away the Filth with the Left hand, for no other cause than that they feed themselves with the Right.

They sit down to make Water, but whether that way empties the Bladder better I leave to conjecture; though their continual sitting within doors with their Legs up to their Bellies helps digestion, is a thing beyond dispute.

The Persians Spit as much as other People.

That the Persians never Spit, I cannot allow to be true, since they Smoak Tobacco in their most solemn Assemblies, and for that purpose we have already shewed they are provided with Spitting-Pots, or Pigdans; but since Xenophon relateth it in the First Pædia Cyri, as a reproach for any to Spit in Company, and brings it as an argument of Gluttony, or Laziness, Nunquam sputant in conventu Persæ, quia maximum ignominiæ argumentum, quasi indicaret eos aut plus cibi, quam par esset sumere, aut nullis corporis exercitationibus uti; I must add, that I find them to indulge both; nor are they ashamed to Carouse or Eat lustily, but on the contrary Gormandize to excess; there is therefore nothing but the Thinness of the Air, expressing their superfluous Humours can bespeak this Virtue; nor indeed do I find them differ much in that point from other Nations.

To

Letter V.

Their Happineſs of Body.

To conclude then; to the Endowments of Mind, they have an Happineſs of Body, through the extraordinary Fineneſs of Air, which by a ſuitableneſs of Food nouriſhes a well-mix'd Temper both of Soul and Body; for as they have the ſtart in the firſt, ſo they ſurpaſs all their Neighbours in the latter, being not only Ingenuous and Free, but Fair, Tall, and Comely, with a Stock of Health not eaſily to be impaired, unleſs violent Debauchery root up the Stability they enjoy by Nature.

Commutative Juſtice.

Thus having run through their Diſtributive Juſtice, their Religion, and Morality, their ſeveral Rites, Uſages, and Ceremonies; it remains then, as we have declared their Wealth and Merchandize, ſo we ſhould ſhut up all with their Commutative or Trading Juſtice, which keeps an Arithmetical Proportion; as buying, ſelling, letting, and hiring. The Valuation of every thing is made either by Number, Weight, or Meaſure: Number is the ſame, and common to all People, Tongues, and Nations; but Weight and Meaſure are not ſo, there being a great Variety of theſe, and every Country has a Statutable Account of Weight and Meaſure after their own form.

All things in Perſia are put into Balance, but Silk woven and Cloath; wherefore they weigh all Liquids, as well as Wood, Straw, and Metals; and meaſure by the Cobit, or Cubit, what comes from the Loom, even their moſt fine Carpets.

Which brings us to examine their Weights, Meaſures, and Coins, or Current Money.

SIR,

MY laſt I had thought to have preſented you with my own hands, but being ſtill detained, I muſt perſiſt to give you farther Trouble. Chap. I.

Forty Courſe Northward of Surat lies Broach; it therefore being eſteemed in relation to the Engliſh as a Branch of this Factory, upon any one of our Merchants being ill, they can eaſily and ſuddenly ſend a Meſſenger for Aſſiſtance; which gave me opportunity of ſeeing that City, ſoon after I had returned with the Preſident to Surat.

The Author ſent for to Broach.

The Way thither is twofold, either by Sea or Land; the firſt, from Swally-hole, makes an eaſy Paſſage up that Creek, or rather Arm of the Sea, to Broach River's Mouth, into which the River empties its ſelf: The latter is meaſured over a ſpacious Plain, and is travelled either by Coach or on Horſeback, both which I had for my Conveyance, together with the Attendance of a good Guard of the Company's Peons, becauſe of frequent Robberies hereabouts. Going out by Broach-Gate, we fell into a notable beaten Way;

Hoc iter manifeſta rotæ veſtigia cernes.

Different Modes of travelling in India, from that of Perſia.

Contrary to whatever we found in any Place of Perſia, where are neither Carts, Coaches, or Wains: There we ſeldom meet any to turn us out of our Way; here the Roads are peſter'd with Caphalaes of Oxen, Camels, and Bufolaes, with heavy Waggons drawn by Teams of Oxen, yok'd Eight, ſometimes a Dozen or Sixteen times double, bringing and carrying Goods of all ſorts: There with Guides, here with Guards, for fear of Thieves deſcending from the Mountains, or lying in Ambuſcado among the Letter VI. Thickets: There they journey at all Seaſons, ſecure from Weather or Aſſaults; here they muſt obſerve the ſet times, and move with a good Force, both to defend them from their own Armies, and the Inſults of Outlaws: Here are no Caravans or Inns to ſhut them in a-nights, for then is their time of travelling; and when they reſt, if they have no Tents, they muſt ſhelter themſelves under ſhady Trees, or ſometimes great Tombs in the Highways, unleſs they happen on a Chowkre, i. e. a Shed, where the Cuſtomer keeps a Watch to take Cuſtom: Yet good Rivers are more often found here than there; and where they are deficient, they want not great Tanks or Ponds of Rain-Water moſtly uncover'd and open to the Heavens, or elſe deep Wells many Fathom under Ground, with ſtately Stone Stairs, Cool Apartments, and Grottoes, whence Oxen (as has been ſaid) draw Water, with huge Leathern Buckets or Pots around a Wheel, to water their Gardens: But one thing you are more ſure of here than there, and that is, Proviſions of all ſorts, in almoſt every Village, which ſtand thick hereabouts.

Their Chariots for travelling. The Coaches (unleſs thoſe called the Preſident's) and Carts are much alike, the laſt being only ſtronger built with main Timber for ſtrength. But it being no unpleaſant ſpectacle to ſee one of theſe Chariots equipped, I cannot forbear giving it you; though I am ſenſible it cannot be ſo well expreſs'd in writing, as the Sight is now comically repreſented unto me: Two large Milk-white Oxen are putting in to draw it, with circling Horns as black as a Coal, each Point tipped with Braſs, from whence come Braſs Chains acroſs to the Headſtall, which is all of Scarlet, and a Scarlet Collar to each, of Braſs Bells, about their Necks, their flapping Ears ſnipped with Art, and from their Noſtrils Bridles covered with Scarlet: The Chariot it ſelf is not ſwinging like ours, but faſten'd to the main Axle by neat Arches, which ſupport a Fourſquare Seat, which is inlaid with Ivory, or enriched as they pleaſe; at every Corner are turn'd Pillars, which make (by twiſted Silk or Cotton Cords) the Sides, and ſupport the Roof, covered with Engliſh Scarlet Cloth, and lin'd with Silk, with Party-colour'd Borders; in theſe they ſpread Carpets, and lay Bolſters to ride croſs-legg'd, ſometimes three or four in one: It is born on two Wheels only, ſuch little ones as our Fore-wheels are, and pinn'd on with a Wooden Arch, which ſerves to mount them: The Charioteer rides afore, a-ſtraddle on the Beam that makes the Yoke for the Oxen, which is covered with Scarlet, and finely carved underneath; he carries a Goad inſtead of a Whip: In Winter (when they rarely ſtir) they have a Mumjuma, or Wax-Cloth to throw over it. Thoſe for Journeying are ſomething ſtronger than thoſe for the Merchants to ride about the City, or to take the Air on; which with their nimble Oxen they will, when they meet in the Fields, run Races on, and contend for the Garland as much as for an Olympick Prize; which is a Diverſion, To ſee a Cow gallop, as we ſay in ſcorn; but theſe not only pluck up their Heels apace, but are taught to amble, they often riding on them.

Four-wheel'd Coaches, and to ſit with the Legs hanging down, here are none, unleſs ſome few the Europe Merchants have, covered with Scarlet, and ill hung, being much like thoſe ſold at London to pleaſe little Children with, only larger, and lin'd with Velvet; they having no Horſes managed for the Coach, or any skill'd to drive them, ſo that theſe alſo are drawn by Oxen.

Bereaw. Setting out about Sun riſe, we paſſed by pleaſant Incloſures ſpread far from the City, and flouriſhing Fields of Corn, and Plantations of Tobacco; we came Three Courſe, and then ferried over the River to Bereaw, a Village on the Bank of the other ſide; and at Perſaw, two Courſe more, we broke our Faſt; when it growing hot, we went but a Courſe and a half over another ſmall River, before we baited under a Grove of Palms, or Toddy-Trees.

Uncliſeer. When the Crows came hither to rooſt (which they did in great Flocks) we departed, and at Midnight arrived at Uncliſeer, the moſt Northern Extent of the Province of Guzerat (after the old account) where Cuſtom is exacted, a Bar of Thorns being ſtuck into an high Gate, oppoſing ſuch as are to pay at each end of the Town. Here we ſlept at our Broker's Houſe, and at Sun-riſe proceeded over delicate Medows to Broach-River, where round about it is all Campaign; betwixt where, we met more than Five hundred Oxen laden with Salt for the Inland Countries; and betwixt Nine and Ten paſſed Broach River in a Boat; which is a broad, ſwift, and deep River, but choaked up with drifts of Sand, by reaſon of Rains forced into the very Channel, ſo that good Pilots are required, to ſteer clear of them; by whoſe directions good luſty Veſſels are brought up to the City-Walls, where they are laden with Salt and Corn, to be carried to thoſe Parts that are not ſo well furniſhed; here being excellent Wheat and good Cottons, of the Growth of this Country.

Broach-City. It is likewiſe the Thoroughfare to Lhor, Dhely, Agra, and Amidavad, which is the chief City now of this Province, as well as of Guzerat; though Broach was the Metropolis when Cambaia was an Empire, which was before the Portugals were ſtrong in theſe Parts, who made way for the Mogul to make an entire Conqueſt thereof: But as to what concerns its peculiar Hiſtory, it was diſmantled, and the Walls thrown down, for refuſing Paſſage to Shaw Juan's Army, the Father to the preſent Auren Zeeb; which, as appears by the Ruins, were very ſtrong of old, being doubly wall'd and trench'd, into which Nine Gates ſtill lead the way; wherein was an Heathen Temple, now converted into a Moſque, looking over a rich Plain towards another, a Mile from the City, the Burying-place of their Emperors, where is entomb'd Mahmoody, the laſt of their Sultans; whoſe Progenitors being Arab Moors, were not ſprung from the Heathen Rajahs on the Fall of Ramras, but laying hold on thoſe Diviſions, came in by Conqueſt, and were the occaſion alſo of the Mogul-Tartars being called in to aſſiſt the oppreſſed, who made not only Reſiſtance againſt Niſhamſhaw, one of the three Treaſonable Conſpirators againſt Ramras, but a long while defended themſelves againſt the Mogul, till unfortunately broke at the Siege of Diu, Sultan Badur being defeated both by Sea and Land; he left a tottering Kingdom to Mahmoody, his Succeſſor, who was afterwards vanquiſhed by the Mogul, near the place where he now lies buried.

Letter VI.

What Profit to the Mogul.

Nor does this place now yield small Advantage to the Great Mogul, Customs being paid here, and here being a good Trade; though at present a stop be put thereto by Raja Jessinsins being lately dead, who set the present Emperor on his Throne, together with Emir Senda, and the Emperor's demanding the Treasury and Territories of the Widow; and her sending this Answer thereupon (the same almost in effect the Spartans were wont, among whom it was a saying, Our Kingdoms extend as far as we can cast our Darts); so she returned, Money I have none, but Swords good store: Which has brought all the Infidels into a Confederacy with her.

Rana Jessensin defies the Emperor.

And the Governor of this Province, but a late Convert, and a kin to her, begins to make Parties for the Advancement of one of the Sultans he has espoused, to Dethrone Auren Zeeb, as he did his Father Shaw Gehaun, by the Assistance of his Father Emir Gemla: Whereupon the Mogul is engaged over Head and Ears in Wars, calling the Caun of Brampore to his help.

The Confederates make disturbance.

Which gives occasion to Seva Gi, and a Neighbouring Raja, the one to move towards Surat, the other to set upon Brampore; which had put such a Consternation on the Merchants, that at my return they were all fled with their Wealth, Wives and Families, not thinking themselves safe within the Walls of Surat; which are now compleat and able to beat off a strong Enemy, would they stand to it: But having formerly felt the hostile Cruelties of Seva Gi, besides the present Governor being a better Politician than Warrier, has hitherto only Mulcted the Banians to cast a Crust before this Wolf, and he still expecting the usual Tribute, descends now in hopes of the same Booty, Burning and Spoiling the Country about till they send him a Peace Offering; of which they having informed the Emperor now the Walls are built, that he Taxes them as much as before, and that his Musters are not half filled for the defence of the place, Morad Beck the present Auren Zeeb's Armour-Bearer in all his Wars, is coming with force both to displace him, and to succour the place:

Morad Beck made Governor of Surat.

Who took Possession in the beginning of May, and the late Governor parted well content with what he had gotten during his holding that Employment.

This Exchange brought some Blows upon Seva Gi's pilfering Troops, being encountred before the latter end of the Month by the new Governor's Soldiers, not without loss, some Cartloads of the slain being brought hither to be Interred.

Great Inundations by the Rains.

The Rains are this year set in with that violence, that the very Tops of the Trees hereabouts are all under Water; and since the great Mogul by reason of these interruptions cannot go on to overcome the Pagans, he wreaks his Malice by assessing them with heavy Polls, that are not of his Faith, under his Dominions; and those not able to pay, are compelled to turn Musselmen, so that they begin to desert in abundance.

The

Chap. I.

The Rains being over, great preparations are making to go againſt the obſtinate Pagans, the Emperor marching out of Juan Abaud 10000 ſtrong, beſides Ordnance, Elephants, and other Warlike proviſions.

The Mogul prepares to chaſtiſe the Pagans.

At the beginning of September the Juddah Fleet, freighted with Religion and Pelf, made this Port, bringing Fifty Leques worth of Rupees in Caſh, which is ſo many Hundred Thouſand: It could not be improved till the Governor had releaſed the Shroffs or Bankers, whom he had clapp'd up on pretence of Conſpiring with the late Governor to Cheat the King, by Coining more Money than had been accounted for; but interceſſion being made by our Preſident, they were ſet at liberty, for that our Company's Bullion was alſo coming from England, the Ships being arriv'd at Bombaim; and theſe are they that try and ſet the value on all Metals.

The return of the Juddah Fleet.

Our Engliſh Ships had no ſooner left the Port at Bombaim, but that Seva Gi had poſted ſeveral Hundred Men on Henry Kenry, a Rock in the Mouth of the Bay, on pretence of hindring the Syddy's Men going in and out; whereupon a ſmall Bark, with an old Captain, being ſent to demand their Buſineſs there, and he landing with his Men imprudently, were all cut off by the Barbarians.

Seva Seizes Henry Kenry.

After this Action, Seven Prowes and one ſmall Ship (the Pink) were ordered to lie at an Anchor and block up the Avenues before the Rock; which ſeen by the Barbarians on Shore, the firſt fair Wind they Manned out Forty Gallies, at whoſe approach our Prowes fled all but one, which was eaſily vanquiſhed; and the Pink feigned a fear likewiſe, whereat they being encouraged, Boarded her with a terrible noiſe, who cleared her Decks with her ſmall ſhot, and blew ſome Hundreds up from her Prow and Poop, and then plying her great Guns, on thoſe who were Board and Board, ſunk Four of their Gallies, and put the reſt to flight; which made them more afraid than at the firſt onſet, being glad to bear away with the reſt; however they in this skirmiſh ſuccoured the Beſieged with Five Boats laden with Proviſions.

The Barbarians relieve it.

A Month after they appeared again with all their ſtrength, and the Engliſh being recruited with another ſmall Ship, engaged them, and gave them the rout, following them into their own Harbours, where they got haſtily aſhoar and drew up their Veſſels under ſome ſmall Guns planted to ſecure them.

Their Fleet drove into Tull.

Whilſt our Fleet were buſy in this Enterpriſe, and left ſome Boats to ſhut up the River Tull, the Syddy came before Henry Kenry, where he lies with his Fleet; who, ſhould he get Footing there, would be as bad a Thorn as Seva Gi.

In the mean while that the Mogul Marched againſt the Raſhpoots, his eldeſt Son came to Brampore with a mighty Army; for all that Seva ſpoils the Country at his pleaſure, knowing well the Sultan will not break his Forces to hazard a Battel till he ſees how his Father ſpeeds, that he may be the better able to promote his own Intereſt for the Crown: On which ſcore it is unhappy both for the Husbandman and

Two Portents. This Year hath been filled with Two Portentous Calamities, the one Inland, a Shower of Blood for Twelve Hours; the other on the Sea-Coaſt, Mechlapatan being overturned by an Inundation, wherein Sixteen thouſand Souls periſhed. And this being the ſum of this Anniverſary, I remain, LETTER VII.

CHAP. I.

Continues the general Occurrences with Remarks.

SIR,

Chap. I. The Syddy and Seva left to contend for Henry Kenry.

AMidst these Wars and rumours of Wars, we quietly lay down our Arms, and leave Seva Gi and the Syddy alone to contend for our stony piece of Ground on Henry Kenry; how much to our Honour or Reproach, may be gathered from the Language we have daily cast in our Teeth; 'Why Vaunts 'your Nation? What Victories have you atchieved? What has your 'Sword done? Who ever felt your Power? What do you possess? 'We see the Dutch outdo you; the Portugals have behaved them- 'selves like Men; every one runs you down; you can scarce keep 'Bombaim, which you got (as we know) not by your Valour, 'but Compact; And will you pretend to be Men of War, or Cope 'with our Princes? It's fitter for you to live on Merchandise and sub- 'mit to us.

The English Reproach'd.

But for all these Revilings Seva Gi makes them tremble here, forgetting that twice their Safety has been owing to us, from falling into the hands of that terrible Plunderer.

The Mogul inflicts a double Poll.

For all which the Mogul continues a double Poll on the Heathens this Year, and breaks down their Idolatrous Images where-ever he finds them; whereupon the Heathens begin to Worship in Dens and Caves, and solitary Places, being forbidden their open Celebrations.

Seva Gi Dies.

In the heat of all these Combustions, the Firebrand Seva Gi is called to pay the common Debt to Nature, he Expiring June 1. 1680. though after some time his Arms are carried on by his Son Sambu Gi Raja, whose first care was to solemnize his Father's Exequies with hellish and cruel Rites, after the barbarous Custom of these Princes, to Burn all that were grateful to them when living, to attend them in the other state of Life; doubtless deriving it (which is more than alluding to) from the ancient Getæ, their first Parents, and not theirs alone, but of all the World since the Deluge; who, as Nich. Damascen reports, Tauri gens Scythica una cum Regibus mortuis gratissimos quosque amicorum humare solent; and Solinus, as well as Pomponius Mela, says the same of their Wives, Funera Festa sunt, & veluti sacra cantu lusuque celebrantur, ne fœminis quidem segnis est animus, super mortuorum virorum corpora interfici simulque sepeliri votum eximium habent; & quia plures simul singulis nuptæ sunt cujus id sit decus apud judicaturos magno certamine affectant: Which here, though it be said

Letter VII.

ſaid to be ſlain and buried with their Husbands, is the ſame as to be burned, ſince the Cuſtom of burying alſo with their Husbands has been before declared, and ſtill is maintained to be put in execution among theſe Heathen Princes. Seva Gi, while living, as he delighted in Fire and Sword, ſo he was ſent out of the World with a numerous Company conſumed in his Flames: Yet not ſuch a Train as Raja Jeſſinſin had when he died, which was far greater, being a more Potent, though leſs Barbarous Raja; but his Widow now holding out againſt the Mogul, though his Prime Lady, being then big with Child, was excuſed, and ſhe ſtill is preſerved to bring up the Young Prince, whom they own for their Raja.

Heats about Succeſſion.

Thus theſe two great Rajas being diſpoſed of by Fate, the Gentiles ſeem to be under hatches (the Mogul for the preſent perſecuting them with the utmoſt ſeverity and hatred) and the rather, for that the great Miniſters of the deceaſed Seva Gi, were at variance about the Promotion of the Succeſſor: Anna Gi Pundit, Chief Miniſter of State, ſetting up the Younger Son, and Morad Pundit declaring for Sambu Gi, the Eldeſt; who after puniſhing his Oppoſers, was before the time fit for Expedition in the Low Countries, proclaimed Maw Raja, or the lawful Heir to his Father's Conqueſts.

The Moguls EldeſtSon ſent to the Poſt.

In this Interim the Mogul, jealous of his Eldeſt Son, had ſent him to the Joualar or Poſt; but the next being commanded from their Kingdoms where they were fixed, the one Sultan Aſſum in Bengala, the other Sultan Maſſum in Aurengabad, have refuſed to reſign, and ſtand upon defiance if they be farther moved; which Reſentments the Father muſt ſmother a while, having been twice out this Year againſt the Infidels with a numerous Army, which have been as often diſtreſſed by Famine, and forced to return without engaging; the Raſhpoots leading them into Straits, while they ſhift from Mountain to Mountain, and ſtudiouſly avoid coming to blows.

Withdraws his Army.

The Emperor being returned to Court, makes much of his youngeſt Son, whom all give out he intends to raiſe to the Throne after his Death, whoſe Name is Sultan Eckbar; but at preſent being wholly bent on the Ruin and Extirpation of the Gentiles, he forbears to nominate him as yet.

And to weaken the Conſpirators, has order'd the Governor of Amidavad to join him, who being originally a Gentile, inclines to favour the Ranna, ſeeking to deliver her from the Tricks of the Intriguing Generals, who while ſhe committed her Cauſe and her ſelf to their Inſtructions, had almoſt ruined her, pretending they would repreſent her State to the Emperor in favour of her; who meaning nothing leſs than to delude her (while ſhe bribed well), bid her not be ſolicitous, or take thought for her ſafety, till her chief City of Chetore was ſurprized; wherefore Mahmud Emir Caun, being of the Junćto, and privy to the Deſigns of the Court, diſcovers to the Emperor not only how the Generals Badur Caun and others had been treating with the Ranna, and that ſhe was bought and ſold by them, with the Money ſhe had ſent to the Mogul himſelf to purchaſe Peace, which they had defrauded him of; but that alſo Cabul Caun of his Privy Council, held Correſpondence with Sultan Maſſum in Duccan; and that a general general Defection was likely to enſue, if he purſued to afflict the Heathens to a deſperate Reſiſtance.

An Example on Treaſon.

This Truth, though he ſtomach'd, he could not but own, yet reſolved to diſſemble it; and having ſeized Letters ſigned from Cabul Caun to Sultan Maſſum, to begin a Rebellion while his Father was in Aſmire againſt the Ranna, (which were intercepted by the Advice or Cunning, I know not which, of Emir Caun), he found in what condition he was, and that it was time to withhold; but for a Reward of the Treaſon deſigned, he order'd Cabul Caun immediately to be thrown down a ſteep Rock, as a Terror to the Conſpirators.

The Moguls Secretary's Reaſons to diſſuade the Emperor from his perſecuting the Heathens.

And now being returned, he hardly forbears uttering his Mind, about his Intention to make all the Heathen Muſſelmen; and told his Chief Scrivan ſeriouſly one day, That he muſt loſe his Place, unleſs he would be of his Religion: To which the ſubtle Heathen replied, 'Sahab, (i. e.) Sir, why will you do more than the Creator ever 'meant? You ſee hardly two Faces bear exactly the ſame Features: 'Look farther into the World, and behold the variety of Creatures! 'God has made Elephants, Tygres, Horſes, Camels, Sheep, and Oxen, 'of different Figures, and Man of a more exalted Compoſure than 'the reſt; whereas had the All-wiſe Diſpoſer of Things thought it 'convenient, he might have reſted contented in one only Form; 'but every one of theſe in their ſeveral Species glorifies their Maker: 'And ſo it has pleaſed God to permit Variety of Religions, by which 'Men worſhip and call upon him; nor can they go on in any one 'againſt his Will, to which whatever is contrary cannot continue; 'and till he make Men to be of one mind, in vain does any go about 'to compel what he has ingrafted in their hearts. This rational Diſcourſe kept the Brachmin in his Office, but could not quite extinguiſh his conceived Prejudice againſt their Superſtitions.

Which he made appear, by giving Order to demoliſh all the Temples, and deface the Pagods his Army had poſſeſſed themſelves of in Aſmire, the Country of Raja Jeſſinſin; and chiefly Chetore felt in a few days the Overthrow of what many years could not entirely finiſh, moſt magnificent Marble Structures being levell'd to the ground, and laid proſtrate to his Rage and Fury: A Draught of which City is here inſerted, being tranſmitted by an Engliſh Gunner in that Service, an Eye-witneſs both of its Glory and Deſtruction. A Place by Site invincible, had not the Mogul's Commanders Treachery gained on the Faith of an eaſy Woman; who relying on their Mediation, neglected the Means of her own Security, there being neither Men nor Ammunition to oppoſe his Entry; whereupon they left all open, and retreated in diſorder from the approaching Foe, to Places better provided, and inacceſſible to any but thoſe who are acquainted with the Receſſes: Sullying hereby the brave Provocation that drew on her the Emperor's Arms; which ſhe might have prevented at firſt by a mean Compliance, or more nobly now by a ſtout Reſiſtance; rather than by a baſe Flight yield to the Will of a devouring Enemy, which not only keeps faſt hold by a ſufficient Force, but does deſpite to their Altars, and lays waſte their Country Gods. This ſhews either want of Conduct, or an abject Spirit in the Raſhpoots, or at leaſt an irreſolute Temper in the Ranna, who Letter VII. did unadviſedly dare, when ſhe was impotent, to maintain the Challenge; or, which is worſe, ſhe fooliſhly applied her ſelf to the Servants, when the Maſter was proud of her Fetters (ſhe being a Rare Creature): So that the ground of this Quarrel, however hypocritically gilded with an Holy War, is Love; as is demonſtrable from the kind Offers left with the Plenipotentiaries towards an Accommodation; unleſs the ſordid and unfaithful humour of his Cauns ſhould prompt him to clap up a Peace, that he might be more at leiſure to ward himſelf, and free his Affairs from ſuch corrupt Miniſters. What the Cauſe is, (though unknown yet,) that his Forces were withdrawn from following his good Fortune in the midſt of his Career againſt the Infidels, appears a Riddle; if it be not to carry on the Cuſtom of this Empire, never to go through with any Conqueſt.

A Drought feared.

This Year a Drought was feared, which the Brachmins interpret a Judgment for the Emperor's perſecuting the Gentues; which whether it gain credit among all People, I cannot tell. But that Night and Day a mixed Multitude of all ſorts run through the Streets of this City after the Brachmins carrying a Board with Earth upon their Bare-heads, and crying Bowo hege panne bes; on which old and young make the Chorus to the Precentor, ſprinkling Water and ſowing Rice thereon, ſaying the ſame after the Brachmin, which in Engliſh is, God give us Water; and on this impending Affliction they are very charitable, and give great Largeſſes to the Poor.

A Comet.

I ſhould have concluded theſe Remarks here, had not a wonderful Sign in the Heavens appeared to call for our Animadverſion; which beginning the Twentieth of November, diſappeared not till the latter end of January, which enters on the next Year, that within the ſpace of our Europe Fleet may bring you the Riſe and Fall of the moſt prodigious Comet I ever was witneſs to; or it may be, the oldeſt Man alive: What makes me the more willing is, that I may have your Account over Land, whether it was viſible in England, and what Obſervations our prying World have made thereon.

Eleven degrees from the Earth South-Eaſt, a terrible flaming Torch was ſeen in the Skies in Capricorn, near the Head of Sagittarius, darting it's Rays upwards to the Stars; at firſt not above two Ells in a ſmall Stream, but day by day as it inclined to the Horizon, the Flame grew longer but ſlenderer; it roſe firſt at Three in the Morning, and ſo later and later till the Sun out-ſhone it; and as if it had circled the Globe, at laſt it aroſe and ſet at Nights, after the Sun was down, when we beheld it W. N. W. which was on the Evening of the Twelfth of December, and about Seven at Night; at firſt no bigger than a man's hand from its coming forth of the Horizon, which thence aroſe with a mighty Fulgor or ſhining Light for more than Nine Degrees as big as a Rainbow, towards the higheſt part of the Hemiſphere; or to ſpeak more truly, like a Pillar of Fire, whoſe Baſis, whether for its tardy riſe, or the Clouds gathered about the Atmoſphere, I could not diſcern till the Seventeenth, it ſetting about Nine of the Clock; but after that time it aſcended above the Horizon, and paſſing the middle of the Hea-

January the 16*th*. 168$\frac{8}{9}$. it had attained its Zenith, when about the Noon of Night it vaniſhed, and ſo by degrees at laſt it came to nothing.

While this was reigning, ſeveral in the Hole and Buzzar at Swally, atteſted they ſaw two Moons; others of our Engliſh-men out a Hunting after Sun-ſet, ſaw an unuſual Star of the bigneſs of the Sun, which muſt certainly be this fiery Ejaculation, ſtriking obliquely upwards, being equally thick until its higheſt part had ſtretched its ſelf into a Colum. It pointed towards the North, and whether it be Meteor, Comet, or Exhalation, it is certainly ominous; and ſince they diſclaim its Influence here, I wiſh it may not affect our Europe Kingdoms; for ſays Claudian,

In cælo nunquam ſpectatum impune Cometam.

In Heaven no Comet ever ſhin'd,
Which was not grievous to Mankind.

Joſiah, Captain Owen.

Set Sail for England.

At the ſame time Mr. Rolt the late Preſident took his Paſſage in the Joſiah: The Second of India, Mr. Chamberlane, in the Succeſs as I took mine in the Maſſenberg: Mr. John Child being removed from the Government of Bombaim to the Preſidency; which was the 19*th.* of January in the Year 168½.

Till the Twelfth of February we directed a Southern Courſe, when about Two in the Morning the Moon ſuffered an Eclipſe, and in half an hours time was almoſt totally hid, which endured till Four in the Morning: In Four or Five days after, about the Seventh Degree of North Latitude, we met the Sun coming towards the North, and paſſed him to the Southward, when he often raiſed Vapours from the Sea to thicken the Air, and obſcure his Face, which were as often poured down upon us, we having here uncertain Weather, ſometime wet, ſometime calm, though moſt an end, according to Varenius's Poſition, the Winds hold Eaſterly from the Firſt of January till the End of July, as far as Aſcenſion, and then turn Weſterly: We met hereabouts with a Tree beſtuck with Sea-Shells, which made us lie by a-nights for fear of the Chango's.

A Young Man loſt Over-Board.

And now dreadful Thunders cauſe the Sea to tremble, and Lightnings fly through the Heavens in frightful Flaſhes; by reaſon of theſe alterations we went but ſlowly, being but Ten Degrees Southward of the Sun on the Firſt of March, when a South-Eaſt Wind favoured us; with which ſailing fortunately enough, we were damped by a Miſchance on one of our Young men, who going up the Shrowds to looſe the Top-Gallons, by the unadviſed letting go of ſome Bowling, was hoiſted into the Main, and periſhed, periſhed, the Ship having freſh Way, and the Boats lying on Board; they threw over ſeveral Planks and Veſſels, but he made no ſign of contending with the Waves, or Motion to ſave himſelf: Wherefore it was judged he had his bane againſt the Ships ſide, or ſome Gun in his Fall before ever he came at the Water; and in this hurry we were preſently carried out of ſight, ſo that he was left for deſperate, and given over as loſt. Chap. I.

We Sail on the Backſide of S. Lawrence.

Before the Tenth of this Month, St. Brandon an Iſland on the Eaſt, and Diego Rais to the South, were paſſed by; as alſo St. Maurice kept lately by the Dutch, for no other end but to prevent others ſetling there; as Maſcarenas, not far from it, by the French, for the ſame reaſon. The day after the Sun was poſſeſſed of the Æquinox, we made the Tropick of Capricorn, from whence the Platoniſts feign the Souls deſcend upon the Earth; but more truly it declared that we drew near the Coaſts of Africa; for having hitherto meaſured a Southern Way almoſt directly, we now incline towards the Weſt, having not more Meridional diſtance from Joanna than Nine Degrees; but now we begin to bend our Courſe Weſtward, which we ſhould do in a ſtrait Line, were it not for St. Lawrence, the outſide whereof our Navigators always paſs by homeward bound, it lying Twelve Degrees South, to Six and Twenty and an half, which we ſuppoſe to be Three hundred Leagues Weſt of us, though here being a ſtrong Current to the Weſt, it makes our Judgment very unſteady; however to make the Cape, it is neceſſary to elevate our Longitude more than our Latitude, which we did till we had made Fourteen Degrees Weſt from our ſuppoſed Meridian of Joanna, whereby we reckon our ſelves clear of the Iſland Madagaſcar, or as the Portugals call it, St. Lawrence; when the Eaſt Wind failed us, and the Weſt blew hard upon us, contrary to the aſſertion of the forementioned Author; the Winds, as we formerly Noted, beyond the Tropicks being unaccountable, for that they obſerve no Rule; and hereupon it happened we were ſo long beating about the Cape, and had been much longer, had we not made for the Shore; which we did about the middle of April, when it is high Winter in theſe parts, wherein we tried all Weathers, the worſt of which were Calms, according to our Engliſh ſaying,

Worſe is a Winters Calm,
By far than Summers Storm.

We Weather the Cape of Good Hope.

Which we ſuffered till we got under the Shore, whence we were aſſiſted with fine Briezes, we falling firſt in with Cape d' Aguthas the low Land being bare and naked, the high Land, a Ridge of Mountains only gaping in one place, from which the Portugals gave it the name d' Agutha, or of the Needles: Fifteen Miles Northward of it lies the Promontory called Cape Falſo, which we weathered in the Morning, and afore Night did the like to the Cape of Good Hope, which in reſpect of the Heavenly Poſition is 34 Degrees and a half South Latitude, Longitude 47, in a ſtrait Line from Joanna 1800 Leagues. The Marks of this Promontory are agreeable to Sellier's Atlas: It is inhabited by a Barbarous People called called Hottentots: As Nature deſigned their Looks deformed, ſo they are untractable in Manners, and harſh in their Voice; theſe wind the Guts of Beaſts Excrements all about their Necks, both for Food and Ornament, conſenting to what Job Ludolphus, Author of the Ethiopick Lexicon, relates of the Abaſſinians, under which Government (if any they have) this Region muſt be comprehended, who ſays, they prefer the Meat digeſted in the Maws of Beaſts, before the beſt Sallads, ſuppoſing thoſe Animals better at diſtinguiſhing the good Plants from bad, than Men. Here in Soldania Bay the Dutch have a ſtrong Fort, for the ſame purpoſe we keep St. Helena, to refreſh and water our Fleet on their return home; but theſe touch here both going and coming; whereas ours put in at Joanna in their Voyage to India: In theſe Seas are the Sea-Calves, and Sun-Fiſhes; the Nights are very cold, and the Days are ſhortned near Two hours.

Land on St. Helena.

The end of April we loſt ſight of the high Tops of theſe Hills, and in thirty and two Degrees South, met with the ſtated South-eaſt Winds, when we left the Cape-Birds behind us, daily depreſſing our Southern Latitude, directing our Courſe full North-weſt, being too often retarded by frequent Calms, and ſometimes contrary Winds, (a thing not known between the Tropicks) till at laſt we made ſeventeen Degrees South; when we altered our North Courſe to the Weſt only, for fear of out-ſailing St. Helena; which is a thing full of hazard and difficulty, ſince the Seaſon proved Cloudy, though not Rainy, yet often ſo Dewy, that it wetted to the skin; the ſupputation of the Longitude on which we depend, being no leſs obſcure than fallible: Beſides, the Iſland its ſelf is but a ſmall Rock in the middle of the Main Ocean, which cannot be ſeen far, unleſs in a clear Day; but by the Grace of God, the 19th of May it lay fair before our eyes like a little Cloud by eight in the Morning; from whence are ſmall White Birds floating ſometimes on the Sea, at other times taking their flight to and from the Iſland, which they ſtir not far from: It is very high Land, and may be diſcerned twenty Leagues off at Sea; wherefore we gained not the Harbour till Ten at Night, where we ſilently let go our Anchor, neither we nor the Fort ſaluting one another till next Morning.

When going aſhore, the Guns roared, and the Governor Mr. John Blackmore received us on the Beech, which was ſtony and troubleſome aſcending; we paſſed through Rows of Soldiers, called to their Arms on this occaſion, into a Valley ſurrounded with high Mountains, except towards the Sea, where ſtood the Fort and Platform for the great Cannon, which reach farther than there is any Anchor-hold, ſo that no Ships can come in, or endure their Force, without their Leave.

Notwithſtanding which, it is yet freſh in memory, that the Dutch landing on the backſide of the Iſland, gained the Tops of the Hills, and invading the Iſland, drove the Engliſh from their Fort, for all they had two Ships in the Road at the ſame time, which did no farther ſervice than carry off the Inhabitants, leaving the Dutch in Poſſeſſion, till Captain Munday by the King's Command was ſent out to retake it that very Year we came out for India (which was the very very Fleet that ſet out with us, and bore us company to St. Iago); which the ſaid Captain retook alſo by Surprize; and added to his good fortune the ſeizing of Four of their Eaſt-India Ships richly laden; which, after he had left ſufficient Strength upon the Iſland, he brought as Trophies of his Victory into England.

The ſtory of the Iſland and Iſlanders.

The Iſland thus reduced, was governed immediately by the Royal Commiſſion, till at the Importunity of the Company, his Majeſty reinſtated the former Colony planted by the Honourable Company, and reſtored them to their firſt Poſſeſſions, adviſing them to be more cautious for the future. It is ſeated in Sixteen Degrees South in the vaſt Atlantick Ocean, diſtant from Cape Bon Eſperanzo Six hundred Leagues; placed opportunely for the Engliſh in their return to Europe from the Eaſt Indies, both for Wood, Water, and freſh Proviſions; which are comfortable Refreſhments theſe long Voyages; thoſe Ships that miſs it being in an ill ſtate, ready to be eaten up with the Scurvy, and moſt an end make for Barbados in their diſtreſs; which makes the Company to be at ſome expence for this benefit, ſupplying them with Engliſh Beeves, Cows, Hogs, Turkies, Ducks, Geeſe, and all manner of Pullen, with Tools for Husbandry, and a conſtant Guard of Soldiers. The Portugals firſt found it out, as is ſaid, by an unhappy Accident; one of their great Carracks being caſt away here, or not able to proceed farther, they drew on ſhore her weather-beaten ſides, and all the Armory and Tacklin, Building with the Timber a Chappel in this Valley, from thence called Chappel-Valley, and ſtocked it with Goats, Aſſes, Hogs, and other Cattel, leſt any other time they ſhould be under the ſame misfortune; but as their Credit fell in theſe parts, they grew more careleſs of Futurity, and long ſince deſerted it, that it became free to the next comer to make his own; and now by the Induſtry of the Engliſh it is much improved, yielding, partly by the goodneſs of the Soil, and the care of the Husbandmen, all things neceſſary for human ſubſiſtence to its own Inhabitants, and to ſpare, good Cheap to ſuch as need.

Yet to whet their Diligence and Labour, here is a miſchievous Virmin ſorely vexatious to them, which are Wild Rats, which infeſt all their Grounds, whereby they can have no Bread-Corn, they deſtroying it all; inſtead whereof they have a large Root, very biting when it is Raw, ſo that they will not touch it, but being Boiled, it is both nouriſhing and pleaſing; and of this they make an intoxicating Liquor, called Mobby; the Indian Name of this Root is Taum.

It is very troubleſome clambering theſe Hills; yet to acquaint my ſelf with the Country delights, I aſſayed it; at top it is ſomething evener, where were many Rural Seats of the Planters, Cows grazing, Goats feeding; their Cottages placed near Rivulets, whoſe next Downfal hurried them into the Sea; from theſe advanced places we diſcovered Two Sail making in hither, which is noticed by the Firing of ſo many Guns and hoiſting of the Flag, who proved to be the Joſiah, being an heavy Sailer, we loſt Company about the Cape, where keeping off at Sea, the Golden Fleece came up with it; upon the Hills the Air makes a great difference from the Vallies, it being purer

Let. VIII. purer above, and ſomething harſh by reaſon of the conſtant Eaſterly Blaſts, which is not ſo kind to the Fruits on the Mountains as in the Dales.

The courſe taken to People the Iſland is this; they indent either as Servants or Soldiers for Five Years with the Company, at the expiration of which Term, they are free either to go or ſtay; if they ſtay, they have liberty to chuſe Twenty Acres of Ground unoccupied, as their own proper Portion, on which they live and maintain themſelves and Families; of which Iſlanders there may be Four hundred Engliſh, reckoning Men, Women, and Children.

Of Aſcenſion, and Catching of Tortoiſes.

A Week being ſpent, the Succeſs and we (coming in firſt) ſet Sail for Aſcenſion, another meer Wart in the Sea, being a Barren Rock deſtitute of all manner of Natures Stores, it being an horrid place, without any green thing, Plant, or Water, a meer Cinder-cake burnt by the Sun, and incruſted by the filth and ſlime of the Sea-Fowl, who both Neſt and Rooſt here: Here is no covering or ſhade from the Heavens, more than the Holes or Tops of Rocks, no Turf nor Graſs, but all is ſcorched by the Sun's heat; and here I approve, rather than conſent to the general Opinion, of its having been once a Vulcano, or Iſland of Fire; but ſince no ſuch matters appear for ſuch a ſubject, I ſhall deem it Fabulous, ſince it would be altogether ſtrange, had it e'er been ſo, that no Footſteps of Bitumen, Sulphur, or Combuſtible ſubſtance ſhould remain, which moſt an end flow from an unexhauſted Fountain, bred as faſt as the Fire can feed upon it; otherwiſe thoſe ancient Fiery Mountains in Italy, and elſewhere, had many Ages ſince been conſumed; and we might have admired them as Poets Fictions handed by Tradition, but not have had ocular Demonſtration to convince the incredulous: Beſides, the continual confluence of Flocks of Water-Fowl declare they never feared Smoak or Fire here; they having paved or pargetted the whole Rock with their Filth, that it ſeems incorporated with it.

Fooliſh Birds. Theſe Birds are ſo heedleſs or fool-hardy, which I cannot tell, that they will fly ſo near as to be ſtruck down with a Cane.

When I went to Land (if ſuch it may be called) bating the Sands around the Rocks, we could tread no other Ground but on Stones cemented by the Sun's heat; all the advantage or pleaſure propoſed was to ſtretch our Legs, and ſee the Seamen turn the Turtles, or Tortoiſes, which they did anights when they came aſhoar to lay their Eggs, which theſe Sands hatch, they lying in ambuſh betwixt them and the Sea, and with Hand-ſpikes caſting them on their Back; at which they muſt be yare; for they perceiving themſelves purſued, make towards the Sea, and caſt a cloud of Sand upon the Aſſailants with their Feet or Claws; they are very big, and ſometimes as much as Three or Four Men can do to lay them ſprawling, where as faſt as one is conquered they leave it to maſter more; for they cannot reſcue themſelves out of that poſture; ſo that what they ſerve thus in the Night they are ſure to find them in the Day where they left them, and ſo bring them aboard Ship for their freſh Food, the Fleſh of ſome being as much as our little Indian Bullocks.

Of

Of theſe (we gathering for the Four Ships that were behind) to loſe no time, they turned One hundred and twenty, whereof Eight and twenty came to our ſhare; which (without any other ſubſiſtence than three or four times a day throwing Sea-water on them,) we kept alive above a Month, on which the Ship's Crew fed daily with great eagerneſs while they laſted, dreſſing their Fleſh ſeveral ways; and beſides that, theſe are reckoned the beſt in the World, and to which they fall the more greedily, becauſe they are eſteemed ſpecifical for the Scurvy, Pox, or Gout, they fancying their whole Maſs of Blood to be altered by them, and their Fleſh to become new and ſound again; and this Opinion takes the rather, becauſe through all the Emunctuaries, and eſpecially near the Genitals, they ſee the colour of their Sweat altered to a naſty yellow Green: And indeed to ſpeak the truth, whether Fancy or real virtue in this ſort of Dyet be the cauſe, they continue healthy and lively while they feed thereon, and will mightily lament the want of it when ſpent, becauſe they muſt return again to their ſalt Meats. Chap. I.

In catching of theſe we tarried five Days, in which I had time enough to recollect my Thoughts about theſe Creatures; but having already been particular thereon, I ſhall forbear to add more: Only the Cuſtom of this place is to leave Letters of what Ships have been here, in a great Hollow of a Rock, ſealed in a Glaſs Bottle; and where the Portugals have erected a Wooden Croſs to affix Leaden or Braſs Plates Engraven: An Example whereof may be this:

Anno Domini 167⅞. Martij 14.

In Nave Aureum Vellus dictâ, Joanne North Navarchâ, huc appulerunt Edmundus Hallæy & Jacobus Clerk, ab Inſulâ Sanctæ Helenæ reduces; ubi Obſervationibus cœleſtibus Annum integrum impenderunt.

Aſcenſion lies under the Seventh Degree of South Latitude, 250 Leagues from St. Helens, which we made in a Weeks time from thence with a North-Weſt Courſe; here is little Meridional diſtance Eaſt from England, not much more than two Degrees; but now we muſt go more Weſtward to meet with the Winds, and this is juſt as the Sun is upon his Summers Solſtice in our Countries, but here quite contrary.

In the middle of June we came under the Arch of the Æquator, where lies St. Thomas Iſland, and elevating the Arctick Pole ſix Degrees, we met with Storms and ſome Calms; this then was the reaſon we moved but ſlowly, till the Sun began to be vertical, it bringing thoſe Winds with it, which were for our turn; to wit, the North-Eaſt Winds; which was the Twelfth of July before we had it the laſt time, perpendicular in Twenty Degrees North, and an half, the next day, made us parallel with Surat; inſomuch that all this while we ſeem to have done nothing, being no farther, bating our Weſtern way, than where we ſet out; which would be evident, could we have paſſage through the Red-Sea into the Mediterranean; Iſle of St. Thomas.

Let. VIII.

diterranean; but Nature having oppoſed a ſmall Neck of Land of Sixty Miles, has thought fitter to let the unquiet Ramblers go about theſe vaſt Coaſts, than to cut them out a nigher Way to ſo long undiſcovered Regions.

A bold Act of an Algier Slave.

The Sixteenth we paſſed the Northern Tropick into the Temperate Zone, where take an account of a deſperate Action. In the Joſiah an Engliſh Seaman held in Captivity by the Algereens, had ſo perfected himſelf in that durance in the Art of Thieving, that nothing could eſcape him; in which being often Apprehended, and as often Bound with Chains and Ropes, they were all too little to hold him faſt; for he could unty the hardeſt Knot with his Toes as well as Fingers, and was expert at filing or eating off his Irons: But continuing in theſe Pranks nothing could be ſafe from him, even the Ships-ſtores were imbezelled by him, which touched the Lives of all in the Ship, he having ſeveral times broken open the Lazeretto, from which no Correction could deter him; at laſt aſſured by a general Conſult, ſome puniſhment was deviſing for him, he unmanacled himſelf, and came before them as they were thinking what to do with him, and bidding them Adieu, leapt into the Sea, at once putting an end to their Conſult, and his Fear and Fury.

In Thirty Degrees North, we met with Alga or Sea Weed, ſuppoſed to be brought hither by the rapid Courſe of the Gulf of Florida, which notwithſtanding is a great way to the Weſt off us.

The Azores.

The North-Eaſt Winds have been very faint hitherto, whereby we were hindred from meeting with the South Weſt Winds ſooner; but between 30 and 40 North they enter to purpoſe; that in the beginning of Auguſt we left the Weſtern Iſlands, which are called Flandricæ, or the Azores, which lie between the Iſles of Corvo and Flores; where many place the firſt Meridian, becauſe here is found in theſe Seas and the parts adjacent, that the Magnetique Needle has no declination from the Meridian Line, and that it points out North and South exactly; which beginning of Longitude, Mercator obſerves in his Tables.

England.

And now we ſet our Face directly for England, knowing by our Account we are paſt theſe Spots of Earth, which thoſe returning from India think themſelves obliged to be ſecure of, before they do; we having depreſſed our Longitude Weſt, from Aſcenſion Eighteen Degrees take a North-Eaſt Courſe, and being paſt forty Degrees North, we take our Fortune both for Wind and Weather, ſometimes fair, ſometimes foul, ſometimes for us, ſometimes againſt us, till having our Latitude almoſt compleat, we again raiſed our Longitude within a Degree and half of that of Aſcenſion, which brought us the Fourteenth of Auguſt in ſight of our Albion.

Land at Folkſton near Dover.

When entring the Channel, the Pilots were more concerned than all the Voyage afore: As we came up we daily met with Ships outward bound, and others overtook us coming in, and the Companies Waiters Boarding us, every one was as cautious to own his Eſtate, as a Miſer to confeſs on a Poll Act. With theſe Caterpillars lars we ſailed till we came on the Suſſex Coaſt, when longing to be on Shore, we hailed a Fiſher-Boat on Board, who put me on Shore at Folkſtone in Kent, Five Miles South of Dover, on the Twentieth of Auguſt, 1682. Chap. I.

From whence ſending you this, give me leave to come leiſurely to London, that in that time I may feel my Legs, and try how agreeable the natural Sweets of England by degrees may be to one who in this long Abſence has ſo little felt the Hardſhips of Travel, eſpecially coming home; which though a tedious Voyage of Seven Months, we paſſed away merrily with good Wine, and no bad Muſick; but the Life of all, good Company and an honeſt Commander; who fed us with freſh Proviſions of Turkies, Geeſe, Ducks, Hens, ſucking Pigs, Sheep, Goats, &c. And to Crown all, the Day we made England, kill'd us a fatted Calf; ſo that you may ſpare that Welcome when you receive,

Tours,
